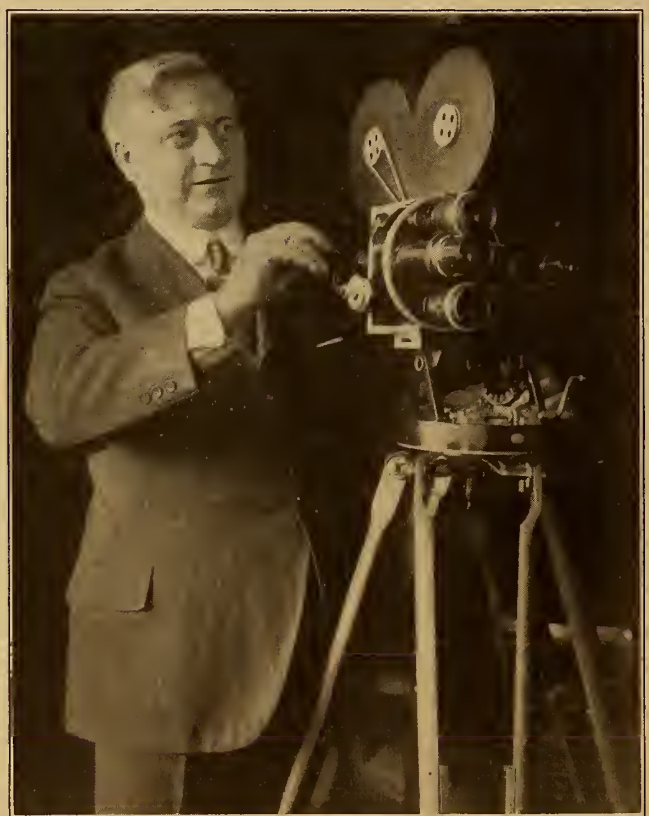
President John R. Freuler, of the Mutual Film Corporation, has just completed a tour of the western studios contributing to the releasing schedules of the Mutual—and he's off again on a trip to New York to look over the eastern studios.

"My first trip west in a couple of years," remarked Mr. Freuler. "When I landed in Los Angeles there was a flock of automobiles to meet me and to remind me of the thoughtfulness of my friends. I elected Charles Chaplin's locomobile and we hurried off to the Alexandria, and thence to the Lone Star studio.



Mutual has a new cameraman. His name is John R. Freuler and he uses a fifteen hundred dollar camera. He has another job, too. He's president of the Mutual Film Corporation.

"I had a good deal of fun and some instruction in watching Mr. Chaplin at work in 'The Cure,' and then I took a look at the Signal studios and spent a couple of sessions with John P. McGowan, the Signal's director general and director of 'The Railroad Raiders.' Then I took a trip up to the American studios at Santa Barbara and visited with the various companies. I saw Gail Kane at work on 'Whose Wife,' directed by Mr. Sturgeon; William Russell, hard at work with Director Edward Sloman on 'High Play,' and a mighty busy general staff.

"Then I turned back to Los Angeles and took up negotiations with various directors and stars—from all of which the exhibitors and the motion picture industry will hear in due time.

"Featurette" Receives His Attention

"I gave a good deal of attention to the 'featurette' or short release proposition while in the West," observed Mr. Freuler. "And while a vast deal of attention is necessarily focused on the big feature productions I have come to the conclusion that the exhibitor wants and must have a good high feature quality in his short length pictures. As I have so often stated before—the day of 'just pictures' has gone, and whatever there is of quality in the big pictures must also be expressed in the little pictures if the public and the picture show patrons are to be satisfied.

"I have been considerably impressed by the aspect of the motion picture industry viewed from Los Angeles, as compared with what it was a few years back on the occasion of my earlier visits. There is a new atmosphere of solidity and a very general striving for an efficiency which was unknown in the earlier stages of the industry."

Mr. Freuler is now in New York, where he is inspecting the new Empire All Star Corporation studios, where the Charles Frohman stage successes are being filmed for the screen, and the Edna Goodrich and Powell studios.

Films to Cure Stutterers

The reason that "Billy" Sunday can talk at a mile a minute rate and yet carry an audience along with him is because his mind is a sort of motion picture machine and he has the power of projecting his pictures into the minds of his listeners through mere words.

This is the theory of Dr. W. B. Swift, of Boston, as given before the Anthropological and Psychological Association at one of the many meetings of scientists now in New York City to attend the convention of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Dr. Swift has been studying the psychology of stuttering and has discovered that stutterers are affected in their speech when they have no pictures in their minds, whereas normal talkers have mental pictures passing before them during conversation. From his discoveries Dr. Swift has applied a new method of treatment for stutterers, which consists of building up the visualization process during speech.

"Red Saunders Plays Cupid," a five-reel Central America comedy-drama, is under production at Universal City.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM FOR EXHIBITORS

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

"Intolerance" Closes Long Chicago Run

AFTER a four months' run at the beautiful Colonial Theater, D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance" has closed its first season in Chicago.

The trade in general is now thoroughly familiar with this epoch-making spectacle, but there are some matters of interest to the exhibitor in regard to its presentation. There are at present eight companies in various parts of the country presenting "Intolerance" in exactly the same way.

When one enters the theater lobby, his eyes are greeted with a number of properties and tapestries which were used in the filming of the picture. The patron's eye is also pleased by a group of attractive girls garbed in costumes of various historical periods represented in the play. These costumes were also used in making the picture. The ears of the patrons are lulled into a pleasant mood by the soft strains of harp and violin sifting down from the balcony above.

Inside the auditorium nine young lady ushers handle the crowds. There is an orchestra of thirty, a chorus of twenty behind the screen and the full stage crew totals fifteen. In Chicago Frances Roeder and Frank Lyon were the soloists who sang "My Wild Irish Rose" and the ancient songs during the progress of the photoplay.

With the atmosphere of the theater and the play so well supplemented by these aids to appreciation and enjoyment, there is little wonder that Chicago's Colonial, which seats 11,000, played to nearly $15,000 a week from November 29 to March 24. And it is expected that "Intolerance" will return each year for a season in the windy city.

Walter Lindler handled the publicity for the spectacle in Chicago, H. E. Peterson was his assistant. Mr. Lindler is now in New York with company number one.

One interesting and romantic episode in connection with the running of "Intolerance" in Chicago is that Miss Helen Ketchum, one of the lobby girls, is said to have attracted D. W. Griffith's attention by her snap and beauty and to have received a contract from him to work in his productions in California. She is shown in the accompanying picture with one of the sculptured lions used in the making of the play.

The Best Ad He Ever Found

Chilton, Wisconsin, is a town of 1,800 population. It can boast of a billboard which is the only one of its kind. William Merz, proprietor of the Princess Theater at Chilton, gets the credit for its distinctiveness. Without buying space from the billboard concern, he still makes it advertise his theater and declares the best and cheapest ad he ever used. He offers the benefit of his idea to other exhibitors who might wish to try the same experiment. Here is what he says:

"There was an old billboard that was not being used which I got for the asking. This board was in a good place where most of the people have to pass by. I made a frame of galvanized iron large enough to tack a set of photos in. The frame is about six inches wide all around and so made that it keeps the rain from getting onto the photos. I painted it white. Then I had an electric light put on with a nice arm-bracket so the light will reflect onto the board. I keep it lit all night. I pay one dollar a month for the light. As you can see, this ad only has to bring ten people into the theater in a whole month—and I am quite sure it does this in one night. Every city or town has just such places that can be had, so I suggest, Brother Exhibitor, try it. It worked out well for me."

Hires Band to Draw Crowds

Bands have heretofore been considered chiefly useful for punctuating political campaign oratory, advertising baseball teams, and getting out the crowds for a circus parade. It has remained for the enterprising managers of a theater in a South Dakota town of 3,500 population to demonstrate the advertising possibilities of a band in bringing crowds to a theater.

Mulvey Brothers, proprietors of the Imperial Theater, Madison, South Dakota, station the musicians in their orchestra out in front of the theater each evening in pleasant weather to furnish band music. If the musicians skip a night, the crowds who pay admission are smaller. Read the letter of Mulvey Brothers to MOTOGRAPHY.

The subject of advertising your business is certainly one that is the great problem for every showman to figure out. We have had this matter under advisement among ourselves for some time and finally worked out the proposition of a band and orchestra.

We play each night before the show in front of the theater and use a five-piece orchestra. We have the distinction of being the only exclusive picture house so far as we know of anywhere that has a band and orchestra to boost its business. It works like a church bell in calling the patrons from all over the neighborhood. We note that when we fail to get the band out our crowds are smaller than when we render a few band selections to notify the patrons that the doors are open.

The size of our town is only 3,500 population. We are showing the Triangle program twice a week, the Paramount program twice a week, Mutual program once a week and the Bluebird photoplays one a week.

This theater has an orchestra and band which plays in front of the theater each evening. It works like a church bell in calling out the patrons.

Telling Public About Prices

The program and announcement handed to the first-week patrons of the new Colonial Theater, at Montgomery, Alabama, achieves that quality which directors seek to create in pictures—an "atmosphere" in keeping with the story to be told. The Strand Amusement Company's statements of its policies and aims was the story to be told, and the straight-forward, forceful manner in which it was presented put an unmistakable stamp of the "quality atmosphere" upon it.

The opening bill was the Selznick production of Robert W. Chambers' "The Common Law." One page was devoted to the cast of characters and personnel. Then followed a few well written paragraphs calling attention to the notable achievements of producers from the time of the movies' inception to 1917, following which the management expresses a desire to offer the public the best in pictures, in a theater where every effort has been made to show the films under the most favorable conditions.

The announcement also says, "From the nature of the attractions which it will offer, the Colonial can have no steadily fixed price of admission. There are steps between the ordinary film upon the one hand and 'The Birth of a Nation' on the other, and so, between the ten-cent admission and the two-dollar price. For some pictures it will be necessary to charge twenty-five cents with balcony seats cheaper; for others, as films cost more to produce and become worth more to the viewer, perhaps more. But always the price at the Colonial will be as low as is consistent with the merits of the attraction offered."

A tinted photogravure of Clara Kimball Young, who was seen in the leading role in "The Common Law," appeared in a frame on the front of the program, the picture being attached to the third page. The program was printed on heavy stock, gray in color, with red ruled borders.

Exhibitor Host to 4,000

Manager Kirtansky of the Columbia Theater, Rockaway, L. I., New York, acted as host to more than 4,000 people who attended a special showing of the first episode of "The Secret Kingdom," the new Vitagraph adventure serial in which Dorothy Kelly and Charles Richman are co-starred. Manager Kirtansky had his reasons for the big theater party.

"A daring stroke hurts nobody—if it comes out all right," he declares. "When I showed the second episode, I had 'em coming. 'The Secret Kingdom' brings them back all right. All I had to do was start them."

Netter Active in Ohio

Leon D. Netter, of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, has just closed with Col. William N. Selig for the rights for the state of Ohio for Selig's latest special picture, "The Garden of Allah," featuring Helen Ware and Thomas Santschi.

Mr. Netter will handle this production along with "Purity," Julius Steger's "The Libertine" with John Mason, the new de luxe edition of Annette Kellerman in "Neptune's Daughter" and Selig's "The Spoilers."

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

L. B. STONE, who has leased the Palm Theater at Salamanca, New York, will show Fox, Bluebird, and Triangle pictures. He expects to make some improvements in the theater.

The Strand Theater, at Toronto, Ontario, is showing Bluebird features regularly. The pictures are growing in popularity in Toronto.

All previous box-office records were surpassed at the Strand Theater, New York, March 10, with Mary Pickford in "A Poor Little Rich Girl" as the attraction.

J. H. Clarke, of the Isis Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, holds Saturday morning performances and has secured the co-operation of public school teachers in encouraging children to attend.

The Herald Square Holding Company of New York City has purchased the property at 132 and 134 West Fiftieth street and will build a small theater for concerts and motion pictures.

W. R. Stewart, manager of the Princess Theater, at London, Ontario, is the proprietor of the Patricia Theater also, which is a new 1,000-seat house that has been running for only a short time.

Sunday picture shows are a detriment to the morals of the people of St. Peter, Minnesota, and an effort is to be made to suppress them, according to a number of the clergymen of the city.

A million dollar theater will be built in Philadelphia by the Stanley Company at Nineteenth and Market streets. It is to have a seating capacity of 4,000 and will be the most ambitious project of the Mastbaum enterprises.

Marcus Loew is showing "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" in all his twenty-nine theaters in New York City during the week of March 19, in addition to his vaudeville and picture program.

The school board of Bridgeport, Pennsylvania, has denounced motion pictures, asserting that they are a cause of truancy. Exhibitors are appealing to parents in reply and reminding them that the pictures help keep boys out of mischief.

Edward Sachs, manager of the Morningside Theater, 2139 Eighth avenue, New York, while "The Royal Pauper" was being shown his theater, arranged with the author, Henry Albert Phillips, to appear in person to address the audience.

Manager Samuel Rothapfel, of the Rialto Theater, New York, assisted his orchestra leader, Hugo Riesenfeld, and Dr. A. G. Robyn, composer, in the arrangement of a selection called the "Friars' March," which the Rialto orchestra played at the opening of the Friars' Monastery on Forty-eighth street. Twenty-one encores were required while the guests sang the chorus. So many requests were received by the Rialto for repetition of the piece that it formed a part of the musical program of the week of March 4. The Rialto male quartette sang the words at each rendition of the piece.

An ordinance aimed to prevent exhibitions of lewd, indecent and immoral pictures or theatrical shows and providing a fine of from $10 to $100 for violation of the ordinance submitted to the board of councilmen of Nashville, Kentucky.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Milwaukee indorses the campaign to boost Milwaukee undertaken by the Milwaukee Forward League and has consented to exhibit in seventy-five theaters slogans telling about the city's industries.

People were turned away at the Midway Theater, of Montreal, Quebec, at a recent performance of "The Mysterious Mrs. M.," a Bluebird picture featuring Mary MacLaren. The management re-booked the production on account of the reception given it.

Loew's Theater Company of Toronto, Ontario, will add another house to its chain of Canadian theaters. The new theater will be located at Kingston. A Loew theater is to be built in Hamilton, Ontario, this spring. The Hamilton structure is to cost $300,000.

Petitions have been circulated in Ishpeming, Michigan, asking that the public be allowed to vote on the question of Sunday pictures. Hundreds of people signed the petitions, which must mean that they are tired of doing without pictures on the seventh day.

Benjamin H. Jackson, who has been in Boston recently in connection with the premiere showing of "A Daughter of the Gods" in that city, has returned to New York to direct the presentation of the new William Fox feature, "The Honor System," now running at the Lyric.

Sunday pictures have been forbidden in Saratoga Springs, New York. Justice Borst has just handed down a decision sustaining a demurrer in the action of Sam Newton, Jr., against officials of Saratoga Springs and Saratoga county. The effect of the decision is to close the picture houses on Sunday.

The proprietor of the Iowa Opera House at Emmetsburg, Kentucky, gave notice in that town's papers of a meeting for the organization of a better films club. The movement is being undertaken with the advice and co-operation of Manager N. C. Rice, of the Call. There is no other picture house at Emmetsburg.

By the simultaneous use of two projection machines, during the performances of the French film, "Mothers of France," featuring Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, the Rialto Theater in New York, superimposed certain portions of Lasky's "Joan the Woman" upon scenes in the Bernhardt picture, thus bringing Geraldine Farrar and Mme. Bernhardt together upon the screen. Joan appears as a vision to the mother in whose role is Mme. Bernhardt. In addition to the excerpts from the Farrar picture, Manager Rothapfel used bits of other films, showing Napoleon in one scene, and the French legions of today in another, thus completing a cycle of visions typifying the spirit of France at three important periods of her history.

Pending the final decision of the criminal court of appeals on the motion for a new trial which will be filed by John W. Baskin, attorney for exhibitors of Fort Worth, Texas, theaters will continue to operate on Sunday, although the criminal court of appeals has declared in six different cases that the theaters violate the laws of the state every time they are kept open on Sunday.

Manager J. H. Michael of the Academy Theater, Buffalo, New York, unloaded five thousand cases of food products at his theater a few weeks ago, consisting of soups, beans, catsups, chile sauce, jams, pickles and relishes, and the goods were distributed to patrons who bought tickets for the several episodes of "Perils of Our Girl Reporters." As an advertising stunt he pronounces it a success.

C. N. Orth, who is negotiating for the erection of the new Theater De Luxe, in Detroit, at Kercheval and Parkview avenues, has opened offices on the site of the proposed theater. He has found that residents of the neighborhood have a lively interest in the project, as indicated by their purchases of stock. The capital stock is $100,000 and is being sold at $10 a share. A seating capacity of 1,700 is planned for the De Luxe.

L. M. Rubens, exhibitor at Joliet, Illinois, has replied through the newspapers to women who have declared that the dramas of the screen are not on as high a plane as should be the case. Regular patrons inform Mr. Rubens that such pictures as the presentation of Dickens' "Oliver Twist" and "Great Expectations," and the fairy tale, "Snow White," deserve only praise and do much to render unfriendly criticism harmless.

New York's Rialto Theater is offering "Babette," a Vitagraph production with Peggy Hyland and Marc MacDermott, during the week of March 25. The third of the travel series of Rex Beach and Dr. Edward Salisbury, this time showing the party in the tropic wilds of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, includes a feature that is distinctly unique. It presents the only motion picture ever secured of a total solar eclipse. The topical digest and cartoon film complete the program.

There is only one motion picture theater in Seward, Nebraska. There are four wide-awake censors and hereafter there may be six. The city council appointed a board of censors last August to review and pass upon the films shown at the local theater. In a report just submitted, the need of two more censors is cited. Then it will be practicable for one member of the board to attend the theater each day. Presumably the other people in town will comprise the audiences.

Motography has received from R. E. Falkinburg, manager of the Majestic Theater, of Lexington, Nebraska, a sample of the letter he used in announcing that the Majestic would begin showing special children's pictures. His mailing list included every member of the city's clubs, lodges and societies, and also patrons not listed among the members. He keeps a general list also and finds that those whose names were on the first list are sometimes won over to another class of pictures and can be placed on the general list. He uses all kinds of advertising, but reports the best results from the mailing lists.

When "Intolerance" leaves the screen of the Colonial Theater in Chicago, "Joan the Woman" will take its place. Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, has been in New York arranging for the Chicago presentation of the Farrar picture. He has secured the original costumes worn by Miss Farrar in making the production. These suits of mail and armor will be worn by a girl who will be mounted on a charging steed and stationed in the lobby of the Colonial. The opening of "Joan the Woman" is set for March 28.

The Strand Theater of New York opens its doors for the morning performances of "Broadway Jones" at ten o'clock. The program of the week beginning March 25 includes also Jack Pickford in "The Dummy" and the "Animated Sculpture" pictures, originated by Helena Smith Dayton, which are being shown for the first time at the Strand. Max Linder in his latest, "Max Wants a Divorce," the Prizma pictures in natural colors, and a new chapter of Datmar's "Living Book of Nature," are added attractions.

Secret service men at the capital caught sight of a peculiar black object mounted on a tripod and resembling a camera, pointed squarely at President Wilson while he was delivering his inaugural address. It was running itself by some automatic attachment suspiciously like an infernal machine. The secret service men seized the apparatus and man who set up the machine. They found that their man was Jack Cohn, one of six Rialto Theater-Universal photographers from New York, getting some "shots" of the inaugural for the Rialto screen.

The rotunda of the city hall in San Francisco served as a theater recently, while Mayor Rolph and all the city's official family, with their wives and older children made up the audience. "Motherhood," the motion picture produced by the Baby Hygiene Committee of the Collegiate Alumnae was exhibited. The mayor, in granting permission for this novel presentation, also formally sanctioned Baby Welfare Week, which is to be held, commencing March 27, at the Exposition auditorium. The picture is being shown at the Theater St. Francis for one week, beginning March 18, under the auspices of the Baby Hygiene Committee.

The Parent-Teachers' Association of the Maryland Avenue school, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, has been asking questions of exhibitors. Whether managers personally inspect all films shown at their houses, what governs their judgment in selecting films, what they consider objectionable for children of certain ages, whether smoking, drinking and gambling by women can not be cut out of the films, whether an age limit would not be advisable for evening shows; if Saturday bills could be arranged for children exclusively, and if managers would be willing to have some parent in their district assist in choosing Friday and Saturday bills, are some of the questions submitted to managers. Exhibitors are co-operating with the women in the movement for clean pictures.

National Association Holds Meeting

IMPORTANT REPORTS—TWENTY-SEVEN PRODUCER MEMBERS

THE quarterly meeting of the board of directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was held, March 15, at the headquarters, Times building, New York, with President William A. Brady presiding. The following directors were present:

William A. Brady, World Film Corp.; Carl Laemmle, Universal Film Manufacuring Co., represented by George Kann; William L. Sherrill, Frohman Amusement Corp., Louis Blumenthal, Auditorium Theater, Jersey City, N. J.; Maurice A. Choynski, Newberry Theater, Chicago, Ill.; Frederick J. Herrington, Pittsburgh; Louis L. Levine, Regent Theater, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Frank J. Rembusch, Shelbyville, Ind.; Samuel H. Trigger, Tremont Theater, New York; A. P. Tugwell, Los Angeles; Walter J. Moore, H. C. Miner Litho. Co.; Walter W. Irwin, V. L. S. E., Inc.; Fred J. Beecroft, New York Dramatic Mirror, Paul Gulick, Universal Film Mfg Co.; F. C. Gunning Wid's; Arthur James, Metro Pictures Corp., Arthur S. Friend, representing Famous Players-Lasky Corp., and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary.

A large volume of routine business was transacted, much of which had accumulated since the last meeting of the board, in November. Reports were presented from the officers showing the activities of the various committees during the period intervening since the last meeting, including report of the executive committee, also the committees on transportation, fire prevention regulations and insurance, children's pictures and the "All Star review."

Members of National Association

The report of Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott showed that the membership of the Association comprised the following: Producers, 27; distributors, 10; supply and equipment, 15; publications, 4; individuals, 87. Various plans were discussed for increasing the membership and the following committee was appointed to co-operate with the officers in securing new applications: President Brady, ex-officio; William L. Sherill, Arthur James, Arthur S. Friend and J. E. Brulatour.

The following divisions in the supply and equipment class No. 3 were reported as organized: Manufacturers of carbons, manufacturers of slides and lithograph and poster manufacturers. The organization of other divisions, comprising manufacturers of musical instruments, projecting machines and screens was reported as under way.

A conference committee of five is to be appointed by President Brady for the purpose of co-operating with other national organizations representing great business interests. The establishing of a bureau for handling and investigating stolen films was approved, reference being made to the co-operation between the association and the Fox Film Corporation, resulting in the conviction and indictment of a leader of a band which had been successfully operating in New York and other localities.

Meet at Chicago Convention

The resignation of Peter E. Jeup as a director was received and accepted with regret, and Louis H. Frank of Chicago was elected to fill the vacancy. It was voted to hold the annual meeting in Chicago on July 18, 1917, at the time of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League exposition.

The All Star Film Committee reported the two first reels, "How the Great Stars Make Love" and "Great Fights of the Great Stars," had been assembled and that good progress is being made in securing the scenes for the other three reels, "With the Funny Stars," "Daredevil Stunts" and "Great Moments in Great Plays." Consideration was given to the best plan for marketing and distributing the All Star Review and it was decided to incorporate the committee in charge of this enterprise which would have exclusive right to exhibit and distribute the picture, the committee to hold the stock in trust for the benefit of the association. The opinion prevailed that the best financial results for the association would be secured through releasing the review on the state rights basis.

A communication was presented from R. H. Cochrane, vice president of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., suggesting a plan for assisting the national association by securing the financial co-operation of the various national advertisers. The suggestion met with immediate approval and President Brady was authorized to appoint a committee to work out the proposition and report back to the executive committee for instructions. The committee appointed consists of Mr. Cochrane, as chairman, Arthur James, Fred J. Beecroft, Harry Reichenbach and "Wid" Gunning, the chairman having power to increase the committee if he so desires. Charles C. Pettijohn, attorney for the Exhibitors' Protective Association of Indiana, was invited to address the board at the request of Frank J. Rembusch, a director and president of the Indiana organization. A similar courtesy was extended to Dr. Charles J. Hespee, president of the Exhibitors' League of New Jersey, at the request of Director Louis L. Blumenthal, who reported in regard to the legislature situation in New Jersey.

Important Matters in Committees

Among the important subjects referred to in the reports of the standing committees were the following:

Producers Committee: Establishment of bureau for gathering and disseminating information and the approval of the rules and regulations of the National Board of Review.

Transportation Committee: Reported the favorable action by the Post Office Department in permitting films to be shipped by parcel post. The importance of this step to the industry may be realized more fully in the event of a national railroad strike. Several distributing members reported that they were using the parcel post for film shipments with effectiveness and economy. Co-operation with express traffic managers has proven effective and better service is being rendered both the exchanges and exhibitors as shown by reports filed. The returns on C. O. D. shipments are delivered more promptly and various details are being worked out which will ultimately expedite the handling of film shipments. A new film shipping case has been designed to hold beside the films, paper, stills, electros and slides. The committee proposes to adopt this as a standard case which will be the means of cutting the exhibitor's express charges in two and tend to reduce the expenses of distributors and exchanges.

Fire Prevention Regulations and Insurance Committee: Reported the issuing of a bulletin which had been highly commended by state and municipal officials, also by insurance companies and many important organizations. The adoption of a standard film clause for New Jersey will be recommended to the insurance authorities in New York, Massachusetts, Florida, California and Illinois. The advantage of this clause is that it makes for uniformity and will afford better protection to film manufacturers and eliminate the possibility of any contention in adjusting fire losses.

RIALTO BOOKS VITAGRAPHS

"Babette" and "The More Excellent Way," New Vitagraph Productions Booked by S. L. Rothapfel for the Rialto Theater, New York

Samuel L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto Theater, New York, has chosen two more Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. program features for his noted house, under his contract with that company. Both of these productions are scheduled for early release in the Blue Ribbon program.

"Babette" was the first of the two to be shown at the Rialto. It played a week there beginning March 18. It will be followed by "The More Excellent Way."

These two forthcoming Greater Vitagraph features are released in just the reverse order in the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. program. The date scheduled for "The More Excellent Way" is March 26, with "Babette" listed for April 2.

Mr. Rothapfel changed this order so that he might have an immediate opportunity to present Peggy Hyland, who is starred with Marc MacDermott in "Babette," to the Rialto patrons. It marks her first appearance in that house, though she has twice played to big business at the Strand, the last time as co-star with E. H. Sothern in "The Chattel."

The film version of "Babette" follows closely the magnetic novel of the same name by F. Berkeley Smith. Miss Hyland plays the title role in this story of today. It is located in France, but it has nothing to do with the present war. It concerns itself with the career of a Breton prison official's daughter who marries and without ever knowing the miracle she has wrought, regenerates the most famous and cleverest thief and pickpocket in France.

"Here is a picture that has every element of splendid amusement," says Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph. " 'Babette' has thrills, pathos, humor, laughs, tears, and that indefinable, but always successful, quality when it is dramatically correct—regeneration. 'Babette' is certain to become a screen classic."

"The More Excellent Way," which will follow "Babette" at the Rialto, is a modern domestic and drawing-room drama in which dainty Anita Stewart and Charles Richman, the hero of "The Secret Kingdom," are co-starred.

As Crissey Deselden, Miss Stewart has a role wholly different from anything she has done in recent years. It is certain to be intensely interesting to the millions of motion picture followers of Miss Stewart, for as the ward and then the wife of a man whom she does not at first love, and then comes to love with an intense devotion at just the moment when he most needs her support, Miss Stewart is doing something "decidedly different."

It took considerable courage for this talented young lady to essay the role of Crissey, because for perhaps two reels the character is essentially what is called unsympathetic. But Miss Stewart viewed this as just the opportunity she wanted to utilize her screen powers.

It was because of her tremendous efforts in the production of "The More Excellent Way" that Miss Stewart suffered her recent nervous breakdown, from which she has now recovered sufficiently to warrant the statement that, within a week or ten days, she will resume her work at the Vitagraph studios.

Sunday Pictures as a Social Necessity

PEOPLE who have the ability and the desire to entertain themselves form a minor part of the total human race. Young people, particularly, whether married or single, find it very hard to invent their own means of passing the time enjoyably. To a great many even the few evening hours are boresome unless amusement offers, while the filling in of the long Sunday holiday becomes a task to be seriously planned and considered.

Philosophers may deplore this instinct for perpetual entertainment because, theoretically, the perfect human being should be sufficient unto himself. But the majority vote is against them because the majority are neither philosophers nor perfect. With all our talk of specialization we do not realize how highly specialized we really are. The average man can supply neither his own entertainment nor his own food and clothing, but must purchase them from other specialists while he specializes in the work that will provide him with money for the purchase. And we know that the man who killed his own food, fabricated his own clothes and invented his own amusements was not so civilized, nor so intelligent, as the man who buys them all.

"Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do"; not because people love mischief, but because they abhor idleness and must do something. Legitimate occupations for idle hours is a boon to mankind. The dealer in wholesome amusement may make his fortune from what the philosopher considers human frailty; but he returns more than he gets. The showman who banishes the horror of dead hours and substitutes a pleasant inspiration is a benefactor, and entitled to what reward he can gain.

For the welfare of the human race, for the routing of mischief and the propagation of moral and helpful influences, the Sunday picture show is more important than the evening show.

When sixteen long hours of Sabbath idleness impose themselves upon an active temperament, something inevitably will be done. And the form the activity takes will be dictated first of all by choice. The respectable thing that is pleasantest to do will be the most popular.

Those of a fanatic turn of mind may say that we should do thus and so; but there is no law and no compulsion in the matter. Within the law we do with our leisure as we please. They cannot make us do what we do not please; they can only deprive us of some of the pleasant things and throw us upon our own resourcefulness and inventiveness for substitutes.

And because, as we said before, the modern race is not prepared to furnish its own entertainment, and does not know how, the self-invented substitutes for organized entertainment are neither effective nor uplifting.

Agreeing that occupation is necessary for Sunday's idle hours, and that the public will persist in selecting its own occupation, good or bad, we must agree further that the Sunday picture show is the ideal solution of the problem. Those who take to heart the regulation of human activities, and appoint themselves guardians of public welfare, should greet with particular joy the opportunity to bind a million potential mischief-makers with a pleasant and harmless spell while the otherwise idle hours pass.

A thousand pleasant—but often harmful—counter-attractions offer equal advantage as time killers. The saloon, the pool-room, the doubtful club, all beckon the youth away from the awful monotony of doing nothing; and the grown man and the woman (grown or not) have their own monotonies from which escape shows none but rosy colors. What agency of relief can rival the picture show in its claim of honest usefulness?

The Sunday picture show has become a necessity because it has aided, and is aiding, to increase contentment and resistance to temptation. It has substituted efficient, organized, useful entertainment for the vagaries and idiosyncrasies of idlers who will not be idle.

We hope to see the day when the church people, who are not ambitious to maintain their services all day long, will realize the wisdom and fitness of encouraging Sunday picture shows in their own neighborhoods. Of inestimable value as they are in the crowded cities, the rural communities find them still more of a blessing. "Sunday on the farm" has become a proverb for monotony.

In all communities where the Sunday picture show does not now exist, we suggest it as the best solution for many human problems. In the communities where it does exist, its benefits are apparent to all.

Where obsolete ordinances and statutes still prohibit the holding of Sunday performances (placed upon the books long before the advent of the picture) intelligent effort should be directed toward their repeal. It should be no difficult task to convince fair-minded legislators, educators and social workers that the Sunday picture show is an unmixed good and a powerful aid to right living.

The Attitude Toward the Deposit System

CERTAIN organized bodies of exhibitors have taken strong exception to the practice of accepting cash deposits from theater owners to guarantee the observance of film service contracts. This practice, as is well known, has attained considerable proportions during the last few years. In condemning it the exhibitors have brought against the producers and distributors a charge whose seriousness they perhaps do not fully realize. They have asserted that the deposit money, instead of being held in escrow, is used for industrial development, thus forcing the exhibitor to capitalize the production.

Even were we disposed to discuss the merits of this charge, we could not do so because we are not provided with the facts necessary to proper consideration. We do not know what is done with the funds on deposit and, in fact, have never inquired. Of course, the statement that the money is diverted from the position it is understood to occupy is a direct charge of breach of faith.

And, on the other hand, exchanges often report bookings cancelled by exhibitors without any just cause. It is, of course, these irresponsible theater men who are back of the feeling distributors have that the deposit system is necessary.

There are things to be said about the deposit system that are not entirely unfavorable. When the customer is assured that his deposit is protected, and that its "guarantee" is a real assurance of service, there is seldom any trouble about collecting it in all good will. In other words, no customer objects to paying for obvious and tangible benefits.

But where an exhibitor has an investment and a record that undeniably entitle him to a line of credit, and where a deposit is exacted from him as a substitute for that credit, whose justice remains unrecognized, he becomes resentful. Resentment breeds suspicion. He reasons that the refusal of credit is being used as an excuse for bleeding him of capital funds. He knows that a hundred customers like himself would furnish enough capital, in deposit form, to finance considerable production work. And when that idea becomes fixed, the deposit system is doomed.

Publicity and entire frankness in the dissemination of financial statements might go a long way toward creating faith and confidence in the equitableness of the deposit plan. It is evident that such feeling as there is against it directs itself not at the system but at the secrecy which surrounds it in the minds of the exhibitors. Unless this feeling of suspicion and mystery (justified or unjustified as it may be) is dissipated, the resentment against the deposit system is likely to grow.

David Wark Griffith with Artcraft

TO PRODUCE BIG PLAYS FOR REGULAR RELEASE DATES

ARTCRAFT has captured some big people—Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, George M. Cohan. But now comes the announcement of the biggest association of all—one which could scarcely be more important in its particular phase of the industry. D. W. Griffith, the creator of "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance," has entered into an arrangement with the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, by which all his feature productions will be distributed through that concern. Mr. Griffith intends to produce a number of big and impressive productions to be released at regular intervals through Artcraft.

David Wark Griffith, associated with Artcraft.

This is the first time in three years that Mr. Griffith has made an arrangement to produce photoplays with the frequency and regularity necessary for general release.

Mr. Griffith intends to concentrate his time and energy in such a manner as to create a number of subjects of wide dramatic and scenic scope in order to comply with the insistent public demand for more Griffith productions than it has recently been receiving. Mr. Griffith's producing force will operate wherever necessary to obtain the scenic investitures of the stories which he selects for production. The devotion to startling realism for which this noted director is famous, will prompt him to ignore every makeshift of environment and induce him to traverse the globe, going to its farthest points if necessary, in search of the exact atmosphere required by the productions he contemplates.

Mr. Walter E. Greene, president of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, in commenting upon this notable producing affiliation, said:

The alliance between Artcraft and D. W. Griffith, the greatest producing genius that the motion picture art has yet developed, is in accordance with Artcraft's determination to secure the foremost factors, directorial, stellar and technical, in the production of the greatest photoplays the world has yet seen. The policy of presenting several Griffith productions a year will undoubtedly be enthusiastically endorsed by the photoplay public, who have, during the past few years, clearly indicated their fascination for Griffith's tremendous screen masterpieces by flocking by the hundreds of thousands to the regular $2.00 theaters which have presented his recent successes. No greater tribute could be paid to the screen and to its foremost producing figure than this willingness to pay such theretofore unprecedented prices for photoplay entertainment. The affiliation with the man who has given the screen a new significance and who has broadened the powers of the silent drama to an extent never before contemplated will also carry great import to exhibitors throughout the country who have during the past few years been deprived of Mr. Griffith's master screen creations to the advantage of the regular $2.00 theaters. By this important arrangement Artcraft restores the great Griffith to

D. W. Griffith, when asked for a statement covering his new distributing affiliation, said:

Walter E. Greene, president Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

The demand on the part of the exhibitors and public throughout the world for a series of productions along the lines I traced in "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance" had become so insistent that I would feel almost remiss in duty if I did not pay it heed. In determining upon the purpose of producing such an annual schedule of important cinema offerings, the essential consideration was the choice of distribution which would in the greatest degree respond to this demand. After a very careful analysis of the various distributing organizations operating in the film industry, I came to the conclusion that Artcraft, because of the exalted artistic standard of the productions it has already offered the public, because of its tremendous source of distribution and its equitable and comprehensive policies, was the one organization through which to circulate my productions through the world. I am convinced that I have never had such an opportunity to reach the great heart of mankind with my screen messages. I feel that the degree of success which has been meted out to "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance" placed me in the debt of the public which can only be equalized by bending every effort to surpass all my former efforts.

The first Artcraft-Griffith production is now in the course of selection and will be announced at an early date.

Griffith Confirms Report of Change

Announcement of the complete severance of D. W. Griffith's connection with the Triangle Film Corporation has been authorized through his secretary in New York. This statement was given out at Mr. Griffith's offices in the Longacre building, but his secretary would not confirm any of the most persistent rumors about his future activities.

It has been known for some time that Mr. Griffith has had no connection with the Triangle. This latest move is taken to indicate that henceforth he will not have even an advisory connection with program pictures, but will devote himself entirely to productions made and directed entirely in person, such as "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance," the only two productions made by him within the last two years.

The Triangle Fine Arts program now carries several stars discovered and developed by Mr. Griffith in his own big productions, and these, together with the manufacturing organizations he has developed at the California studio, he leaves, he says, with regret and best wishes for success under the Triangle standard.

Griffith to Film War?

D. W. Griffith has sailed for London. It is said he has accepted a commission to depict through the medium of the motion picture an authentic history of the world war.

The governmental authorities of the conflicting forces have invested Mr. Griffith with plenary credentials to carry out his mission. Every facility will be accorded him on the "five fronts" to enable him to write in the new language of the motion picture, for the first time, a graphic story narrative of modern warfare as accurate and as comprehensive as any set down by war correspondents of the pen.

The offer of Griffith to "do the war" has been pending for several months until he could arrange producing interests in California to enable him to make the visit abroad. The completed reels of Griffith's work will be deposited among the archives of the British museum, the Bibliotheque National of Paris and the Royal Libraries of Petrograd, Berlin and Vienna.

Mr. Griffith, en route to the front, will be in attendance at the London opening of his production, "Intolerance," at the Drury Lane Theater on April 8.

"Doug" Fairbanks to Washington

A special trip from New York to Washington, D. C., in order to secure one scene that called for the capitol as a background was made by Douglas Fairbanks, his director, John Emerson, the cameraman, Victor Fleming, his assistant, Glenn McWilliams and Business Manager John Fairbanks.

The first Fairbanks-Artcraft offering is progressing along unexpected lines, the initial exteriors having been taken early last week just prior to the trip to Washington. For these scenes, fifty unusual types, such as are characteristic of the Fairbanks productions, were engaged and drilled for two days by Director Emerson, who is at all times keen for unaffected realism. "Doug" was handled rather roughly in these scenes by the half a hundred huskies in accordance with the Anita Loos scenario, but he proves the conquering hero in the epilogue, and just how he does it will prove one of the many surprising features of the forthcoming release.

Pamphlet on Censorship

A valuable summary of existing censorship laws in the various States has been prepared by the American Picture Producers Association of Chicago. This pamphlet contains concise statements from various influential newspapers against censorship.

It also carries an argument by John R. Freuler which in part is as follows:

If common honesty and common sense of the very commonest kind were in aggressive control of governmental and legislative affairs there would be no censorship problem for the motion picture industry. Motion pictures are peculiarly the property of the public. Motion picture corporations concerned in the distribution of motion pictures are public servants to an important degree. We, the picture corporations, are publishers of art, news and general information quite as truly as is the newspaper laid at your door. Our rights are identical. We are subject to the same laws—and should be subject to no other.

New laws are being sought for the motion picture largely for the purpose of creating new jobs, new taxes and new perquisites.

In the ancient past there have been censorships for speech, religion, pantaloons and food. Those censorships have mostly been mowed down by Time, the great Foolkiller.

Let us speed up the process for picture censorship.

Other powerful arguments against censorship are given in the above mentioned sheet by D. W. Griffith and Samuel M. Field. A copy of the publication can be obtained free by addressing the Publicity Department, American Picture Producers Association, Room 501, Consumers Building, Chicago.

Convention of Illinois Exhibitors

The state convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Illinois, Branch Number 2, will be held Friday, April 6, at Room 512 Masonic Temple, 159 North State street, Chicago, at 12 o'clock.

As important matters, relative to the national convention to be held in July, are to be taken up, State President George M. Luttrell especially desires every exhibitor to attend who can possibly do so.

The scenario department staff at Universal City has been increased by the addition of two writers, C. B. Hoadley and Waldemar Young.

Finish 12 Goldwyns Before Releasing One

GOLDWYN BRINGS MAE MARSH AND "BOBBIE" HARRON TOGETHER AGAIN

Robert Harron, who has been added to Goldwyn's notable list of stars.

Mae Marsh, who has played opposite Bobby Harron since pioneer screen days.

TO earn and deserve the confidence of exhibitors is one of the chief concerns of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, this being the aim of Samuel Goldfish and his associates, Edgar and Archibald Selwyn, and Arthur Hopkins, in promising that twelve finished productions, requiring an outlay of one million dollars or more, will be ready for the screen before the first Goldwyn release is in order.

At the present rate of production, with two completed pictures and a third under way, there is scarcely a doubt that Goldwyn will fulfill its promise to have twelve finished pictures ready by September 1. The first Mae Marsh and Maxine Elliott pictures have been completed and Miss Marsh, without wasting a day, has gone to work in her second picture under the direction of John W. Noble. The summer months will find Mary Garden, Jane Cowl and Madge Kennedy busy at the Goldwyn studios also.

Present Merit to Guarantee Future

Goldwyn has been termed the company with the million-dollar-courage, in that Messrs. Goldfish, Selwyn and Hopkins have arranged to spend that amount or even more for finished productions before attempting to market their pictures in any part of the world. This has never been done before in the history of the industry and represents an entirely new and advanced thought in the marketing of motion pictures. The basic thought behind this is that exhibitors will not have to accept a company's promises, but may actually see twelve distinct achievements as a guarantee of the quality and worth of future productions.

The most important accession to the Goldwyn ranks in several weeks is Robert Harron, who, leaving California, comes to New York to play with Mae Marsh again as her leading man. The staff writers of the motion picture publications once more are referring to their biographical files for the facts about this popular pair.

"Bobbie" Harron has always been the delight of the scribes, no less than his pretty team-mate, for there is almost no other who at his age has ever been able to point to such a consistent, successful screen lineage.

Re-unite Mae Marsh and "Bobbie" Harron

Robert Harron was born in New York City on April 12, 1894, and left school at the age of fourteen to become an errand boy in the Biograph studio. There he attracted the attention of D. W. Griffith and soon had become one of that famous director's best known players.

Only two days after signing with Goldwyn, he faced the camera with Miss Marsh under the direction of John W. Noble, who also has just come into the organization.

The principal pictures in which Mae Marsh and Bobbie Harron have teamed are "The Escape," "Judith of Bethulia," "Home, Sweet Home," "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hoodoo Ann," "The Wild Girl of the Sierras," "A Child of the Paris Streets" and "The Marriage of Molly-O."

Skeptical persons express doubt when they are told of the vast number who write intimate personal letters to the favorites of the screen. They wonder if it is really true that some ministers of the gospel write letters to cinema vampires and whether fatherly old gentlemen in high silk hats write to the little ingenues of screenland.

A Girl's Letter of Testimonial

It is quite true. Many exhibitors would be surprised to know how many of their own patrons write these letters.

Mae Marsh received not merely an amazing volume but a remarkable quality of letters. It is interesting to learn of the great number of messages that come to her from women and young girls. One of these, a typical letter of a young American girl, is printed here. Some exhibitor may know who the writer is, or he may know of other girls who have written letters like it after seeing a picture in his theater:

Dear Mae Marsh: All of my letters go to you. I'm writing you now because I have seen you again. Every one of the score of times I've seen you I've written, I believe—because I had to have some outlet for my enthusiasm. We all must. I've seen your lovable "Little Sister"; your horrible tenement child in "The Escape" (so horrible that I shudder even now when I think of her and so pitiful it made me cry and does still). And your "Wharf Rat," blessed boy. And your whimsical "Hoodoo Ann," and so on and so on. And now I have seen "Intolerance," and "The Dear One."

I cannot think of her without making the tears come. Just the mere mention of your name—Mae Marsh—is magical in its effect upon me, and I am a normally modern, normally indifferent girl. I can't believe that any representation of emotions could touch me—until I think of you.

Touching the Chords of the Heart

I cannot tell you how eagerly and how long I've loved you. You are the most wonderful girl I've ever seen. I know that because I have really seen you so many times and so many other girls with whom I compare you. Your eyes are so sad they hurt. And your smile is usually even sadder than your tears. I wonder if you are really so sad? I hope you will, if you have proceeded so far, decide to write to me. I have poured out my heart to you. I believe I've never been so much in earnest in all my life before. Please don't laugh at me. I know you are famous, and all of that, but somehow you are very much "The Dear One," too.

Next to being Miss Marsh and receive letters like this, one might say that he would rather be the exhibitor whose screen has been the means of carrying such inspiration to somebody.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

Second Marjorie Rambeau Picture, "Motherhood," and "Sunny Jane," First of Jackie Saunders Series of Plays, Appear March 26

"Motherhood," the second of the Powell-Mutual productions starring Marjorie Rambeau is scheduled for release March 26. This is a five-part picture, of which Frederick Arnold Kummer, a writer of distinction and a record of successes, is the author. War is the theme, and the picture may be advertised from any side of the war question the exhibitor chooses. It is a preachment for the pacifist, and an argument for armament and protection for the fighters.

"Motherhood" can be accepted as telling what happens when war comes.

"Sunny Jane," a five-reel feature starring Jackie Saunders, is the first of six productions for Mutual in which Miss Saunders will appear. These Jackie Saunders features are comedy dramas full of good, clean fun, and will appeal to all the family. They are subjects which can be used to advantage by the exhibitor who is booking special family programs or children's programs. "Sunny Jane" is also scheduled for release on March 26.

"Shorty Lands a Master Crook," the eleventh story of the Mutual "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton" series, ready March 26, deals with the attempt to steal from a museum statues of "Psyche" and "The Dying Gladiator." Anita Keller and Shorty Hamilton pose as these statues and so foil the band of robbers. This is a subject which will appeal to all school children, and a facetious line asking them what they think "Psyche" and "The Dying Gladiator" would look like in real life and in a fist fight will undoubtedly arouse their interest as well as that of the older people in this Shorty picture.

Gang of Counterfeiters Have Been Discovered in Our City! A Woman Single-Handed Leads to the Arrest of the Spurious Coin! Beware of Counterfeit Money! Carefully Watch All the Money Given You or You May Be Arrested for Passing! These ideas used as head on a newspaper article written in the form of a news item rather than an advertisement, and with a little catch on the end stating that the counerfeiters may be seen at the ——— theater on a certain date, will catch the eye of the public and let them know the date on which the next "Girl Reporter" story will be shown at your theater.

On March 30 comes the second of the Jimmie Dale stories entitled "The Stolen Rubies." As the insignia of Jimmie Dale is the grey seal, an advertising scheme for this series is to have some of these made with the name of the release of the week printed thereon and the theater at which they will be shown as well as the date. Then have these stuck up all over the neighborhood the day before the showing. Have them torn down the day after the picture has been shown; and then put up again the next week announcing the title of the next adventure.

The Cub comedy for the week, with George Ovey to create the fun, is "Be Sure You're Right." This is available for booking on March 29. The Vogue comic production is "Freed by Fido," and features Lillian Hamilton, Owen Evans, Larry Bowes, John Oaker and George Monberg. Many of the scenes of this comedy are taken in Chinatown and give an insight into the Chinese slums of San Francisco, with their underground passages and fantastic restaurants.

Mutual Tours Around the World, No. 21, which comes on March 27, contains subjects this week which will be of especial interest to teachers and students of history. In the film are shown views of Ajaccio, Corsica, the birthplace of Napoleon Bonaparte; Funchal, capital of the Madeira Islands; Rostov-on-the-Don, a seaport of southeastern Russia, and other interesting sights. The Mutual Weekly comes as usual on Wednesday of each week with its news of the hour and scenes from the history-making of the week, and the third educational reel, "Reel Life," No. 48, is scheduled for March 29.

Art Is Good Taste, Says Ince

"Art is, after all, another name for good taste," says Thomas H. Ince, who was discussing several of the more important scenes of the latest Triangle-Kay-Bee play, "The Little Brother," with Director Charles Miller and Enid Bennett, the new Australian beauty, who will be presented by him as star. "One possesses it, or does not possess it. It can scarcely be acquired. It seems to be one of those things that comes with birth and endures until death, unless destroyed by its fortunate owner's neglect and lack of appreciation."

Ince's statement arose from the fact that "The Little Brother," by Lois Zellner, is not an actor-proof play. Careless, unintelligent interpretation, it is said, would deprive it of many of its merits.

"This story," continued the producer, "is an admirable example of the intelligent employment of good taste. Treated in a careless manner, the entire production would be destroyed. The theme is virile and convincing enough, but it would suffer lamentably from slip-shod handling. Fortunately, this can be avoided. All temptation to hurry the action in order to gain a point must be put aside. The story must be brought to its conclusion in a manner so smooth and harmonious that the work might well be compared to a piece of harmonious music."

Enid Bennett has developed the character, it is said, with an understanding of its finer, more subtle points and an enthusiasm that must bring delight to the heart of the author.

Pathe Presents "Combitone" Films

Pathe's Combitone scenic pictures which have been so enthusiastically greeted have been booked by the Broadway Theater, New York, for an indefinite run starting on release date, March 18. Managing Director Leon Langfeldt of the Broadway Theater says, "the pictures are beautiful."

The name of the company making the films is the Combitone Pictures Corporation. F. W. Hochstetter, inventor of the process, and A. L. Westgard of the National Highways Association, are the moving spirits of this organization.

The new process of toning achieves really marvelous results. An ordinary black and white negative is so treated that from five to ten different tones are given to each inch of film, and yet only one toning bath is necessary. This bath causes the various tones to automatically register in proportion to the varying density of the film. While not colored photography the results approximate it and pictures treated by the process show wonderful color effects. The initial release appeared for March 18 and the film will be issued at the rate of one a week thereafter. Every sixth week there will be a Pathe scenic. The intervening five releases will be Combitones.

There will be a special one sheet on each scenic.

Mary Pickford Wrecks Door

Arthur Whyte, manager of the New York and New Jersey Artcraft exchange, has just received a bill from Herring & Blumenthal, owners of the National Theater, Jersey City, for a door which was wrecked by the crowds during the showing of Mary Pickford in "A Poor Little Rich Girl."

The crowd which endeavored to get into the theater one night late last week became unruly and a hurry call for the reserves had to be put in. However, before the arms of the law could reach the premises one perfectly good door was torn from its hinges and totally destroyed with the result that the Artcraft exchange manager has a new bill on his desk for $60.00.

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle addressed the congregation from the pulpit of a fashionable Kansas City church while on his recent trip from the film coast to New York.

Illinois State Censor Bill

The complete Guernsey censorship bill, which provides for a state censor and eliminates all local censorship, and which has been introduced into the Illinois legislature, will be found on page 683 of this issue. This bill has been characterized by film men as the fairest censor bill which has thus far been drawn.

Ski Party at Canadian Theater

M. Mannist, manager of the Royal Theater, Fort William, Canada, claims to have had the most unique theater party ever held in a motion picture house.

A young lady living in a town about six miles from Fort William gave a party to twelve of her friends, announcing that the principal entertainment of the evening would be a trip to the Royal Theater to see Margarita Fischer in "The Pearl of Paradise" and Charlie Chaplin in "Easy Street."

Their mode of traveling the six miles to the theater was on skis and Mr. Mannist claims the distinction for his house of having the first ski party on record in this country.

New Moss Seven-Reeler

"The Sins of the Children," adapted from a novel by Cosmo Hamilton, will represent the second of the eight special features undertaken by B. S. Moss for the current year. It will come to the screen in seven reels.

"One Hour," which initiates the string of eight special features, is now finished to the point of editing and assembling and will be released the first week in April, with Zena Keefe and Alan Hale starring and Paul McAllister as director.

Famous Takes Paragon Studio

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has taken possession of the Paragon studio in Fort Lee, New Jersey, the largest and most completely equipped daylight studio in the world, which will henceforth be used for the production of Paramount pictures. The structure is to be renamed the Famous Players-Lasky Studio because of the fact that both the Famous Players and Lasky pictures will be produced in it.

Charles Chaplin in his next,—"The Cure." There are various cures, it seems.

Mutual Service Appreciated

What the exhibitor wants is something which will bring the patronage to his house and that he can find this in the Mutual productions, as well as receive efficient service is vouched for by C. L. Watson, manager of the Tryst Theater, St. Paul, Minnesota, as shown by the following extract from a letter received from Mr. Watson:

"I take this occasion to let you know of my appreciation of the attention and class of service that your company has given me in the past few weeks in which I have run Mutual service exclusively.

"My business is picking up wonderfully, and hope that our relations shall continue as pleasant in the future as they have in the past."

William Moore, exhibitor at Alma, Nebraska, tells what he thinks of Mutual service.

"I will say that the service last night, 'The Inner Struggle,' was the finest program that I believe I ever showed. I had a packed house and had to run two complete shows. My patrons were more than pleased with the same. In fact I have had but three or four services from Mutual that have not been first class since we have been doing business. I feel that anyone using Mutual service has as good as is to be had. While I think a change of faces is very profitable as a whole, I think Mutual service is the best I have ever shown."

Hampton Makes Statement

Some surprise has been expressed that "The Barrier," which has been doing such a big business at the Broadway Theater, New York, should remain only three weeks. In this connection Benjamin B. Hampton issues the following statement:

The fact that we were able to secure time at the Broadway Theater at all was due to the generosity of Louis J. Selznick who very kindly gave the Rex Beach Pictures Company three weeks of time allotted to his productions.

Mr. Selznick was kind enough to allow "The Barrier" to have the Broadway Theater for three weeks, setting his own interest aside to do so. We could not ask him for an extension of time because he has too many valuable productions of his own demanding Broadway showing. The present theatrical season has been so remarkable that it has been impossible to get another house to extend "The Barrier" run.

Our plan now is to book "The Barrier" in the big picture houses. Immediately bookings in New York City aggregating more than $60,000 have been offered us on "The Barrier" and it is likely that within the next few weeks this great picture will be shown in the leading New York picture houses.

New Style Theater Advertising

Attention was recently attracted to an example which proves the growing tendency on the part of exhibitors towards concentrated advertising. Much has been said regarding the advisability of exploiting only the feature attraction on a program. The strength of this method lies in the fact that naturally the feature has the strongest drawing power and beside the confusion in people's minds by a miscellaneous display of posters is avoided.

A very apt illustration of the success of this move was the experiment of a downtown exhibitor in a western city. Confining his programs mostly to short subjects, he was in the habit of displaying posters and all other available material on each picture. This resulted oft-times in a loss of business due to confusion on lack of interest in the fill-in subject far in excess of their tested drawing power.

Therefore, upon contracting for the Max Linder comedies this exhibitor at the instigation of the Essanay representative decided to advertise only Max Linder on the days these features were running. It was an unusual sight to see the entire front and lobby devoted to nothing but material on "Max Comes Across." On the other hand there was nothing present which would tend to lessen the public's desire to see this star, such as might have occurred had there been posters of other subjects.

The resultant capacity business for the run made a convert out of this exhibitor and will no doubt be the cause for the disappearance of the side show fronts used by other theaters in that neighborhood.

Directors Join Thanhouser

Two world famous directors, Chautard and Brooke, have been added to the staff of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, and both are now busily at work in the New Rochelle studio.

Emile Choutard comes from the World Film, where he has directed a number of important releases.

In the early days of the motion picture business the average director was a man who had never been on the stage, or if he had, never filled more than minor parts. Van Dyke Brooke was one of the pioneers from the legitimate to the silent drama, having been in stock, on the road, and also in important metropolitan productions before he joined the Vitagraph Company in 1909. He remained with that company up to the time that he resigned to accept a place on the Thanhouser payroll.

Exhibitor Writes Helen Holmes

Helen Holmes, the Mutual-Signal star, said she was "quite set up" when she received the following letter direct from Harry H. Rush, manager Broadway Theater, Philadelphia:

Accept my congratulations on your excellent work in "A Lass of the Lumberlands." Personally I do not care for serial pictures at all. There has been so much sameness to them with secret passageways, silly pursuits, poor acting and so forth. I had adopted the habit of turning my back to the screen in disgust while they were on; but "A Lass of the Lumberlands" was decidedly different. The opening was away from the beaten part of continued pictures, and after looking at the first few scenes of the first chapter instead of turning my back I picked out a good seat and was indeed sorry when the end came and ever since I am on the job when "A Lass of the Lumberlands" comes on and I really enjoy looking at it both shows.

Example of Frohman Service

The attention that the Frohman Amusement Corporation devotes to perfecting the service to exhibitors, pursuant to the policies put into operation by President William L. Sherrill, resulted in an instance of a theater which lately booked "The Witching Hour" being aided by Mr. Sherrill personally in meeting an emergency. Through a clerical error in the exchange, five prints of "The Witching Hour" had been simultaneously booked, while there were but four prints of the production in the territory. The Frohman offices were appealed to. An "idle print" was found and a messenger was dispatched to Boston. The messenger returned to New York with the print and delivered it to the theater.

Lesser Completes Organization

Sol L. Lesser, the prominent young exchange man of the Pacific Coast, who purchased "The Ne'er-Do-Well" for the United States, has so extended his activities that he is now able to handle this subject through his own offices.

MOTHERS OF FRANCE

American Rights to Sarah Bernhardt Picture Secured by World Film Corporation—Opening Run at Rialto Theater

The World Film Corporation has been the successful one among the large distributing companies that have been negotiating for the American rights to "Mothers of France," the patriotic play which Sarah Bernhardt has enacted before the camera.

The World Film Corporation experienced no difficulty in demonstrating the efficiency of its distributing machinery, and for that and other reasons the decision finally fell in this direction. The deal was closed and the contracts were signed on March 21.

"Mothers of France" played to packed houses at the Rialto Theater in New York during the week of March 12. Many times on the opening day of the run, the box-office line stretched along Seventh avenue for half a block or more.

Inside the theater there were scenes of emotion and patriotic fervor. Women and girls were in tears. From the opening of the first mobilization scene in the little village of Meurey the applause was practically continuous. At frequent intervals it arose to the cheering point, and spectators sprang to their feet, waving their programs and shouting "Vive la France."

The newspaper reviewers, unaccustomed to such demonstrations in motion picture theaters, expressed praise. The New York World critic said:

Spectators at the big motion picture theater as a rule do not applaud, but the crowds at the Rialto Theater, afternoon and night, received "Mothers of France" with great bursts of hand-clapping.

Ince in Charge of Fine Arts

In response to numerous inquiries with respect to the production plans for the immediate future, W. N. Seligsberg, secretary of Triangle Film Corporation, made the following statement:

The principal executives of this company are at the present moment at the studios in Los Angeles and are completing plans for unique and larger production. The California production, both at the Culver City (Kay-Bee) and Hollywood (Fine Arts) studios will be under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince. The new construction work at the Yonkers studio is rapidly being completed and within the next few days production will commence there under Allan Dwan. Details as to the plans will be published to the trade as soon as they are in final shape but in the meanwhile mention of the two supervising directors is sufficient guaranty of the quality of production.

"The Trufflers," a Strong Story

Strong bookings are reported on "The Trufflers," Essanay's picturization of Samuel Merwin's Cosmopolitan Magazine story. This feature, presenting Nell Craig, and an all-star cast, will be released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service April 9.

The story proved to be immensely popular throughout the country. It was read by millions. This fact should provide a juicy bit of free advertising for exhibitors who book the picture. Another attraction which "The Trufflers" is said to hold forth is its cast. Besides Nell Craig, others appearing in the picture are Sydney Ainsworth, Richard C. Travers, Ernest Maupain and Harry Dunkinson.

"The Trufflers" is based on life in New York's colony of artists—Greenwich Village. A gripping love-drama is interwoven into the plot, which has to do with the fascinating Bohemian life lead by the artists.

Seena Owen, Fine Arts sparkler, on her broncho, "Butterfly." Seena was last seen by Uncle Sam's picture audiences in "A Woman's Awakening."

This delectable scene is from "The Dark Road" (as much as it looks like the primrose path). It's a Triangle-Ince play, with Dorothy Dalton. In the oval is Dorothy Gish in "Her Official Fathers."

Theater to Try Projecting Through Glass

BETTER VENTILATION POSSIBLE IN OPERATING ROOM IF TRIAL SUCCEEDS

THOUGH the experiments of the few theaters that have attempted to close off the operating room entirely from the auditorium by placing a thickness of glass in the aperture through which the projection machine "shoots," up to the present, have failed in every case, new experiments are being made by a Chicago firm of theater owners and their architect with the idea of perfecting a practicable means of projecting through glass, to be used in the construction of a new theater. Several difficulties must be overcome if the use of the glass is not to interfere with and lessen the efficiency of projection.

The Crystal Theater, at Washtenaw and North avenues, Chicago, owned by the Schaefer Theater Company, and controlled by Frederick W. Schaefer, president, and his brother, Frank G. Schaefer, both pioneers in the exhibiting business in Chicago, is the house in which the new type of operating room will be given its first scientific trial. The present Crystal Theater building is being wrecked and the construction of a house more than twice the size will be commenced within a few weeks.

Crystal Theater building to be erected in Chicago by the Schaefer Theater Company. It includes a 2,000-seat theater and a big lodge and dance hall.

The Crystal was the first theater built in Chicago outside of the loop to be used exclusively for theatrical purposes, being one of the oldest picture houses in the residence districts of the city.

Problems for Projection Experts

To successfully operate a projection machine which must "shoot" through an extra thickness of glass requires that a better quality of glass be found for the purpose than has been used in previous trials. One theater in Chicago which has been built only recently experimented with ordinary crystal plate glass. It has been found necessary to remove the glass panes when the machines are in operation. The glass is put in place again each time the machines are stopped, thus shutting out the currents of used air from the theater which interfere with adequate ventilation of the operating room.

Manufacturers of glass have been asked to provide samples of glass which will fill the architect's specifications and meet the requirements. Ordinary plate glass dims the picture and absorbs as much as two per cent of the light.

Another problem lies in properly aligning the glass, the screen and the lens of the projection machine in exactly parallel planes. If the screen or the glass are not placed at the same angle, the picture will be distorted because of the unequal refraction caused by the misplacement. When fixed in parallel planes, the refraction of light rays will be in opposite directions but in equal and proportionate degrees at corresponding points on both sides of the center.

In the new Crystal, a 125-foot throw is one of the conditions of the experiment.

To Apply Scientific Laws

Believing that the defects and failures recorded in past experiments of the sort simply indicate that the idea has not been worked out scientifically and that the use of the glass will prove satisfactory if proper attention is given to the scientific laws governing the refraction of light rays by glass, the Chicago exhibitor is prepared to install the feature in the theater soon to be erected. If the glass can be used successfully, a decided improvement in the ventilation of the operating room can be affected. It is with this purpose in view that the innovation is being planned. Another possible advantage lies in shutting out the noises of the operating room from the theater.

Besides embodying the most modern features of architecture and up-to-date ideas in theater arrangement, the new Crystal is to have an operating room which will represent the best thought of two experienced exhibitors and an architect who has drawn the plans of more than a score of theaters in the last few years. Henry L. Newhouse, architect of the new Crystal, has drawn the plans for theaters which are considered among the most beautiful in the United States.

A galvanized iron hood, nineteen feet long and two feet wide at the bottom, sloping upward and connecting with an eighteen-inch pipe, will be suspended over the projection machines. Instead of the customary two machines there will be a battery of three motor-driven machines. These and the spot-lamp will "shoot" through the glass-covered openings, while between the machines will be placed larger plate glass windows for the operator's use. Patented automatic fire shutters will be installed. There will be a separate room at one side, as shown in the diagram, for the rotary converter. The space to be occupied by this closet will measure six feet by seven feet. Its position is in one corner of a long storeroom, eleven feet by forty-nine feet in dimensions. At the opposite end of the operating room, separated by a fireproof partition, will be another closet seven feet by eight feet, and a third closet six and one-half feet by seven feet for the storage of films.

Separate Ventilation Unit Is Provided

The ventilating system has been studied out with more care than often is the case. An eighteen-inch fan will remove the fumes and heat from the machines, through the hood overhead. A damper in the top of the eighteen-inch pipe that may be opened or closed from the operating room, will regulate the current of air passing upward and prevent the room from becoming uncomfortably chilly on cold days. If a fire occurs in the operating room, the damper will be so adjusted that it will open itself to permit the escape of the smoke, if it happens to be closed at the time. Air will be supplied through ducts in the floor. It will pass over heating coils. In addition to the eighteen-inch pipe for carrying off the heat and odors from the projection machines, two air outlet ducts four inches by sixteen inches, connecting with vents in the floor, will lead out over the room. If possible, it is intended to allow none of the used air from the theater to rise into the operating room.

The importance of proper ventilation is also felt because of the position of the operating room in the new Crystal. It is to be that which has been adopted in the theaters of most recent construction in Chicago, New York, Detroit and other cities, having all the seats on the main floor, or being built in the fashion of the New Majestic Theater, in Detroit. In that playhouse, several rows of mezzanine boxes extend across the auditorium at comparatively close intervals. This type of construction is not possible in Chicago because of the provisions of the city fire regulations, which require that special exits must be provided at any place where there occurs a raise of three feet in the elevation of the floor above the line of its incline.

The Crystal's operating room will be situated just under the roof, in the front of the building.

The natural tendency of the used air in the theater to rise and escape into and through the operating room is the condition which the management of the Crystal Theater seeks to overcome.

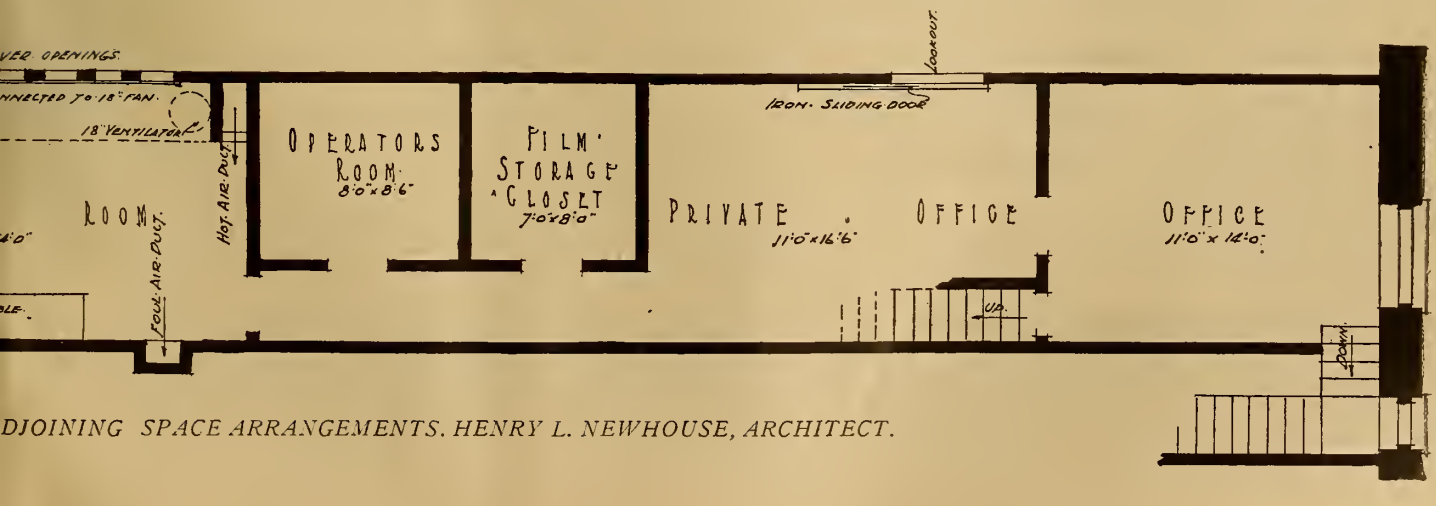
Dance Scene Crowds Studio

Sounds of revelry and the crack of 44-caliber six-shooters a few days ago stirred the usually pastoral neighborhood of the Vitagraph company's Brooklyn studios, when for two days lumbermen, cowmen, sheepmen, and other western and border types of Americans were gathered for a number of important scenes in "The Third Party."

Alice Joyce and Harry Morey will be co-starred in "The Third Party," which is scheduled for release, in about six weeks, as one of the Blue Ribbon features in the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. program. The story deals with American life of today in the East and West, ranging from the rough outdoors of the Rockies to a New York drawing room.

The largest set used in many months at the Vitagraph plant—in "The Third Party" for the dance hall scenes. Manager Victor Smith ransacked Greater New York for mounted heads of elk, moose, buffalo, bear, mountain lions, and bobcats, as well as the skins of all sorts of big game for decorating the set.

Miss Theda Bara, the mysterious and incomparable screen artiste, who appears in the newest William Fox super de luxe photodrama, "Her Greatest Love," which is founded on Ouida's famous novel, "Moths," receives on an average of five hundred letters a day. They are written by admirers of this extraordinary and world-famed portrayer of vampire roles, from every state and territory in the United States.



DJOINING SPACE ARRANGEMENTS. HENRY L. NEWHOUSE, ARCHITECT.

HOWEVER interesting it might be to see in films the ship yards where Uncle Sam is fitting out his new fighting ships, scenes of government preparations for war and naval activities will be kept off the screens of the country, except as permitted by the navy department. Secretary of the Navy Daniels has requested exhibitors and producers to avoid showing any pictures of American naval or merchant vessels without first securing the sanction of the department. The manufacturers whose photographers furnish the film for news weeklies have been asked to assist the government in this way so as to prevent information regarding naval secrets from reaching possible enemies of the United States.

RUSH MEANS POOR PLAYS

Empire All-Star Corporation to Make Mutual Plays Well Ahead of Release Dates to Insure Care in Production

To assure ample time for the production, the assembling, titling and the putting of the finishing touches to the Charles Frohman stage successes produced as motion pictures by the Empire All-Star Corporation for release through the Mutual Film Corporation, President John R. Freuler, of the Mutual, and Alf Hayman, representative of the Frohman interests, have decided that no one picture of any series featuring a star shall be released until two pictures of the series have been completed and the third is in the process of production.

Mr. Freuler and Mr. Hayman propose that all productions coming from the Empire-Mutual studios shall be handled in the same careful manner in which stage plays are produced. No picture is to be started until cast, director, and technical staff have had ample time to study the story they are to produce as a picture, and no photodrama, having been photographed, is to be released until it has been given every finishing touch that thoughtful cutting, assembling and titling can bestow. President Freuler states:

A great deal of the mediocrity of the photoplays on the market today is due to the speed with which productions are hurried through. The haste is due, too often at least, to the desire of producers to save the high salaries paid to stars and directors.

The records of speed in staging important productions which have been boasted of with much pride by many producers are a sidelight on one of the photoplay art's strongest failings. A studio, conscientiously trying to produce good work, does not brag about hasty work, because it recognizes that the claim in itself will be an admission of wrong policy and poor product.

Consider the absurdity of paying $4,000 a week for a star, $1,000 for a director and a proportionate amount for supporting artists, then rushing through the picturization of a manuscript, costing itself $5,000, before the director has had sufficient time to study his subject, before the star and her supporting cast have given their characterizations serious thought, and before the script is properly prepared. Then think, when having come to that most important part of cutting and assembling and titling, which requires deep thought and concentration, of requiring the director to leave the half baked production as it is and go on to produce another play which will come out the same way.

The absurd, illogical, poorly acted and poorly titled photoplay will have no place in the market of the future.

Author Spurns Remuneration

Douglas Fairbanks, a modern Diogenes, and his company, including the property men, are out with their lanterns, searching for the author of "A Regular Guy," a scenario accepted by Director John Emerson, to serve as the basis for an early Artcraft production. The author carelessly failed to put his name or address on the manuscript, and the accompanying letter was mislaid.

"WOMANHOOD" DATES

Sequel Picture to J. Stuart Blackton's Dramatic Play of Preparedness Opens at Philadelphia House, April 2

The Chestnut Street Opera House of Philadelphia has arranged for a three-weeks' showing of the special Vitagraph feature, J. Stuart Blackton's "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," beginning April 2. The presentation in Philadelphia of that date will be the first public performance of the awaited production, which also has preparedness as its theme.

It is just by chance that Philadelphia will see the debut of the stupendous spectacle, "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," before any other city. This arises out of favorable dates being found open at the Chestnut street house. It was at this house that such big screen shows as "Intolerance," and "Civilization" were presented.

Before the Philadelphia dates are concluded "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation" will also open at Washington, D. C., according to a further announcement by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. The date is April 16. The showing there will be for a long period at one of the Thomas Moore houses, the location to be announced later.

The New York opening of "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation" will also come in April, most likely in the early part of the month, at a theater in the Broadway district.

"The Deemster" at Broadway

The Arrow Corporation's production of "The Deemster," the rights to which in New York State are controlled by Lewis J. Selznick, will receive its first presentation in New York City on Sunday, April 8, in the Broadway Theater. It will be staged with an elaborate score requiring an augmented orchestra and with special effects which will greatly enhance its interest and value as an entertainment.

The run at the Broadway will be continued indefinitely, and, it is predicted, is likely to continue into warm weather. This will give state rights men in control of territory, especially in nearby states, an opportunity to demonstrate to exhibitors in their territories the real value of "The Deemster," as shown by its reception by large audiences.

"The Deemster," as a play, with the late Wilson Barrett in the role of Dan, had the record of being an attraction especially strong with women because of its great heart interest. It is believed that the screen version with Derwent Hall Caine, a son of the author, as Dan, will also prove a very strong attraction to the gentler sex.

Lockwood and Allison on New Play

Harold Lockwood and May Allison have just begun work in the Metro-Yorke studios at Hollywood, on "The Secret Spring," a big Metro feature which has been adapted for the screen by Fred J. Balshofer from "The Hidden Spring," the famous novel by Jarios B. Kolland.

A noteworthy cast, with many actors who are new to Lockwood and Allison productions, has been chosen for "The Secret Spring." Among the newcomers are Herbert Standing, Harry F. ("Doc") Crane, and William Lloyd. Lester Cuneo, a Metro-Yorke favorite, also is in the cast.

The Man Inside the Booth

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

Will you please tell me through your department, what is the cause of the arc light "sputtering" and not burning even, when they are not burned closer than one-fourth inch? We have direct current, 110 volts, and use a 40 Amp. rheostat. All connections are clean and solid.

Also, I would like to join the Operators' Union, and I would thank you to give me any information that would be of any help to me.—R. O. White, Titusville, Florida.

Your trouble is caused from one of the two causes given below, or it may be caused by both of them. You have not set your carbons right or you are not using the right kind of carbons or combination of carbons to get the best results.

In setting carbons, for either A. C. or D. C. current, set the top carbon one-eighth inch behind the bottom carbon and be very sure that the carbons are set in exact line with each other as you look at them through the condenser opening of the lamp house.

You do not say what kind of carbon you are using but I would suggest that you use a soft cored carbon both top and bottom or use a five-eighths inch soft cored carbon above and a "Silver Tip" negative carbon made by the National Carbon Co., below. If you use the soft cored carbons both top and bottom, then I would use a three-fourths inch above and a five-eighths inch below.

I have had reports from a number of operators using the Silver Tip and have given them a thorough test myself and can recommend them to any operator who is using D. C. current. These carbons cannot be used on A. C. current but work fine on generator sets and Mercury Arc Rectifiers.

In regard to joining the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., I would advise you to write to F. G. Lemaster, 107 West Forty-sixth street, New York City, and he will be very glad to give you the desired information as to where you can make application for membership. If there is a Local in your city you can get the information from the secretary of the Local.

I have a question that I would like to have you give me some information on. I am running a 6A Power's, motor drive and I am having a little trouble with my film making a noise. My machine is almost noiseless when it is running without a film in it, but when a film is in the machine it sounds like something was running heavy about the intermittent movement. The intermittent movement and the apron are the same as new and I have adjusted them back and forth to be sure that I haven't them too close and have done the same to the tension springs. The noise seems to come from the intermittent sprocket and since the noise came I have a small up-and-down wave in the picture. Thanking you for your best information.—B. G., Alexander City, Alabama.

The trouble you are having with the noise when the film is in the machine is caused by the film and the apron. Take the apron off the machine and carefully bend the ears at the lower end of the apron which the rollers, ahead slightly, being careful to bend each one the same amount. If this remedies the trouble, well and good. If it helps, but does not remedy it, then try bending it a little more. If it makes it worse, bend the rollers back slightly. You can do no damage by bending these apron ears, provided you keep the rollers square with the sprocket, that is to say, equi-distant from the sprocket. To test this, measure from the face of the hub of the roller to opposite teeth on the lower sprocket. You can remedy the up-and-down motion that you speak of by adjusting the cam and star and adjusting the tension on the film. Keep the teeth on the sprockets good and clean. Dirty sprockets will cause an unsteady picture.

I am a reader of MOTOGRAPHY and your Projection Department. I am also in the picture business and had a question put up to me that made me think. I am not sure of my answer and would like your idea on the subject. The question is on the three-wire system of wiring. Off of one side of the line you are using an arc lamp drawing 60 Amps. On the other side of the line you are using another arc drawing 70 Amps. What I want to know is—if the neutral is blown or taken out, what would be the effect?

Now, take the same question in a different way. On one side of the line you have an arc lamp drawing 60 Amps. and on the other side of the line you have an arc lamp drawing 60 Amps. and a motor drawing 10 Amps.; if you remove the neutral fuse I know that it would not have any effect on the arc lamps for they are properly balanced, but what would happen to the 10 Amp. overload from the motor?

I want to make it plain that both of the lamps and the motor are running when you remove the fuse.

I await a favorable reply in the MOTOGRAPHY.—Kindly omit my name on my answer and sign just plain A. J. P., Massachusetts.

Below are the two diagrams of the questions:

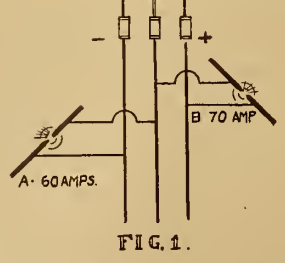


FIG. 1.

In Fig. 1 if the fuse was blown or removed, the two lamps (A) and (B) would be thrown in series and the amperage on lamp A would raise and on lamp B would drop to such a point where the amperage on both lamps was the same. In Fig. 2, as shown above, if the fuse were to be either blown or removed, the lamp B and the motor C would be in multiple with each other and they (B and C) would be thrown in series with lamp A. The amperage on lamp A would raise and the amperage on lamp B and motor C would drop to such a point where the amperage on lamp A would be equal to the amperage on lamp B and motor C.

As you state in your question, it is understood that both lamps in Fig. 1 are running when the fuse is removed and that both lamps and motor are running in Fig. 2 when the fuse is removed.

I am a young man and am learning to be an operator. I took an examination in ——— several weeks ago and everything went all right except the figuring of the three-wire system on direct current. Will you please give me the correct answers on the following questions: How can you tell whether you are using D. C. or A. C. current? In the first diagram, on a three-wire system, there is 40 Amps. on one side of the line, and the other side of the line is 80 Amps.; now how shall I figure the 40 Amps. that is, drawing out of the 220 volts? Please give me the correct answers.— J. J. W., Massachusetts.

In using an arc on a projection machine you can very easily tell whether you are using A. C. or D. C. current, by lighting the lamp and letting it burn for a minute or so then cut it off and look at the carbons. If both carbons are hot an equal distance from the tips and in cooling off they cool about equal you are using A. C. current, but if one of the carbons (be sure it is the top or positive carbon, and if it is the lower carbon, then reverse the wires at the switch so that it will reverse the polarity of the lamp) is hotter than the other and takes longer to cool off then you are using D. C. current.

Fig. 1, at the bottom of the page, shows 40 Amps. on each side of the line with 40 Amps. on 220 and the fuses show 40 Amps. You are using 80 Amps. on the two outside wires and the neutral is not carrying anything.

Fig. 2 shows 3, 19, 40, 32, and 35 Amps. on one side of the line and 10, 20, 25 and 25 Amps. on the other side of the line with 5 Amps. on 220. Adding the first set of figures gives 129 Amps. plus the 5 Amps. on the 220, giving 134 Amps. on one side of the line.

Adding the second set of figures and we get 80 Amps. plus the 5 Amps. on the 220 which gives us 85 Amps. on the other side of the line. Subtract the 85 Amps. from the 134 Amps. and we get 49 Amps. which is carried on the neutral wire.

Fig. 3 shows 6, 9, 15 and 35 Amps. on one side of the line and 3, 10, 7, 5 and 40 Amps. on the other side of the line. Adding the first set of figures and we get 65 Amps. Adding the second line of figures and we get 65 Amps. The two lines are balanced so there is no load on the neutral.

In Fig. 1 the two outside fuses should be 80 Amps.

In Fig. 2 the load should be balanced and the 110 Amp. fuses used.

In Fig. 3 the load is balanced and the 70 Amp. fuses are heavy enough to carry the load.

New McClure Series

Frederick L. Collins, president of McClure Pictures, is now in Los Angeles perfecting plans for the production of the next McClure series of five-reel features that will follow "Seven Deadly Sins."

If the proper arrangements can be made, Mr. Collins immediately will open a studio in Los Angeles and begin producing the first plays in the new series. Shirley Mason, who has triumphed in "Seven Deadly Sins," is to be one of the many stars in the next McClure production, and as soon as the Los Angeles studio is ready, Miss Mason and a number of other players will go to Los Angeles.

Ralph Kohn, attorney for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has left New York for an extended tour of the country for the purpose of making a detailed investigation of film conditions. The leading cities included in his itinerary are Toronto, Denver, Salt Lake City, and San Francisco. Mr. Kohn's first stop will be Toronto where he will conduct a similar analytical study of conditions as they obtain across the border.

"Best Censor Bill Yet Drawn"

THE COMPLETE GUERNSEY BILL, LIKELY TO BECOME LAW IN ILLINOIS

(Note: An interesting discussion of this bill will be found on page 661 of this issue of Motography*)*

AN ACT regulating the censorship and exhibition of motion pictures.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the People of the State of Illinois, represented in the General Assembly: That the director of education and registration upon the taking effect of this Act shall, from time to time, employ a competent person who is well qualified by education and experience to act as censor of motion pictures under this Act. Such employe shall be known as the official motion picture censor. The censor shall be paid a salary to be fixed by the director of education and registration, with the approval of the governor, not to exceed three thousand five hundred dollars ($3,500) per annum, and shall execute a bond in the penal sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000) for the faithful performance of the duties of censors. The director of education and registration, with the approval of the governor, shall also employ such assistants and clerical help as shall, from time to time, be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, and fix their compensation.

Office Maintained in Chicago

Section 2. An office for the transaction of the business of the motion picture censorship shall be maintained in Chicago and at such other points in the state as shall be deemed necessary. Such office shall consist of suitable rooms and equipment for office and projection purposes.

Section 3. All motion picture films intended to be exhibited or displayed in the state of Illinois shall be submitted to the official censor and shall be publicly exhibited or displayed only upon the approval of the official censor, except where the decision of the official censor is reversed or modified upon appeal as provided herein, and in such other cases as are herein expressly excepted. Only such films as are, in the judgment and discretion of the official censor, of a moral, educational or amusing or harmless character, shall be approved by the official censor.

Section 4. When a film has been censored, a certificate showing the approval or rejection of such film shall be issued to the party submitting the same. When a film is approved by the official censor such a film shall be given an approval number which shall be shown on the certificate issued by the official censor, to the person submitting the film. Such certificate shall also show the title of such film and all eliminations, if any, ordered from such film. For each film so approved there shall be issued by the official censor an official leader or stamp of approval of not less than five (5) feet in length, bearing the words "approved by the official motion picture censor of the state of Illinois," and the number as assigned to such film, in the certificate of approval, together with such design engraved thereon as the official censor may prescribe. The official censor is authorized to recall any film for recensoring or to revoke any certificate permitting the exhibition of any film in the state of Illinois, whenever in his judgment the public welfare requires it. Before any motion picture film shall be publicly exhibited, all eliminations ordered by the official censor shall have been made by the person or persons loaning, renting or leasing such film or films to the exhibitor for exhibition. There shall be projected upon the screen, before the exhibition of any film, the design of the official leader or stamp of approval of not less than five (5) feet in length issued by the official censor.

Section 5. The official censor shall procure and use an official seal which shall contain the words "Illinois Motion Picture Censor," together with such design engrossed thereon as the official censor may prescribe.

Section 6. From and after ninety (90) days after this act shall take effect, no film may be publicly shown or exhibited within the state of Illinois unless approved by the official censor and numbered and endorsed as herein provided. No fee shall be charged for examining any film which has been given an unrestricted and unconditional permit by any municipal board of censors existing in Illinois prior to July 1, 1917, if in the discretion of the official censor hereby created it shall become necessary or desirable to again examine such film, and when any film is given an unrestricted and unqualified approval by the official censor, such film shall not be subject to any further censorship in any county, city, village or town in this state.

Fee of One Dollar Per Reel

Section 7. A fee of one dollar ($1.00) for each reel of film to be censored, which does not exceed one thousand (1,000) lineal feet and one dollar ($1.00) for each additional one thousand (1,000) lineal feet or fractional part thereof, shall be collected by the official censor for censoring each original film, and for copies or duplicates thereof twenty-five cents (25c) for each reel of film to be censored which does not exceed one thousand (1,000) lineal feet, and twenty-five cents (25c) for each additional one thousand (1,000) lineal feet or fractional part thereof. The fees so collected shall be paid each week into the state treasury.

Section 8. In carrying out the provisions of this act the official censor, with the approval of the director of education and registration shall adopt such reasonable rules and regulations not inconsistent with the laws of the state as shall be deemed necessary.

Section 9. The official censor and any assistant or employe of the censorship office may enter any place where films, reels or views are exhibited and shall have power to prevent the display or exhibition of any film, reel or view which has not been duly approved by the official censor. It shall be unlawful for any person to hinder or interfere in any manner with the official censor or any assistant or employe of the censorship office while performing any duty under the provisions of this act.

Section 11. The official censor may work in conjunction with any censor board or boards of legal status in other states as a censor congress, and the action of such congress in approving or rejecting films may be approved by the Illinois official motion picture censor, and all films passed, approved, stamped and numbered by such congress may be approved when the fees therefor have been paid to the Illinois official censor, without being again exhibited.

Section 12. No banner, poster or other like advertising matter used to announce or advertise any motion picture or the exhibition thereof, shall contain anything that is immoral or improper. A copy of all banners and posters intended for such advertising purposes shall be submitted to the official censor and no such banner or poster shall be used unless approved by the official censor.

Section 13. The Circuit court may review any decision of the director of education and registration, upholding the official censor, by writ of certiorari. Such writ shall be issued by the clerk of such court upon praecipe. Service upon the official censor or the director of education and registration shall be sufficient, or service may be had upon the official censor and other parties in interest by mail or notice of the commencement of the proceedings and the return day of the writ to the office of the official censor and the last known place o fresidence of the other parties in interest at least ten (10) days before the return day of said writ or any party in interest may commence a suit in chancery in the circuit court of the county where any of the parties defendant may be found, to review the decision. Such suit by writ of certiorari or in chancery shall be commenced within ten (10) days of the receipt of the notice of the decision. It shall be competent for the supreme court to require by certiorari or otherwise any such case, after final decision in the circuit court to be certified to the supreme court for its review and determination, with the same power and authority in the case and with like effect as if it had been carried by appeal or writ of error to the supreme court, proceedings for such review to be had in accordance with the provisions of section one hundred twenty-one (121) of an act entitled, "An Act in relation to practice and procedure in Courts of Record," approved June 3, 1907, in force July 1, 1907, as amended.

Section 14. The director of education and registration shall report in writing annually to the governor, within ten (10) days after the first day of November of each year. Buys Ultra Feature

Harry A. Samwick, of 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York City, has closed a deal with A. J. Cobe, president of the Ultra Pictures Corp., whereby he secures the sole rights for New York and Northern New Jersey for the initial release of the Ultra "The Woman Who Dared," featuring Beatriz Michelena. Mr. Samwick will handle the picture personally and see that everything receives the proper attention. He states that this is the only way that he can be sure that the exhibitor can be assured of proper care.

New Comedy Producers

WILLIAM FOX ORGANIZES "SUNSHINE COMEDY CO." FOUR COMPANIES TO WORK

WILLIAM FOX has added to his already extensive motion picture enterprises by the formation of a new comedy producing organization. In addition to the regular Foxfilm comedy releases, the Fox program will now offer the entire output of "The Sunshine Comedy Company." Mr. Fox is the president of the new organization and Henry "Pathe" Lehrman is the vice-president and general manager.

News of this project was made public this week on the return of Mr. Lehrman to Los Angeles for a conference with Mr. Fox, who is now visiting the West Coast studios at Hollywood.

The new company will have its producing studios in Hollywood, where, within the next week or ten days, four companies will be put to work, making comedies, under the direction and supervision of Mr. Lehrman for the Fox program. Present plans contemplate the production of a two-reel comedy every other week.

Three Companies Already Organized

Mr. Lehrman has announced that three companies have already been organized. Billie Ritchie who was taken to the coast by Mr. Lehrman two years ago, together with Gertrude Selby, who was one of the first players of the original Lehrman comedy company, will be the leads of one company, to be directed by David Kirkland, who has been affiliated with Lehrman for more than a year.

In addition to supervising the production of all comedies, Mr. Lehrman will direct one company and play leads himself. Opposite him will be Mildred Lee, who accompanied him from New York. H. I. Symonds and Nool Smith, who were formerly directors for a Lehrman

"Music hath charms to enrage the savage actor," is the way the poem will have to be edited to fit modern conditions in films. During many of the scenes taken now in the Fox studios music is kept on tap to aid in sweeping appropriate emotions from the souls of the interpreters of the silent drama.

comedy enterprise, will direct the third company. The players for this company have not yet been selected.

Lehrman has already produced and starred in one comedy for the Foxfilm Program. This picture is "The House of Terrible Scandals." Billie Ritchie and Gertrude Selby appear in the picture with Mr. Lehrman. "The House of Terrible Scandals" has been called by reviewers the greatest motion picture comedy ever produced.

Henry Lehrman began work in motion pictures while they were still in their infancy. He himself was not far out of his. He started with the Pathe company as an extra, but his light could not be hidden beneath a bushel basket. Quickly rising to the fore as a comedy actor, he soon proved that he was more valuable than the directors who had charge of him. So long as he made suggestions, their comedies were successful; when he ceased they stopped getting laughs.

His value meanwhile had been recognized by other companies and he soon joined with Mack Sennett in forming the Keystone company. This partnership lasted about three years. Then Lehrman withdrew and took charge of the Ford Sterling company which released through Universal.

A short time later he formed the L-Ko company, continuing to release on the Universal program. With this company he remained until his recent arrangement with William Fox.

Third Max Linder Essanay

Max Linder's third Essanay comedy is well under way. Having recruited a full company, from leading lady to the last property boy, the noted European comedian is keeping his studio at Culver City, Cal., going full blast. So far, the title of the production has not been announced. It will be released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service.

Exhibitors handling the Linder-Essanay comedies are praising the co-operative advertising plan which President Spoor is working out for newspaper displays of productions. By virtue of the "fifty-fifty" agreement, Essanay already has expended $35,000 in advertisement for exhibitors of their showings of "Max Comes Across." Thus exhibitors have obtained $70,000 worth of advertising at half that cost to themselves.

An equal amount, if not more, is now being spent in newspaper display "ads" of "Max Wants a Divorce," the comedian's second Essanay production. According to early reports, the comedy is making a bigger hit, even, than did the first.

"Max Wants a Divorce," which was released March 26, had initial showings in Chicago at Jones, Linick and Schaefer's Rialto Theater, in the Loop district, and at the Strand Theater in New York. It is now being shown throughout the country, and, according to reports, is "tickling the sides of the nation."

"Hari Kari" for the Screen

The California Motion Picture Corporation has started work upon "Hari Kari," a screen adaptation of Julian Johnson's play by the same name. It will be remembered that Mr. Johnson's drama was exploited with much success by Holbrook Blinn and his company of players.

While a Japanese feature in its primary intent, "Hari Kari" is quite different from other Japanese stories which have recently been worked into photoplays. It is declared to be timely and decidedly significant of worldwide politics and international relations at the present time, without intent of being applicable only, or even particularly, to the nationalities involved in its development.

The producers claim that the leading role, that of an admiral's daughter, gives Miss Lois Wilson unusual opportunity to display the full range of her dramatic gifts. Also Frances Burnham is expected to distinguish herself through an impersonation of a young and designing widow.

Captain Leslie T. Peacocke prepared the story in scenario. It is being produced under the direction of Norval MacGregor.

Cast for Ann Murdock

Among the interesting artists who will appear in support of Miss Ann Murdock in her first Empire All Star Corporation picture, "Outcast," the great Frohman stage success being produced for Mutual release, will be Miss Kathryn Calvert, the wife of the late playwright, Paul Armstrong. Miss Calvert, a dark-haired young woman with striking beauty, will appear as "Valentine," a society girl who represents the other end of the social scale from that in which "Miriam" (Miss Murdock) starts out.

Besides Miss Calvert, will appear Kate Sargentson, the noted actress who has already been chosen for the next Frohman stage production. Jules Raucourt, the noted French actor who appeared with Miss Murdock in her production of "Please Help Emily," Herbert Auling, who has played in many of the Frohman stage hits, Richard Hatteras, Reginald Corrington, Zola Tolma, Gertrude Andrews and Frank Goldsmith.

As already announced, David Powell, the talented player whose most recent appearance was with Clara Kimball Young in "The Price She Paid," will play Miss Murdock's leading support.

The picture is well under way at the Empire-Mutual studios at Glendale, L. I., under the direction of John B. O'Brien, the noted director.

Jackie Saunders in "Sunny Jane"

The date of the first release of "Sunny Jane," the initial offering of the new Mutual series presenting Jackie Saunders, under the supervision of E. D. Horkheimer, has been set for March 26.

Three of this series of plays were written by H. O. Stechhan, author of the book and play "Balboa," a story of the life of the discoverer of the Pacific Ocean, from which book the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, of Long Beach, California, took its name.

Mr. Stechman wrote "Sunny Jane," "The Wildcat," and a third play yet to be named, all at the personal solicitation of Miss Saunders, and they have so pleased the sunkist star that she is doing the best work of her career in them.

Desmond in Newspaper Play

William Desmond, who is said to be fast entwining himself in the hearts of the American public as one of the foremost interpreters of serio-comic screen delineations, soon will make his appearance on the Triangle-Kay-Bee program, when he is presented by Thomas H. Ince in "Paddy O'Hara," by J. G. Hawks. This is the story of a present-day newspaper correspondent, and is said to be rich in unusual situations and vivid action.

Desmond, in the title role, is seen as the star reporter on a London daily paper, and rollicks through his every scene with sparkling humor and daredevil Irish wit. Upon the outbreak of hostilities between two imaginary Balkan principalities, he is chosen, because of his quick wit and undaunted courage, to secure, at any price, authentic news from the front. He not only secures the greatest "scoop" in modern journalism, but rescues the Princess Maryska, the only daughter of a great potentate, and brings her triumphantly home to share his Irish hearthstone.

Mary McIvor, as the Princess Maryska, is seen in her second leading portrayal, and is said to invest the part with the simplicity of charm and youthfulness.

"God's Man" Brings Inquiries

Requests for information on dates open for bookings of "God's Man," the ten-reel production of the Frohman Amusement Corporation featuring H. B. Warner, are being received with regularity.

Joseph W. Farnham, exploiting the Frohman productions, has been deluged with inquiries and offers for territory and with requests for dates for booking. These latter in a large measure come from exhibitors who have enjoyed success with the previous Frohman productions, "Just Out of College"; "The Conquest of Canaan"; and "The Witching Hour." Mr. Frohman says:

> Although I have most freely predicted that "God's Man" is a production which will undeniably take its rank as a leader among worthy accomplishments in motion picture productions, still, my most ardent anticipations have been acceded by the number of inquiries and offers which we have already had for this production. To date, in response to the comparatively small amount of advertising which we have done, more than three hundred applications for territorial rights have been received.

Chaplin Spoils the Fun

Let it be known to those who did not know it before that Charlie Chaplin's moustache is cut according to the army regulations of the British war office, wherein it was decreed that the Tommies cut off their facial adornment neatly at both sides, instead of letting it grow to the ends of the lips. But regulations and moustaches have been revised to comply with the wishes expressed by Sir John French, who wrote:

> In view of the further fact that the moustache worn by His Majesty's forces in support of Order 26983406, is of a type now come to be recognized throughout the world as "the Chaplin" and since said Chaplin is a motion picture comedian of vogue among troops serving on practically all fronts, such type of moustache must be regarded as subverting the dignity of His Majesty's troops in the field. It is therefore to be desired that a general order issue effecting such change in the moustache as shall render it insusceptible of being confounded with the "Chaplin" moustache.

New Fox Directors

William Fox makes two important announcements with reference to directors this week: the first, that George H. Melford, one of the Jesse Lasky film makers, will join the Fox organization in May; the second, that Richard Stanton will screen the next Dustin Farnum production.

Among Mr. Melford's features for Lasky are numbered "Young Romance," "Stolen Goods," "The Marriage of Kitty," "The Immigrant," "The Cheat," "To Have and to Hold," and many others. He also acted in and directed several subjects for Kalem.

Mr. Stanton has been in charge of Gladys Brockwell's photodramas of late. He came to William Fox about six months ago, and since that time has filmed "The Beast," with George Walsh; "The Love Thief," "One Touch of Sin," and another screen play not yet issued.

The Story's the Thing

SCENARIO WRITER APPEALS TO EXHIBITORS—OTHER INTERESTING ARTICLES

An Appeal to Exhibitors

By Mildred Considine
Chicago Scenario Writer.

MR. EXHIBITOR, it's up to you! You are the hope of all the authors of today and the future. You have their fate in your hands and it is within your power to decide just what sort of photoplays you want in your theaters.

You know your audiences. The money in your cash box tells you whether or not a picture has been a success and it is natural to suppose that you are anxious to show only those pictures which will swell your profits. This may seem a sordid view to take, but even an author has a mental vision of a Dollar Mark flitting in and out of his mind during the process of a Great Idea! Art for Art's sake is a glorious thought—but a vivid imagination can conjure up the picture of a lamb chop very easily and if the desire for one is very keen, it works havoc with the inspiration.

Sometimes, I believe that an author is entirely left out of an exhibitor's idea of a picture. He sees it as a finished product, and probably thinks that, like "Topsy," it just growed. He doesn't realize that the nothingness from which it apparently sprung, is really the basic foundation without which there would be no picture!

The market is flooded with pictures by well known authors, who receive large sums of money for any sort of an effort. Producers and exhibitors accept them because of the reputation of the authors. This is a death-blow to young authors who have good stuff to sell but find that all doors are closed to their pleas because they are unknown.

Also, the purchasing of material from well known authors, using the name of the author and the title of the book for advertising purposes, and then completely changing the story, as was done in a recent release from a novel by Richard Harding Davis, in which a beauty famed for her back was featured, seems to me a great injustice to everybody. The public reads a book and then goes to a theater, expecting to see it filmed and finds itself looking at a collection of twaddle. Why not rather a good picture from an unknown pen? It would be fairer.

An unknown writer is like a homeless alley cat who sneaks along wearily, hoping to find a stray morsel to stay its hunger. Its eyes shine longingly at the sight of some bit, and it starts toward it timidly, only to have it snatched away by the sleek, well-fed cats who peer from every gateway!

Some of the cleverest material for pictures fade into the void from which they came and the public keeps on crying: "Give us better pictures!"

The young and unknown author should be given his chance. It should not be so utterly impossible for him to gain recognition. As it is now, the pendulum swings too far in either direction, an equilibrium should be reached.

Let the exhibitor demand a certain kind of photoplay and if the well known writer cannot supply him, make him insist that the others be given an opportunity. If the exhibitor will get in touch with the producing concerns and make them understand that the foisting of weak material upon the public is a serious matter, a different condition is bound to occur, because the exhibitor is the man who supplies the producing concerns with their incomes! Please, Mr. Exhibitor, have a heart! Demand better stories. No matter how big a star you present, if the story is weak your patrons are not satisfied. Drop a note to your producers and ask them to select their scenarios from a wider range of writers, and get good stories whether the author of them be known or otherwise.

Need for Stories Written Specially for Screen

Captain Leslié T. Peacocke, Balboa, scenario editor and director and author of "Neptune's Daughter" and other important features, has the following to say about the present screen story situation:

The coming year will see stage play and fiction story adaptations in the discard, and original stories specially written for the screen will be the only things in demand. I know that, personally, I have found very few stage plays or books or fiction stories of much value for screen adaptation, although I have been forced to make many such adaptations; but have found the task in most cases akin to trying to make silk purses out of sows' ears.

Nearly all the really big money makers have been productions made from stories specially written for the screen, and this should speak for itself. Most of the big "flivvers" which have caused serious financial losses, have been adaptations of stage plays and books—and this fact must surely quell any attempt at argument.

Author Coming Into His Own

By Guy Price
Photoplay Editor, Los Angeles Evening Herald.

"Every dog has its day," rambles the old saying; so everybody in the various branches of pictures.

In 1915 the actor came into his own. It was during that period that many of the footlight celebrities jumped to the studio and left the ranks of the "speakie" actors sadly and sorely depleted. Salaries leaped to unheard-of figures and as a result the little fellows benefited by the change in financial status of the big ones.

Last year—1916—was virtually the director's year. Several came before the public eye prominently and four or five accomplished things in a cinema way that forever gave them a place in the hall of flicker fame. A few of these that could be mentioned are D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett and Cecil de Mille.

The way now appears to be open for the author. At no time since the motion picture art has flourished has there been such an opportunity for the fellow who writes film plots.

Every studio, every manager, every director and every actor, almost, are shouting from the housetops for good stories. Shouting is hardly the word, either; crying better expresses the plaintive wail. There has been a serious dearth of picture material for a long time. Fabulous sums are offered for big themes and as the demand grows greater the supply grows less, the effect being the boosting of scenario prices to the sky.

The writing situation has come to this: For good ideas the producers will pay your own figure—almost; all you need do is fill out the check.

So it would seem that the poor, abused, unrecognized author would really come into his own very soon.

"COUNTRY LIFE STORIES"

Paula Blackton Films Feature at Famous Artists' Club —Released Solely Through Vitagraph-V. L. S. E.—Dates Set

The six one and two-reel pictures comprising Paula Blackton's Country Life stories, which have occupied the attention of New York's "Four Hundred" this last winter as the most novel entertainment feature of the season, were shown recently as a special attraction to the members of the famous Salmagundi Club in New York.

The Salmagundi Club is an organization of world-renowned artists. Included in its membership rolls are the names of all the great contemporary painters. Its exhibitions are events of the New York season.

When Paula Blackton's Country Life stories had been shown there, they evoked the most unstinted and unanimous praise. On all sides was the same comment, that Paula Blackton had succeeded in accomplishing on the screen what these noted men of the brush and palette held could be, but had not been, done in motion pictures.

The request for the private exhibition of the whole six pictures in the series came from several members of the Salmagundi Club having seen "The Diary of a Puppy," one of the three one-reel subjects, at the Rialto Theater. "This happy confection," as one of the artists called it, brought on the desire to see its five brothers in the series.

So "The Collie Market," "The Little Strategist," and "The Fairy Godfather," the three two-reel stories, and "A Spring Idyll" and "Satin and Calico," the other one-reel productions, were shown to the Salmagundi members.

All of these pictures were made at "Harbourwood," the Blackton country estate at Oyster Bay, where it adjoins the famous Theodore Roosevelt estate on Sagamore Hill. Mrs. Blackton herself originated the stories. Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, director general of the Vitagraph company, personally staged every one of the six.

"The Diary of a Puppy" will be released on March 26, followed a week later by "The Collie Market." Thereafter the pictures rotate, as to one and two-reel subjects, until all six have been released, "The Fairy Godfather" being the last, on April 30.

Prints of all six subjects have already been shipped to the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. exchanges throughout the country. Special one and three-sheet posters and advance slides have been prepared on each picture.

Crane Wilbur at Screen Ball

Crane Wilbur, the Mutual star, was responsible for a great share of the success of the first motion picture ball ever held in Kansas City.

Mr. Wilbur was introduced as the guest of honor of the evening and after making a short speech in turn introduced the other film players present. Following the presentation came the grand march led by Crane Wilbur and Mrs. Newman, wife of the president of the Kansas City Screen Club.

One of the features of the evening was a contest of impersonations of screen favorites. Leslie Kelly was awarded the first prize for his very clever impersonation of Charlie Chaplin.

We Accept a Bouquet

I am much interested in your paper, especially in your section "What the Pictures Did for Me," which contains very valuable information.

We have found your reviews of features always fair and accurate.—A. O. Landry, proprietor, Victor Theater, Abbeville, Louisiana.

"DUPED" CHAPLIN FILM

George W. Bradenburgh, of Philadelphia, Indicted for Selling Mutual Chaplin Comedy—Other Prosecutions Coming

George W. Bradenburgh, of Philadelphia, a former alderman of that city and in his way nationally known in the film business, is under federal indictment for "duping" a Mutual-Chaplin comedy film.

The indictment was returned by the United States grand jury sitting at Philadelphia on March 8. The specific charge is violation of the copyright law by the making of a "duplicate" print of the Mutual-Chaplin comedy entitled "The Floorwalker," and offering it for sale in England.

The indictment of Bradenburgh is the fruit of a ten months' campaign by the legal and secret service departments of the Mutual Film Corporation, in co-operation with the federal authorities and the forces of the office of United States District Attorney Sterrett in Philadelphia.

Linked with this prosecution are indictments and cases in the state courts involving about twenty other individuals in various parts of the United States. Other phases of the prosecution extend to foreign parts, where representatives of the Mutual are seeking action under the criminal laws.

Bradenburgh was taken into custody in Philadelphia on March 8 and arraigned before the United States commissioner and held to the grand jury prior to the indictment.

"This is a good start," observed Mr. Freuler, on receiving a report from the Mutual's legal department, "but there will be many another prosecution to come. The efforts of our investigation department are beginning to pull in a flood of evidence against the pirates who have so long preyed on the film trade. Most of these pirates have escaped serious prosecution and punishment because the film men have been too busy. Now that the industry is beginning to get something of the form of definite organization and a code of practice, it is to be hoped that every reputable concern in the business will protect its rights and property in the courts."

"Deemster" in New England

Louis Mayer, of Boston, who exploited "The Birth of a Nation" in the East, has purchased the New England exhibition rights to the Arrow Corporation's production of "The Deemster," and will give the picture a run at a leading Boston theater prior to its booking with exhibitors. Mr. Mayer paid a record price for this picture—$35,000.

World Posters in Demand

Last September the advertising department of World Pictures Brady-made began issuing advance one-sheets lithographed in colors for the use of exhibitors. The new feature of these posters was that they carried the name of the approaching picture, but no mention of the producing corporation.

The idea was that the one-sheets should appeal on their artistic merits alone, and great care was expended upon them. The best poster artists were engaged, and the printing development was very closely watched. Exhibitors in various cities report that numbers of their patrons apply for the one-sheets and have started making poster collections.

Irene Howley with Triangle

Irene Howley, who is featured with Frank Currier in "Her Father's Keeper," the first production from the studios of the Triangle-Eastern Fine Arts, has appeared in many well-known productions before coming under Triangle management.

Irene Howley, who is now making her first Triangle picture.

Miss Howley made her screen debut as a member of the old Biograph stock company, later on filling engagements with Reliance, Famous Players and Metro.

Some of the better known features in which she has won wide popularity have been "The Moth and the Flame," "The Heart of Jennifer," "The Wages of Sin," "The Fatal Wedding" and "The Road to Yesterday."

She was recently co-starred with William Nigh in "Life's Shadows," with Lionel Barrymore in "A Yellow Streak" and "His Father's Son" (released March 19), and was also headlined with Ralph Herz in "The Purple Lady."

Although she is by no means prosaic, Irene Howley acknowledges Brooklyn as her birthplace, and seems proud of the fact. After graduating from public and private schools in that well-known suburb, she ran away to go on the stage, appearing first in "Havana," as one of the original "Hello Girls" octette. Later on she created a great vogue in vaudeville as "The Manhattan Girl."

A brunette of distinctly intellectual type, Miss Howley is fitted to create roles in which brains count as well as beauty.

Anna Luther Goes East

Anne Luther, on her way to visit her home in New York after an absence of two years spent in the Pacific Coast film world, paused in Chicago just long enough to state that she is very well satisfied with her contract with Thomas Ince and that she is to play dramatic roles and not comedy. "Don't mention comedy to me," she begged. "I don't like comedy and don't intend to play in it again."

Miss Luther, who is a rouge-haired beauty of a vivacious, wide-awake type, has risen to prominence rapidly. Her most recent work has been with the western company of William Fox players, with whom she appeared both in dramas and comedies. Miss Luther's trip east is part of a vacation before beginning work with Ince.

A FILM BIRTHDAY

First Year of Brady-Made World Films Concludes with Release in April of "Forget-Me-Not," Starring Kitty Gordon

The anniversary of Brady-Made World Film productions at the closing of the first year of output under this brand will occur with the release, on April 16, of "Forget-Me-Not," featuring Kitty Gordon.

The release of the next few months, inaugurating the second World-Brady year, promise many interesting things. Alice Brady will be seen in "Darkest Russia," Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley in "The Page Mystery," Muriel Ostriche and Arthur Ashley in "The Wit of a Woman," Ethel Clayton and Montagu Love in "Pretty Polly Pollard," Alice Brady in "Maternity" and Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge and Evelyn Greeley in "The Price of Pride."

"Forget-Me-Not," which is based on the play in which Rose Coghlan formerly starred, was produced in Cuba by Emile Chautard, Miss Gordon's company including Montagu Love, Alec B. Francis, George MacQuarrie, Lillian Herbert and Norma Phillips. Kitty Gordon is one of the foremost World Film stars. Earlier in the year Miss Gordon was seen in "The Crucial Test" and "Her Maternal Right." Other Kitty Gordon productions are in preparation.

Consistent Program in First Year

The list of fifty-two photodramas released during the year by World Film is a notable one.

"The Closed Road," with House Peters and Barbara Tennant, was the first offering released by the World Film after William A. Brady became director general. During the year Alice Brady has starred in such brilliant screen plays as "The Dancer's Peril," in which she portrayed a danseuse of the Imperial Russian Ballet, "The Hungry Heart," adapted from the stage success, "Frou-Frou," "A Woman Alone," "Bought and Paid For," based on the successful George Broadhurst drama, "The Gilded Cage," "Miss Petticoats," "La Vie De Boheme" and "Tangled Fates."

During the year Clara Kimball Young, Gail Kane and Robert Warwick made frequent appearances on the World Film program.

Marie Dressler's appearance in the comedy, "Tillie Wakes Up," was the first entirely farcical contribution to the World program. It was so successful that Mr. Brady decided to make comedy a distinct part of next year's program.

Muriel Ostriche, Holbrook Blinn, Edna Wallace Hopper, E. K. Lincoln, Montagu Love, June Elvidge, Arthur Ashley, Mollie King, Evelyn Greeley, Gerda Holmes and Frances Nelson have been prominent in the year's releases.

Essanay Makes "On Trial"

Half of the scenes for "On Trial" have been filmed by Essanay. The picturization of Cohan and Harris' tensely dramatic stage hit is steadily progressing. Its release date will be announced shortly.

"On Trial" was one of the most vivid and life-like portrayals of a big murder trial ever put on the stage. It ran a year solid on Broadway, had a run of five months in Chicago, and created an equal sensation throughout the country from coast to coast.

James Young is directing the production. Sydney Ainsworth, who has won popularity throughout the country with his strong character roles in "The Prince of Graustark," "The Chaperon" and other productions, plays the part of the half-crazed Strickland. Mr. Young has the role of Trask; Barbara Castleton will be seen as Mrs. Strickland, Corene Uzzell as Mrs. Trask and little Mary McAlister as Doris Strickland.

"On Trial" will have a screen time of approximately 1 hour, 15 minutes.

Billie Rhodes Comedies for Mutual

Billie Rhodes, the renowned comedienne, will be featured in a series of fifty-two one-reel comedies to be released through Mutual under the general title of Strand Comedies.

Miss Rhodes will be assisted in the evoking of laughter by Jay Belasco, of the famous Belasco family, and well known for his work in juvenile leads on the stage, vaudeville and the screen. The production of the Strand Comedies will be under the direction of Al Christie.

John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, has signed a contract with H. B. Caulfield, of the Caulfield Photoplay Company, for this series of comedies. These comedies will be scheduled for release through Mutual on Wednesday of each week starting April 11. The first three releases will be "Her Hero," April 11; "When Mary Took the Count," April 18, and "And in Walked Uncle," April 25.

"The Strand Comedies," says Mr. Freuler, "will give the exhibitor just the class of picture which will please everyone in his audience. Utterly devoid of any element of slapstick, the Strand Comedies are filled with clean, wholesome fun. They are built around the love affairs, quarrels and adventures of young people, and depict laughable incidents of every-day life played by real human people."

A. J. Cobe, president of the Ultra Pictures Corp., has left for another short trip through the middle west to adjust a few trifling matters with various exchanges handling Ultra Pictures and upon his return will stay in New York for a short time and then leave for an extended tour of the entire country.

AMONG SELZNICK STARS

"Why I Left My Husband," Story of a Woman Written by a Woman for Clara Kimball Young, Will Be Star's Next Vehicle

"A woman can write better woman stories than a man," says Lewis J. Selznick. It is partly for that reason that the next play in which Clara Kimball Young is to be filmed has been written by the noted woman novelist, Virginia Terhune Van De Water. The title of the story is "Why I Left My Husband." It reveals financial difficulties as a frequent cause for domestic infelicity.

Miss Young has just returned from Virginia, where the outdoor scenes were made for "The Easiest Way," and will begin work in a few days on the new picture. Charles Giblyn, who directed "The Price She Paid," is making the photo-drama adaptation from Mrs. Van De Water's story.

Recently Mrs. Van De Water has made a close study of Miss Young's work on the screen, and it is expected that "Why I Left My Husband" will be followed by a series of big, vital stories by this author for the popular Selznick star.

Selznick Secures State Rights Plays

Lewis J. Selznick added another special feature film to his state rights purchases this week by a deal with Sol Lesser of San Francisco, for the New York state and northern New Jersey rights to "The Ne'er-Do-Well," Selig's famous picturization of the popular novel by Rex Beach.

Greater New York City will be handled through the New York Selznick Exchange in charge of Sol J. Berman, while the rest of New York state will be booked through the Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Inc., of Buffalo.

This transaction is of interest in view of Mr. Selznick's purchase of state rights in New York for "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" and "Enlighten Thy Daughter."

Herbert Brenon is in New Orleans, where he took his company to begin work on his third Selznick picture, "The Lone Wolf." This is an adaptation of the novel of the same name by Louis Joseph Vance, the popular fiction writer. The book has run through several editions, and a new edition is now being rushed through the press, to supply the constant demand.

"The Lone Wolf" gets its name from a mysterious criminal who operates with the greatest ease and secrecy and preys upon people of wealth. While "The Lone Wolf," is at the height of his success, he falls in love. Through the girl he is at last led into a trap.

New Art Dramas Scenario Editor

Benjamin S. Kutler has been engaged by Harry Raver, president of Apollo Pictures, Inc., as scenario editor for that company, which releases its productions on the Art Dramas program. Mr. Kutler is a photo-playwright of many years' standing, and has adapted for the screen many original stories and plays from the legitimate stage. He is also the author of a number of original scenarios, which have been produced by various manufacturers.

Mr. Kutler was a member of the original staff of the Universal Company's scenario department, and later scenario editor of the All-Star Feature Corporation. While there, Mr. Kutler collaborated with Augustus

Thomas in the writing of "The Education of Mr. Pipp." He was next engaged by the Popular Plays and Players.

Mr. Kutler was also on the scenario staff of Pathe-Freres for quite some time, and wrote a number of successful original stories while there. In addition to his work while engaged by individual companies, he has also written a number of original stories and adaptations.

CONTEMPORARY CELEBRATES

Moving Picture World Marks Tenth Anniversary with Big Banquet Given to the Trade—Two Hundred Men Present

On Saturday, March 17, the Moving Picture World celebrated its tenth anniversary with a dinner in the North Ballroom of the Hotel Astor. Over two hundred members of the business side of filmdom were present to enjoy with the World's staff this recognition of the tenth milestone in its successful career.

The first call for dinner was sent out through the anterooms at about eight o'clock, nearly everyone then being present in answer to a seven o'clock invitation. As not all moving picture people are on jovial terms with their brethren, some cards were deftly switched from one table to another, and then the affair began.

The dinner was punctuated here and there with comedy sketches written by members of the World staff, and performed by screen actors on a platform at one end of the room. Certain film companies and executives were represented in these burlesques, and they received the exaggerated references in the good humor in which they were sent.

Men, laden with bags of money, struggled through the aisles between the tables at different times, representing Charlie Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks going home on paydays. Sam Spedon and Thornton Fisher contributed to the entertainment with some rapid charcoal sketches. Walter Hill of Bluebird talked long and earnestly to Fisher to the end that the latter was to draw a bluebird for the people's edification. The only bird that Fisher drew, however, was a beast that was at best a mosquito and maybe worse—thereby disturbing Hill's piece of mind.

The following were present:

Kerrigan Still on Tour

J. Warren Kerrigan, the noted screen star, will extend his tour of the United States until June 1, because of requests from exhibitors in numerous cities not included in the original itinerary, who desire to bring the photoplayer before their patrons. The first schedule of Kerrigan's tour would have returned him to Los Angeles the middle of April.

Seventy cities of the Southwest, South and East have been visited by Kerrigan to date. On March 24 he will have covered half of the nation when he appears in Worcester, Mass. He will then go north and into the Middle West, over the Canadian border, and then to the Northwest and British Columbia.

The last half of the rearranged schedule includes the following cities: Albany, Troy, Schenectady, Syracuse, Rochester and Buffalo (New York); Toronto, Hamilton, Montreal and Calgary (Canada); Cleveland and Telodo (Ohio); Chicago and Bloomington (Ill.); South Bend and New Albany (Indiana); Louisville, Ky.; Cincinnati, O.; Milwaukee, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Des Moines, Omaha, Sioux City, Kansas City, St. Louis, Burlington, Topeka, Denver, Duluth, Salt Lake City, Ogden, Butte, Spokane, Seattle, Tacoma, Vancouver, Portland, Sacramento, Stockton, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Returning to Los Angeles, Kerrigan will immediately start work on the first of his new productions under his own name.

CATHOLIC FILMS IN THEATERS

"Catholic Truth Films," Produced by Unique Film Corporation, to Go Into Leading Theaters, and Then Sell State Rights

Some misunderstanding was caused by the announcement of the Unique Film Corporation in relation to their production of the "Catholic Truth Film" series. The impression was created that they were to be shown in parish halls and churches, but Herman W. McLeod, president of the corporation, denies this intention, stating that the plan of distribution is on state rights' basis, after a number of the leading cities have been played under Catholic auspices in regular theaters only.

In each of the principal cities of the country, committees are now being formed to facilitate the showing of the films, and to arrange local presentation under the auspices of the most powerful local societies or combination of Catholic clubs. These committees could also complete arrangements with local societies in even the smaller towns, should it be deemed advisable, so that in every community the film would be assured of big patronage at advanced prices, out of which the local church interests would get their share. Of course these arrangements would make the film vastly more valuable to the state rights' buyers, who thereby, has his exploitation work practically done in advance for him.

Great interest in the proposition is being taken by the Catholic clergy throughout the country, and various Catholic papers, published all over the United States and Canada, have heartily endorsed the whole plan in their editorial columns.

Preliminary work is being done now on Bishop Anderson's play, "A Dream of Empire," and this will be put into actual production upon the arrival of Signor Camiller, the director-in-chief, who is now on his way from Europe.

Big Show for Poor Children

"A Poor Little Rich Girl" entertained 3,500 settlement children of Chicago recently when this latest Mary Pickford-Artcraft subject was shown at the Auditorium. This special presentation, which was given in the morning, was through an arrangement made by The Chicago Daily News, a newspaper which, in addition to its photoplay section, runs a daily series of Mary Pickford talks.

The youngsters followed with keen interest the career of the neglected little heroine, cheered her in her pranks and hissed her oppressors. Although her life was in far different surroundings from their own, little "Gwendolen," as Mary Pickford presented her, is as much a "real kid" as any little urchin in the audience.

In addition to the picture, the children were entertained by Miss Georgina Faulkner, the well-known "story-lady," who outlined the plot of the play for the youngsters, and by little Joan Peters, a seven-year-old dancer, who gave a program of character dances.

The settlement workers who assisted in the affair were emphatic in their praise of the entertainment and its value to the children.

Fairbanks Wins Another Contest

Douglas Fairbanks, the new Artcraft conquest, has been voted the favorite actor by the Princeton senior class at an election held at the home of the famous college in New Jersey, which incidentally is the locale of his first picture under the Artcraft banner, "In Again—Out Again" by Anita Loos.

Two appointments recently made in the western branches of the Mutual Film Corporation are those of Mr. Merrick as manager of the Seattle, Washington, exchange, and A. S. Kirkwood as manager of the Portland, Oregon, office.

"Max Wants a Divorce"

Second Max Linder-Essanay Comedy. Released Through K. E.S.E. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A CLEAN, clever comedy, which has enough slapstick to please patrons who insist upon slapstick but which avoids any vulgarity and has a number of humorous twists of plot, is a fair description of this second Max Linder offering from the Essanay studios. It is suitable for audiences of every grade. It is a well produced offering, carefully directed and photographed. Two pretty girls, one of them Francine Larrimore, support Linder. There are a number of comedy characterizations of the eccentric inmates of an insane asylum, and while this type of humor is not very new, it is always a laugh-maker. As a whole, the release is a worthy one.

The Story: Immediately after his marriage Max receives the announcement of the death of his uncle who leaves him a large fortune provided he remains unmarried. Max promptly decides to divorce his bride. This begins a furious quarrel between the two. When a truce is declared, Max promises the girl a pearl necklace if she will divorce him. After the fortune is his, he promises to marry her again. The bride agrees and Max plans to compromise himself so that his bride can get a divorce. He has a hard time making love to a girl who is not interested in him, hoping every minute that his wife will arrive with the detectives. His wife, meanwhile, disguised as a maid, is watching Max's predicament. The detective gets into the wrong apartment and is mistaken for a lunatic. Before the end of the play, the others also get into the same apartment, of a lunacy specialist, and are imprisoned. Max and his bride escape and decide to let the fortune go. Then they receive a second message correcting the first and announcing that the money is Max's provided he does not remain unmarried.

"Satan's Private Door"

Five-Reel Essanay K. E. S. E. Release of March 19. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE reformation of a household of quarrelsome, discontented people through the introduction of an outsider of high ideals and sweet disposition is not a new theme for a story. Usually the good influence is exerted by a child. However, at the present time, when the tendency has been to feature evil of various kinds, a return to this early theme is refreshing, especially when not a child but a young woman, far removed from the ingenue, is the heroine. Mary Charleson as Edith Conway is the good angel of this story.

The first reel shows the results of too much money and too little restraint in the family of Thomas Chatterton. Into this unpleasant atmosphere comes Edith Conway, an unwelcome guest. Her influence and the gradual change of heart of the various members of the family could, it seems, have been the subject of interesting though not sensational character drawings, especially with such capable players as Miss Charleson, John Cossar, Hazel Daly, U. K. Haupt, and Webster Campbell.

Unfortunately this is not the case, and the story somehow descends to a hackneyed type. The heroine, partly because of the rather "preachy" speeches given her by the subtitles, does not escape being something of a prig. Melodrama is introduced to quicken the action, but the story becomes confused and not very convincing. The production in fact does not reach the standard set by previous Essanay features.

As a theater offering, the release is nevertheless fairly good. It is an especially fitting Sunday subject and is also suitable for a family program. The picture will offend no one, and it will please those who like a moral lesson in their stories. The story was written by Sam W. Small, directed by Charles Haydon.

The Story: Thomas Chatterton, a wealthy man, is unhappy because of the wildness of his son, Joseph, and the frivolity of his daughter, Anne, who quarrels with her husband and neglects her baby. Edith Conway, daughter of a former friend of Chatterton's, becomes a member of the family. She proves a real companion to Chatterton but is hated by his son and daughter, who believe she wishes to marry their father for his money. Edith makes Joseph see the error of his ways. Then she wins the confidence of Anne and when the latter becomes entangled in a scandal, she saves her. In the end, the various members of the family become reconciled and Edith marries the son.

"The Ham That Was"

Essanay "Black Cat" Story of Vaudeville Life. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

AN amusing and realistic sketch of the life of circus and cheap-vaudeville "artists" is this short-length picture play in the "Black Cat" series. The material is unhackneyed, interesting and human. The play itself is a good example of the new type of humor which is coming into pictures, the humor which is based upon a distinctivc "slant" on life itself, not upon absurdity and farce.

Harry Dunkinson, whose work in character roles is always good, plays Tom McNulty, who with his wife, Maizie (Mable Bardine), offers an act the star of which is "Abigail," a trained pig. Their experiences with a circus and in vaudeville form the story. Many well depicted and interesting types are introduced, among them a number of professional circus performers. These circus scenes are given enough prominence and are unusual enough to be worth advertising. They will undoubtedly please patrons. The "local color" throughout is well presented. The story is interesting and entertaining, with a note of pathos back of the comedy. The subtitles aid the story. The production is, in short, an out of the ordinary little comedy.

The Story: Tom and Maizie McNulty, having an act "the children cry for," the star of it being "Abigail," a trained pig, are traveling with a circus when the "jinx" hits their trail. The Fat Lady of the show objects to the company of "Abigail," and there is a quarrel after which the McNultys leave the circus. They are given a trial booking in vaudeville but the "jinx" seems to pursue them. A pickpocket steals Tom's money and Tom himself gets arrested as a suspicious character. After he is released, he and Maizie have a quarrel and Tom drows his sorrows in drink, for which he has traded "Abigail." A friend acts as peace-maker and Tom and Maizie are re-united and "Abigail" is redeemed. Then luck seems to favor them and they are offered favorable bookings. Tom and Maizie invite the agent to dine with them. After dinner they boast of their skill but the agent insists that the chief attraction is "Abigail." Whereupon Maizie faints, for "Abigail" had been sacrificed to provide the dinner and, as Maizie explains, they had "eaten the act!"

"Her Father's Keeper"

Triangle-Fine Arts Comedy-Drama. Released April 1. Reviewed by George W. Graves

"HER FATHER'S KEEPER" is a bright, original play from the pen of Robert Shirley. It presents excellently developed drama interspersed with human comedy of the more supressed sort and therefore is one more film to be recorded under the heading of clean, cheerful entertainment. There are not a small number of surprise twists in the plot before it culminates in its dynamic climax. The play is not silly or eccentric, but it is a rather convincing story of the world of finance, a daughter arrayed against her father in his own interests, and a lover saved from the unprincipled operations of the weak father. Action is not a lacking quantity of the film. It is breezy, in good tempo, and creative of interest in its main route of travel as well as in its deviations.

Jack Devereux as the jolly, energetic opponent of his sweetheart's erring "dad," gives a performance which will be appreciated by audiences, while Irene Howley and Frank Currier do exceptionally well with their parts, given the advantage of being appropriately cast. "Her Father's Keeper" is altogether a fitting release to appear on the Triangle program. It has novelty, suspense, action and atmosphere and its cast could hardly be improved upon. We hope that more pictures of the general merit of this will emanate in the future from the Eastern Fine Arts studio. The picture is one of the best seen in some time on the Triangle program.

"The Dummy"

Famous Players-Paramount Drama. Released March 19. Reviewed by George W. Graves

A GREAT deal of interest has been taken in Jack Pickford's work since the production of "Seventeen" and "Great Expectations." In "The Dummy," a screen version of the successful O'Higgins-Ford play which helped to entertain Broadway two years back, the youthful star has a role which, to use the same old hackneyed, but illustrative expression, fits him "like a glove." His naturalness, his ease, together with resourcefulness and personal adaptability to the part, make us forget all about Jack Pickford and see only the rough-and-tumble office-boy aspirant to "detectuv" honors, the quick-witted happy-go-lucky youth who grasps his chance to figure in adventures not less exciting than those of the lurid novels he worships.

The play in its picturized form presents an astonishing blending of comedy and melodrama,—lively action, surprise punches and delightful human colorings keeping one's mind ever in a state of pleasurable excitement. "The Dummy" is a successful motion picture adaptation of a successful stage play. It is wholesome, light, and is calculated to send audiences away in a bouyant, satisfied mood. There is nothing distasteful, dreary or morbid to be found in it. The work of the director, Francis Grandin, is exceedingly skillful in the supervision of the cast and effective in atmosphere and general realism. In the star's strong support are Frank Losee, Edwin Stanley, Helen Greene, Ethelmary Oakland and Ruby Hoffman, the work of all being above cavil. Enthusiastic audiences are sure to breed more enthusiastic audiences where "The Dummy" is shown for more than a day. The picture is the attraction at the Strand Theater in New York for the week of March 19.

on their jealous minds by Detective Babbings that an organization of kidnappers is responsible, and rescue work is set in motion. To aid him in his work, the detective secures the services of Barney Cook, a bright messenger boy, whose only fault is, in the minds of the Western Union people, that he "reads too many detective stories." How this "fault" is seen to be decidedly fortunate in future developments and how the boy not only aids in finding the lost baby but practically does the whole job of restoration to the grieved parents, is told in an entertaining and breezy manner. A very comical touch is applied to the climax, when the boy prevents an over-zealous hick sheriff from grabbing the reward.

"The Eagle's Wings"

"Industrial Preparedness" Is Theme of Bluebird Special Release. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris.

ITS timeliness is one of the striking features of this patriotic offering. It is not merely a plea for military preparedness; it presents a plan for equipping the nation and it gives an insight into the methods of manufacturing military supplies. The offering has unlimited possibilities for advertising and its box-office value is exceptional. Its value is not only from the box-angle angle, however, for it will thoroughly satisfy the patrons it attracts. It is educational and interesting. Local patriotic societies will doubtless be glad to cooperate with the exhibitor showing the picture.

The picture is in five reels, and without being sensational, it is a forceful, dignified argument for the adequate arming of the nation, "giving the eagle wings of steel," according to a subtitle. It tells its story clearly, showing the pernicious activity of foreign agents in keeping America preparedness plans from being worked out. Through the plan of the hero, by which the manufacturing plants of the nation become munition factories, there are shown many scenes of munition factories in operation.

The story of the play was written and the production supervised by Rufus Steele. Maude Grange prepared the scenario. The photography, which is good throughout, was under the supervision of R. E. Irish. The large cast of players includes Grace Carlyle, Vola Smith, Herbert Rawlinson, Charles Hill Mailes, Rodney Ronous, Charles Gunn, Albert McQuarrie, Malcolm Blevins and Walter Belasco.

The Story: The question of national preparedness is before Congress. A group of foreign secret service men set to work to cause feeling against the bill both in Congress and in the country at large. The formation of a publicity bureau to send out "pacifist" literature is an interesting phase of their work.

Senator Wright, manufacturer of pumping machinery, is opposed to the bill providing for adequate national armament. Then he visits New Mexico and is in a village which is pillaged by the Mexicans. He realizes then the need of protection which the country has. After his return to the Capitol, he works for the defense measure, and gains a hearing for Richard Wallace, the young superintendent of his factories, who has worked out a scheme by which the industry of the whole country can be turned into defense preparations. Through his scheme the work of manufacturing munitions is pictured.

A love story between this young reformer and the senator's daughter is included in the play.

"Man's Woman"

Five-Reel World Film Society Drama. Released April 2. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THE neglected wife, sans independence and sans authority in her own home, is a character eagerly seized upon by the moving picture scenarioist to weave his story around. Sometimes the character is made true to life and others it is drawn so that it would seem true only in remote cases. The wife's state of mind in this picture is rather hard to understand and the husband's stolidity is perhaps more opaque to the spectator. Neither seems to take the course that an ordinary person under like circumstances would. But family troubles are not the whole story. They are only the groundwork, forming a place for the serpent of destruction to creep in, separate the two and ruin the husband. The action of the story is swift and interesting, leading to a climax which is quite a thriller. A raid made on a gambling den is handled better than anything of this kind we have seen in a long time. It is convincing, and, judging from precedent in audience behavior during scenes of this kind, the audiences will express no little enthusiasm.

Ethel Clayton is always delicately appealing and her work in this is no exception to the general rule. The mention of the presence of this popular World Film star in the picture ought to create some turmoil around the box-office, since she has done some very charming work in her recent pictures. Rockliffe Fellowes is the strong personality needed for this part. He is much more the proper type in this than in some of the past World Film subjects. Frank Goldsmith, Justine Cutting, Eugenenie Woodward and Johnny Hines are also in the support. A story of lively action, but not convincing character study, winding up with exciting melodrama, "Man's Woman" is an acceptable attraction as a whole.

"Babette"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature. Released April 2. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THE incidents transpiring in this photoplay are quite pleasing to watch, especially so with Marc MacDermott and Peggy Hyland in the leading roles, but this is due more to resourceful direction and innumerable bits of "audience stuff" than it is to a story of sustained power. The story, about a criminal who, under the influence of a charming, pure-minded girl, puts away the things of the past only to find himself, after he has reformed, called to account for his former misdeeds, offers a number of dramatic situations, but not enough for five reels. There are anti-climaxes, too, in its unfoldment, which are ill-concealed by surface embellishment. A very good quality of atmosphere has been maintained by the director, Charles Brabin, and this, together with the refined charm of the stars' portrayals constitutes the picture's chief source of interest. While the characters portrayed by Marc MacDermott and Peggy Hyland do not figure strikingly in dramatic action, because of the light story, the characters themselves are interesting expositions of temperament. The criminal is a genial, likable sort of fellow who is not thoroughly bad, but just weak, while his sweetheart is innocence and purity personified. Miss Hyland is a splendid type for the part.

"Babette" presents good direction and good acting offsetting the vitiating quality of poorly sustained story interest. However, the name of Marc MacDermott surely is known to the picture theater goer, and Peggy Hyland probably enjoys popularity. The picture is only ordinary. Both Templar Saxe and William Dunn appear to their own and the picture's advantage.

Babette is the pure, child-minded daughter of the jailor at La Fourche. Her influence reforms her lover, who has hitherto been a deft-fingered society robber. After their marriage Raveau and Babette move to Paris, where the ex-criminal turns his hand to art, with only a dismal outlook in remuneration. The simple, trusting wife, however, thinks that each succeeding dawn is bringing him nearer the highest rung of artistic achievement.

Finally, on the principle that anything is better than to see his wife and child suffer, Raveau steals. He is duly apprehended by a detective whom Babette thinks is one of her husband's customers. Arrived at the office of the prefect of police the threatening cloud of despair is dispelled. The wife of the man who is making the complaint is one to whom Raveau has shown a great kindness in the past. So the robbed husband, influenced by his wife's petitions, tells the prefect Raveau's arrest is a mistake. The husband then returns to Babette, who never learns the truth. Eventually Raveau develops his latent energies and becomes an artist of note.

Three General Releases

General Film's O. Henry Two-Reelers Excellent. Reviewed by George W. Graves

GENERAL FILM'S two-reel adaptations of O. Henry's stories, so far as the first three indicate, are as refreshing as an evening breeze in summer. In fact, so good are they that they make one wonder why the production of finished short reel subjects has been generally neglected by producers in the mad rush to satisfy the supposed demand for five-reel "features." All three of the stories, screened at a special showing at the Broadway Theater in New York, "Past One at Rooney's," "Friends in San Rosario," and "The Third Ingredient," are highly satisfactory from a view of live, compelling entertainment. Every one knows the enormous amount of originality to be found in O. Henry's stories; also is he acquainted with the author's keen perception of human character and his ability to put the last subtle touch of humanness to his sketches of life. The true

O. Henry style has been put into the pictures through excellent scenarios and equally excellent direction.

The frequent use of subtitles, conversational and otherwise, taken from the stories, aids in, rather than decreases from, the interest. The quantity of subtitles employed in two of the pictures would be a matter of reckless daring in the majority of films of today, but in these remarkable two-reelers the conversational titles are so skilfully placed and bring home the underlying thought so strongly that one does not mind doing a good deal of reading. In the subtitles, too, may be found much irresistible humor. Thomas R. Mills directed the three initial pictures of the series, while E. J. Montague wrote the scenario for "Past One at Rooney's," and H. W. Bergman those for two succeeding pictures. All of the pictures are supplied with effective casts. Nothing is lacking in making these O. Henry pictures good-through-to-the-core short features. We recommend the first three as gems of rare lustre.

Gordon Gray and Mildred Manning feature in "Past One at Rooney's," a slum story which tells with refreshing newness the story of two lovers, both pretty bad morally, who are reformed through their love. "Friends in San Rosario" is a story of finance with a surprise ending. Mr. Norcrouse, finely cast as to type, does excellent work. Others in the cast are Mr. Ellis, Mr. Frank Glendon and Miss Mildred Manning. "The Third Ingredient" is the most delightful story of all. A poor girl has been saved from drowning by a youth in good circumstances. The latter tells her he will find her, in spite of her refusal to give him her address. The unique manner in which fate finally unites the two through the medium of the "third ingredient," (which, by the way, is an onion, which, combined with the other two ingredients. makes a perfect beef stew) makes a story of humor and heart-interest. Mildred Manning, Alice Mann and Frank Glendon do complete justice to their roles.

"Pots-and-Pans Peggy"

Gladys Hulette in Recent Thanhouser-Pathe Offering. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is a good offering for any theater catering to any class of people. It is thoroughly delightful and a patron who fails to be entertained by it must be an out of the ordinary sort, indeed. Its humor and humanness are its distinguishing qualities, but it is not lacking in thrill and suspense.

The magnetism and cleverness of Gladys Hulette in the title role form the chief element of appeal, and those who have seen her in previous roles can judge of the energy and vivacity with which she plays Peggy McGraw, the little Irish servant girl "whose middle name was Work." Although Peggy cleans up both the home and the morals of the family who engages her, there is no sentimentality in the story and the heroine is far removed from the angel-child sort of reformer.

Agnes C. Johnston, who wrote "The Shine Girl," "Prudence the Pirate," and "Her New York," former Hulette successes, is also the author of this story. The plot moves along rapidly, with many unexpected twists and unique situations. In the main it avoids the hackneyed. However, one situation, which seems to have little place in the main plot, is too far-fetched. This is the substitution of Peggy for the countess at the dinner party. Since Peggy in her own role of maid met the same guests whenever they called, one cannot understand why she is not recognized.

But as a whole, the plot is well constructed. One of its most original situations is that in which Peggy gets the government documents from the villain's room by means of the tube of a vacuum cleaner. The humorous situations are many.

The direction, acting and photography of the release are all satisfactory. The supporting cast of players includes Wayne Arey, George Marlo, Kathryn Adams, Grace Henderson, Arthur Bauer and Lord McCaskill.

The Story: The story opens at an employment agency. Society Mrs. Stuyvesant wishes a maid. So many duties are attached to the position that only the strenuous Peggy McGraw has the courage to undertake it. Peggy has a family of small brothers and sisters to support and is glad of any work to do.

Peggy's sweetheart, Taxi Barney, drives her to her new home. In this houshold, the son, Arthur, is becoming a drunkard and the daughter is unhappy because her mother wishes her to marry a millionaire when she loves a poor man. Peggy, in a business like fashion, checks Arthur's wild career and engineers the elopement of Marion and her lover. Then Arthur, who gets a job in a government office, is made the unwilling tool of spies who steal valuable plans. Peggy enters the hotel of the spies, in her role of a maid, and by means of a vacuum tube gets the plans, and thus aids her country and saves Arthur. But she refuses his offer of marriage and weds Taxi Barney.

Five-Part Sarah Bernhardt Picture Acquired by World Film. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS remarkable film not only brings the great battle fronts of war-ridden Europe into the view of the spectator, but, to make things all the more real and intimate, has a story of such a grim trueness to life that its dramatic power is unmatched. Thus the picture fulfills the two-fold mission of being a drama and an authentic representation of operations in France at the present time.

The name of Sarah Bernhardt alone should be all the picture requires to bring eager audiences to the theater doors. Certainly this great actress needs little publicity at this late day. If Mme. Bernhardt ever "felt" a part in her life she certainly must have "felt" this one, for she is by no means just playing a part. The story, by Jean Richepin, member of the French Academy, tells in simple form its human tale of love and sacrifice. Its pathos is irresistible in some places, as the flowing tears at the Rialto theater in New York, gives material evidence. Time for this intense sympathy is first ripe when Mme. Marsay's son dies in her arms, after the noble woman has pierced the danger zone in a frenzied effort to be at his side during the last moments. Later Mme. Marsay learns of the death of her husband, but in spite of the blow, continues her work at the hospital with untiring effort. A very pathetic event marks the close of the story, when a girl, since come to love another, sacrifices herself for the sake of the man to whom she was engaged, made blind in battle. The unfortunate blind lover learns of her sacrifice in time to release her.

M. Jean Richepin also directed the picture, using the actual locations in France with which the story has to deal. Many thrilling scenes of actual bombardment are shown. M. Richepin selected splendid types, one and all, for the interpretation of the story. The work of every player is sincere and convincing.

"Mothers of France" is not just a story writer's fancy, but more than that—a slice of life cut from the loaf of grim actuality, a replica of hundreds of individual experiences now being met with by hundreds of "mothers of France." This startling realism, this unparalleled portrayal of the heroism, the courage and the noble sacrifice of our brothers and sisters across the ocean cannot help but force a tide of overwhelming sympathy to well up within the bosoms of all on this more fortunate side of the Atlantic. It all makes us feel that war has at least one estimable side—the bringing to the surface of the most noble traits of the human heart, often held in obscurity until the time of emergency.

This film has an incalculable box-office value. There is reason to believe that everyone will want to see it.

"Sunny Jane"

Jackie Saunders in Horkheimer-Mutual Feature. Released March 26. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is a five-reel comedy-drama in rural settings in which Jackie Saunders plays the role of a country girl. It is the first of a series to be released through Mutual in which Miss Saunders will be featured.

While the story does not pretend to be true to life, it is an amusing comedy and will entertain most audiences. It is well suited for children's and family programs. Miss Saunders is an attractive player and shows ability in a role which varies from a country girl type to a spoiled society girl and includes several vision scenes in which she appears as Cleopatra, truly a varied role. Miss Saunders seems equally at home in each characterization. Also, she portrays a country girl without wearing curls!

The supporting cast of players is as a whole good. The best characterization in the picture and one which will amuse audiences especially is that of Edward Joleson as Philip Dwight, Jane's father. Cullen Nandis, as Thomas, a country boy, is very good, and Frank Mayo is well cast as the millionaire hero.

The rural and boarding school comedy scenes, some old and some new, have been given unusually fine settings. The photography is excellent and the scenes on the farm are beautiful and rather out of the ordinary. Care has been taken in the selection of the interior sets also. As a whole, the picture will please audiences which like light, humorous offerings.

The Story: Jane, a country girl who is at once a tom-boy and a book-worm, is fond of imagining herself in the role of heroines she reads of. James Thornton, a millionaire bachelor who comes trying to buy her father's farm, is attracted by the girl and offers to send her to school and pay all her expenses if the father will consent. Meanwhile Mrs. Vanderhoff pursues Thornton for her daughter Elizabeth. Elizabeth, however, would rather have Ronald Jones and Thornton eventually helps them to elope.

When Jane returns from school she apes the manners of a grand dame, believing that it will please Thornton, but he is very much disappointed. When she dons her calico gown, however, and hides in his machine he changes his mind and orders the chauffeur to drive to the nearest justice of the peace.

"His Father's Son"

Five-Reel Metro Release of March 19. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz

THIS story by Channing Pollick and Rennold Wolf features Lionel Barrymore in the role of J. Debney Barron, an irresponsible college youth. The theme of the play is interwoven with love and romance, humor and pathos in such a manner that it makes an altogether likable and interesting picture. Much of the plot is centered around the young man who fails at college, is cast off by his father, and told to go to work.

Many amusing scenes are shown of Dabney in his search for work and how he finally secures a place as a butler. The theme of the story, while not new, is clearly told and satisfactorily acted. Irene Howley, in the support of Lionel Barrymore, gives a pleasing characterization of Betty Arden. Walter Horton as Lord Lawrence makes an exceptionally fine villain. Others having prominent parts are: Frank Currier, Charles Eldridge, George A. Wright and Phil Sanford.

Proving a failure in his studies and caring more for pleasure and poker, J. Dabney Barron is expelled from college. His father in disgust deprives him of his allowance, and tells him to find employment, betting him $6,000 that he cannot hold a $60 job for a month. Dabney takes him up and determines to win the bet.

After many failures he finally secures work through his friend, Jim Foley, a detective. John Arden, a gem collector, has a priceless emerald called "The Lady From the Sea." Fearing that it might be stolen he sends for a detective to guard his jewels. Lord Lawrence, better known as "London Larry," is visiting Arden with the object of stealing the emerald. In order to guard the emerald, Foley has Dabney pose as a butler.

At the Arden home, Dabney meets Betty and recognizes her as the girl he helped in the park. In an attempt to retain her respect he tells her a wonderful tale of a lost fortune; how he and his sister had been swindled out of their inheritance by a villainous secretary, Slime. In the end Slime had kidnaped the girl and ever since Dabney had been seeking for her. This accounts for his presence in the Arden home as butler.

Betty pretends to believe the story and promises to help him. At last the month is up, and he is happy over the thought of winning the bet. John Arden discovers Dabney making love to Betty and discharges him.

That night as he is about to leave, he surprises "Larry," who is opening the safe where the jewels are stored. Overpowering the thief he puts him in the safe. Arden hearing the noise, comes down and liberates Lord Lawrence, who tells him that Dabney is the guilty one. When Foley arrives he identifies Dabney and arrests "London Larry." Dabney not only wins the bet, but he also wins the girl he loves.

"Hell Morgan's Girl"

Five Reel Bluebird Release Depicts Underworld Life. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A STORY laid in San Francisco's underworld, the notorious "Barbary Coast," just before the earthquake, is depicted most realistically in this Bluebird offering which was first announced as a "state rights" picture. Its plot is taken from a story by Harvey Gates and its central figure is the daughter of a dance-hall keeper, a girl who has an innate desire for the better things of life.

Lola, the girl, as played by Dorothy Phillips, is a rather unique characterization. She is a pagan, a creature of impulse. She is too wild to win much sympathy, but she is real enough to hold interest. William Stowell as the artist, Joseph Girard, Alfred Allen and Lou Chaney, all give vivid interpretations of their roles.

The play depicts a rough, savage sort of life. Most of the characters are barbarians. Their careers are depicted with realism and force in this screen play, and the result is an offering which will delight the class of audience which seeks underworld plays. Of this type, it is one of the most striking. It will be found too rough for fastidious patrons, unless they are in the mood for a slumming expedition.

However, the picture is really less suggestive than many polite society dramas. Its very frankness and force keep it from being salacious. It is sometimes unpleasant, and again it is fascinating. It is well acted and well produced. The introduction of scenes during and after the earthquake is a point of unusual interest. The period of the story necessitates the costuming of the cast in styles of ten years ago.

The Story: Lola, daughter of "Hell" Morgan, keeper of a dance and gambling hall in San Francisco in 1906, is a wild, rough character with a secret longing for a sort of life she has never known. A gambler friend of her father is infatuated with the girl but she is not interested in him. An artist, disinherited son of a millionaire, now a vagabond, drifts to the resort and proves valuable as a musician. Lola aids him in overcoming his drinking tendencies and finally falls in love with him. Then an incident makes her wildly jealous and after a quarrel during which the artist leaves her, she turns in anger to the gambler. But she repents of her decision and tries to escape. Her father, coming to her rescue, kills the gambler, but is fatally injured himself. Then comes the earthquake. The artist, realizing his love for Lola when he fears that she is dead, goes back in search of her. Finally he finds her. Her father is dead and ties binding her to the old life are severed. Looking over the ruins of the city, the artist and Lola decide to rebuild their lives together.

He buys a second-hand outfit of military regalia, in which he arrays himself and visits Tiny's home, but father and the lieutenant notice the deception and shy him from the place. Tiny's father is to make an address in a neighboring village, and his car awaits him outside his home. Jerry appropriates the car and starts for the distant town. The Colonel loans Tiny's father his own machine. They arrive in the town to find that Jerry has been up to one of his tricks, and enter the hall just as he is in the midst of an eulogy of his heroic deeds at the front. Jerry is seized by the constable and brought to the jail. The Bearded Fisherman—American—(One Reel)—March 29.—Featuring Edward Coxen. John Robertson and his brother, fishermen, both loved Jennie Blair, but John, more bold, won her. They lived in the home of the brothers. When hard luck came upon them, Fred, who loved in silence, tried to cheer them with hopes of the future, but John, morose and sad, left suddenly to seek his fortune elsewhere. Though Fred still loved Jennie, he spoke no word of himself, but did his best to keep her in food and shelter. The years rolled by and no word came from John, so he spoke his love and they were wed. A child came to bless them, and then one night a bearded figure—John—came to the cabin and looked in through the window and what he saw shot a sudden pain into his heart, for Fred and Jennie, serenely happy, were amusing themselves with the baby. Clutching a bag of money, John entered. They did not recognize him. Handing them the bag of money, saying, "I was John's friend, and before he died he bade me bring you this," he turned to the door, went out into the night and was seen no more.

Owen Evans, a waiter, sees his employer steal the dog and determines to rescue it. Under the kitchen table is some dynamite to be used by rogues in a big job. Fido goes into a valise. Evans takes the grip, which he thinks contains the dog, and goes to Lillian's home. Lillian is captured and bound when she returns to the restaurant. When the dynamiters return for their valise the dog jumps out and chews the cords that bind his mistress and releases her. She writes a note, gives it to the dog and sends him home. At Lillian's home Owen has opened the valise and disclosed the infernal machine. The old man phones for the police and during his conversation in walks the dog with the note, which Evans reads. The police arrive and follow Evans, who wrecks the Chinatown establishment, rescues Lillian and is hailed as a hero.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

The leading offering of the March 26 Universal program is the Red Feather five-act drama of adventure, "The Fighting Gringo," starring Harry Carey, the popular delineator of Western characters. The story is a gripping tale of love, intrigue and daring.

"The Fighting Gringo," will be released on Monday, March 26. On the same day will appear the Nestor comedy, "Shot In the West," with Eddie Lyons and Edith Roberts in the leading roles.

A powerful human interest drama is offered Tuesday, March 27, under the Gold Seal brand entitled "The Startling Climax." It is a three-part drama with Val Paul, Fred Church, Gertrude Astor and others. The most blase picture-goers will find this a novel and unusual photoplay. The Victor comedy, "Never Too Old to Woo," with Marjorie Wilson and Jack Nelson is another Tuesday release.

Chief among the releases of Wednesday, March 28, is the L-Ko two-part comedy, "Dan's Dippy Doings," featuring funny fellow Dan Russell. The Laemmle one-act drama, "Is Money All?" with Irene Hunt, and the regular issue of the Universal Animated Weekly are the other offerings of this date.

The Powers of Thursday, March 29, is an extraordinary scenic entitled, "The Grand Canyon of Arizona." These pictures of that wonderful work of nature are the most comprehensive views ever taken of the Grand Canyon, and the tinting and toning of the film show the remarkable coloring of the walls of the canyon as nearly as it is possible to reproduce them. "David's Idol Dream," under the Imp brand, a two-act drama featuring Jay Belasco and Madge Kirby and the Laemmle one-act drama, "The Mask of Love," with Pauline Bush and Lon Chaney, will also be released Thursday.

"The Crimson Blade," the fourth of the adventure series, "The Perils of the Secret Service," written and produced by George Bronson Howard, will appear Friday, March 30. Other releases of this date are the Victor one-act comedy, "Prodigal Papa," with Jane Gail and the twelfth issue of the Universal screen magazine.

"Steel Hearts," a two-part drama of railroad life, featuring Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill, will be released under the Bison brand on Saturday, March 31. The Joker comedy, "What the ——?" is the other offering for this date.

"Snow White," a three-part screen fantasy especially fitting for children's performances, starring dainty Elsie Alberts will be presented Sunday, April. The Powers split reel, "Inbad the Sailor," a comedy cartoon, and an educational subject will complete the program.

"The Spider's Web," the third episode of "The Voice on the Wire," with Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, and the fourteenth episode of the popular serial, "The Purple Mask," with Grace Cunard and Francis Ford will be released during the week.

THOMPSON JOINS ARGUS

WALLACE THOMPSON, assistant secretary and director of publicity of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, severed his connections there last week, and is now associated with Horace D. Ashton of the Argus Laboratories in the production of short subjects of high quality for screen magazines and split reels. Mr. Ashton has been working in this field for a year, supplying an increasing demand for scientific, educational, art and humorous subjects with a genuine magazine interest, as distinguished from the old idea of making such matter by the foot.

Mr. Thompson entered the motion picture business a year ago from the managing editorship of Popular Science to do just this sort of work as editor of the Paramount Pictographs. He was put in charge of publicity, advertising house organs and pictographs, however, and became known as a publicity man, in which capacity he went to the National Association last fall. His chief interest has continued in the production and editorial end, however, until the present arrangements were made with Mr. Ashton.

Associated with them at the Argus laboratories are Mrs. Helena Smith Dayton, whose animated clay cartoons have been perfected under Mr. Ashton's direction and will be shown for the first time at the Strand in New York the week of March 25. Edgar J. Wright, who worked out the first successful plan of photographing microscopic pictures in motion, and whose scientific subjects are well known in all the screen magazines, and in an advisory capacity, Martin Justice, art director of the Vitagraph studios at Flushing, N. Y.

These two executives with ten as good salesmen as there are in the east are increasing weekly the collections of the New York branch office of Pathe. A. S. Abeles is branch manager and has charge of the general business of the office; H. E. Friedman, the associate manager, has charge of the sales force.

F. M. Brockell and Harry Weiss, managing directors of the Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Inc., with which is affiliated the Central Film Company, are becoming as well known away from home as they are in Chicago. Mr. Brockell recently visited Detroit, then coming back to the Chicago office to enable Mr. Weiss to make a flying trip to Indiana. He will make a tour of the Hoosier state in his automobile, starting March 27, which may be taken as a sign of spring.

Aaron Jones visited New York to arrange for the showing of "Joan the Woman" at the Colonial Theater, beginning March 28, and brought home the costumes which Geraldine Farrar wore in the production. These will be worn by a girl stationed in the lobby. E. Q. Cordner, who has been at the Auditorium while "A Poor Little Rich Girl" was running in that theater, will resume his duties as assistant manager at the Colonial.

Eugene A. Hamburg announces that he has just closed a contract for $1,875 worth of lobby displays and paintings, to be installed in Ascher Brothers' new Chateau, as well as to equip the string of twenty or more Fitzpatrick and McElroy theaters. He has doubled the floor space of his offices in the Mallers building and has engaged another artist. Some of the portrait work formerly done at the factory is now handled at the downtown office.

The Strand Theater on Wabash avenue is giving the public a glimpse of life among the people of the Allied nations as they work and play and fight since the war came upon them. Films obtained in the last two years by Merle Le Voy are being presented, under the title, "Heroic France—The Allies in Action." The proceeds from all tickets sold after March 20 will go to the various American war relief agencies in France. Elisha Morgan controls the film.

S. Greiver, one of Chicago's pioneer independent exchange managers, announces the formation of a new entrant into this field, of the firm name of Silee Film Exchange, Inc. Lee Herz and Max Herz are the other two incorporators, the latter being a prominent produce merchant of Chicago. Since his entrance into the picture business, seven years ago, Mr. Greiver has established an enviable reputation. His first connection with the picture business was with the M. & F. Feature Film Company, with whom he remained until about three and a half years ago, when he accepted the management of the General Feature Film Company. Mr. Greiver has gone to New York City in an effort to buy four or five big features. More detailed information about the Silee Film Exchange will appear in the advertising columns of MOTOGRAPHY soon.

FAY TINCHER

One of Miss Tincher's latest pictures—showing that even a comedienne can be a very beautiful young woman. Miss Tincher has been under the D. W. Griffith banner for over three years and is at present taking a little rest before signing a new contract. As every one knows, Fay Tincher began her picture career as a wily vampire, only to discover that her talent lay in comedy. Of course she made a very acceptable "Scarlet Lady," but all of us who have enjoyed her wonderful work in the "Bill" series—where she flaunted her vivid stripes of black and white for the first time—and her work with De Wolfe Hopper in Don Quixote and "Mr. Goode, the Samaritan," to say nothing of the many clever two-reel comedies in which she has been starred lately, are mighty glad that she switched from tragedy to comedy.

Are Motion Picture Exhibitors Human Beings?

GOLDWYN'S owners believe that they are. Many producing organizations have been wrecked by the character and habits of the men employed to carry on business relations with the exhibitors of America.

Goldwyn will make no mistakes of this kind. Its representatives will be able, clean-cut, hard-working business men and they will be gentlemen.

They will not be pledge and promise-breakers. They will be men you can depend upon. They will come to you with heads filled with a knowledge of service and promotion. They will, in addition to booking a picture in your theatre, help you sell it to your public.

Besides its tremendously popular stars in plays by the world's most successful authors, and in addition to the ability and standing of its partners, Goldwyn has another big asset, and that is:

A skilled knowledge of how to bring people to a box office and sell them admissions when they come there.

Chicago League Fights License Increase

ONE MONTH ALLOWED EXHIBITORS TO PREPARE DEFENSE

THE city council of Chicago has called upon the local branch Motion Picture Exhibitors' League to supply information upon which the council can construct a new license ordinance covering theaters of the city. President Joseph Hopp has taken the leadership in presenting the exhibitors' objections to higher license rates. He has succeeded in securing a postponement of action by the council for probably one month. In that time the League must assemble a convincing array of figures to prove that the theaters of the city are now carrying as great a tax burden as conditions justify.

The sub-committee of the city council has made an issue of the license question by seriously considering the passage of an ordinance that would establish a range of licenses, based on the exceeding capacity of houses, under which theaters would pay from $200 on 300-seat houses to $1,000 on houses having 1,500 seats or more.

Arrange Hearing for Exhibitors

President Hopp was notified that the proposed ordinance would come up for consideration March 21. He received fifty minutes' notice in advance of the meeting. The committee had made no arrangements to permit exhibitors sending representatives to their meeting. Only for the fact that Attorney David T. Alexander has been watching the plans of the council with regard to license questions, did it become known that the unexpected move was contemplated. He and Mr. Hopp came to the rescue.

Alderman James B. Bowler, chairman of the sub-committee, inquired of Mr. Hopp what the exhibitors of Chicago think of the ordinance. Mr. Hopp responded that any action by the council would be premature, for the reason that neither himself nor the Exhibitors' League, or any exhibitors individually, had been given a chance to come before the council. In justice to theater owners, Mr. Hopp demanded that their representatives be allowed to submit facts regarding their business.

Already the Exhibitors' League is compiling figures which will show that instead of paying only a license of $200, Chicago theaters are now paying to the city and United States government from $300 to $400 a year. A large portion of this consists of inspectors' fees.

In the case of all theaters, at frequent intervals, city inspectors from various departments at the city hall appear at the theater, take a look at the electric sign or some other piece of equipment. A different inspector is sent out for every different purpose. It may be to inspect a canopy, the floor space, or curtain. Such inspections are made by the building department.

The boiler inspections are made from a separate department, from time to time, so that scarcely a month passes in which some inspection is not required. The fees range between two dollars and fifteen dollars. The inspector from the city electrical department attends to illuminated signs and charges fifteen dollars for each inspection.

In addition to fees of this sort, the owners pay the usual realty tax, and, besides, each theater is assessed for personal property. Mr. Hopp said that the personal property tax is usually in excess of the actual value. This assessment is made against equipment, such as projection machines.

If a theater is conducted by a corporation, it is necessary to pay a corporation tax also. Added to all of these is the United States internal revenue tax of from $25 to $75, payable semi-annually. Last, but neither to be overlooked nor omitted, comes the government income tax. Some exhibitors have been known to pay it.

Alderman Grants Exhibitors Time

Considered in the light of Mr. Hopp's statements covering the question in the general manner outlined above, the reasonableness of the proposed graduated scale becomes at once questionable and open to debate. Alderman Bowler admitted that the exhibitors ought to have a greater opportunity to present their argument. Instead of the sub-committee making its recommendations at the meeting of March 21, the aldermen consented to postpone the matter until the council shall come in, which will be during the second week of April.

Below is the graduated scale of licenses which, in the meantime, exhibitors will endeavor to prove unjust and unreasonable:

A theater with a seating capacity of 300 or less would be forced to pay a tax of $200. A house seating not less than 300 and not more than 600 would be taxed $350. Any seating capacity between 600 and 1,000 is taxable to the extent of $500. A theater with not less than 1,000 seats and not more than 1,500 would pay a license of $700. Any motion picture theater with more than 1,500 seats would be forced to pay a fee of $1,000.

A second ordinance now pending would extend the powers of the Chicago board of censors by taxing the manufacturer and requiring him to pay one dollar a reel or one dollar a picture as a censorship fee.

One other factor which Mr. Hopp calls attention to is the comparatively higher overhead expenses of large theaters. The graduated license scheme, of course, multiplies the license rates of the bigger houses.

Since houses of large seating capacity usually take the place of the smaller theaters, often without any actual increase in the aggregate seating capacity of theaters in the vicinity, it becomes apparent, Mr. Hopp declared, that the large theaters cannot therefore pay an increased license based upon no other fact than that they are large. He contends that a close study of the overhead expenses in large and small theaters alike must be the foundation of any ordinance which revises the present license rate of $200 a year.

In addressing the sub-committee of the council, Mr. Hopp said:

The motion picture exhibitor is the burden-bearer of the whole picture industry. If you gentlemen of the council decide that an increase in taxes must be placed upon theaters, you are putting a greater load on the man who already carries the biggest burden.

You will find upon looking into conditions that exist today, that the theaters are not earning profits sufficient to justify further taxation. If you decide then that you must tax the business through some other branch, the distributor or the producer, you once more add to the load of the burden carrier, the exhibitor. Because, when the producer or the distributor is taxed, he passes the increase to the exhibitor by charging him higher rates for films. And when you get to a certain point, it is going to hurt the exhibitor by forcing him to increase admission prices, which means the cutting off of some portion of his patronage. It is essential that your committee proceed very cautiously in adjusting license rates.

CALL TO ARMS

Associated Motion Picture Advertisers Confer with Army and Navy Officials and Make Plans for "National Duty Week"

The first call to arms of the National Duty committee of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers has gone out. At the regular weekly meeting held last week the advertisers entertained four officers of the army and navy at luncheon, and before the meeting broke up plans had been formulated for a National Duty week, and the week of April 8 to 15 was designated as a fitting time to concentrate the forces of the picture industry upon the duty and responsibility of citizenship in this national crisis.

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers had as its guests four army and navy officers: Captain G. W. Harvey of the Army, and Lieutenant Commander Marian Epply, Lieutenant J. M. Patton and Lieutenant A. M. Cohen of the Navy. It was by them that the suggestion of a National Duty Week was made to the association, and it was enthusiastically received and plans immediately discussed for putting it into operation. It was decided to send out a summons to every motion picture manufacturing company to observe the week of April 8-15 as a national duty week, to include in its program so far as possible all of the patriotic films possible, to arrange its posters in such manner as to bring the crisis of the country to the attention of as many of its citizens as possible, and in every way to arouse America to the danger of its supine and defenseless attitude. It was unanimously voted to ask all of the manufacturing companies to attach a trailer to one or all of the films which are issued during that week, reading substantially like this:

YOUR COUNTRY NEEDS YOU NOW.

The United States Naval Reserve force is in need of men from all trades and professions to enroll at once to guard our coasts. Service for war time only. Apply at once to the United States Naval Reserve Force, 26 Cortland Street, New York, or any United States navy yard or recruiting station.

Lieutenant Commander Epply outlined a campaign upon which he and his associates had been working for a naval display to be made by merchants throughout the length and breadth of the land on National Duty week. This plan, and the machinery for putting it into execution, had been carefully thought out, and the Naval Reserve Force has already prepared the letters to every large and small mercantile house throughout the United States, to trade magazines in the various industries, and to Chambers of Commerce in all cities.

This National Duty Week campaign will occupy the attention of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers pretty largely until after April 15, and much of the work which they have already started will be diverted to this particular object. Lieutenant Patton laid particular stress upon the fact that the Naval Reserve Force is a branch of the service which is quite distinct from the regular naval force. From the Naval Reserve Force the United States Navy hopes to man and equip the auxiliary vessels in the navy, and to fill business, clerical and managerial posts for the period of war only. A man doesn't have to enlist for any definite number of months or years in order to serve his country in the Naval Reserve Force. This force, too, is one which is desperately needed to put the navy into the most effective condition, relieving trained men for actual fighting service aboard the men of war, and assuring the vessels of the supplies, communication, ammunition, etc., without which they are helpless.

The new branch of the navy known as the submarine chasers come under this head, and this branch is rapidly attracting a great many men who have cruising and pleasure yachts which would be adapted to this kind of work.

Producer Recognizes Good Thing

MOTOGRAPHY Magazine, Chicago, Illinois.

I wish to express my appreciation of MOTOGRAPHY's progressiveness in running the department "What the Picture Did for Me."

From the standpoint of the exhibitor I know this is a good thing. Also it aids the manufacturer in that it gives him a first-hand idea of what business the exhibitor is doing with his productions. With best wishes, I am very truly yours—Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, Victor Eubank.

"Film Village" in Montana

Helena, Montana, is to have a "film village" located on the state highway, 25 miles west of the city, according to the Todd Film Company of Butte. The site selected is in a canyon, at Sampson station on the Northern Pacific.

Logs are now being cut for a hotel, which will serve both as hostelry for sojourning autoists and touring travelers and as a setting for many of the films which it is said will be made there by the Butte firm.

A short strip showing the American flag, running rapidly up a staff and unfolding gracefully to the breeze has been appended to all Essanay productions. This flag strip carries no Essanay brand nor is it designed to exploit Essanay pictures. Essanay believes that at this time it is right and proper to keep constantly before the public the symbol of our freedom and unity, and that film producers should do their part in this as well as the newspapers.

K. E. S. E. Trades New York for Chicago

DISTRIBUTOR CHOOSES ADVANTAGES OF CENTRAL CITY

SOME of the wisest and keenest men in the picture industry have for some time prophesied that Chicago will eventually be the distributing headquarters of the motion picture industry.

More and more evidences of the soundness of this belief have been seen within the past year. A few months ago, the Mutual Film Corporation removed its entire executive headquarters from New York to Chicago and all of the various Mutual activities now revolve around the extensive system of offices in the Consumers building.

Removal Without Interruption of Work

The latest distributing concern to take advantage of the geographical position and other conveniences of Chicago, is the K. E. S. E. organization. The entire executive offices of this distributing concern were removed from New York to Chicago on April 1. This was done with scarcely an hour's interruption of work. The offices at 80 Fifth avenue, New York, were vacated Saturday afternoon and installed on the Century train leaving New York at five o'clock Saturday afternoon; a portion of the staff continued to work on the train until Chicago was reached, at 4:45 o'clock Sunday afternoon.

In the meantime, temporary furnishings had been installed in the new Chicago headquarters, 61-63 East Adams street, and work was begun in full swing on Monday morning. The new K. E. S. E. offices occupy the entire eighth floor of the Chapin-Gore building.

Twenty-Two K. E. S. E. Exchanges

Fifty people will make the change from New York to Chicago in connection with the removal of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay headquarters. There are twenty-two K. E. S. E. exchanges located in various parts of the country and the destinies of all of these will be directed from the central offices as usual.

"From a geographical viewpoint," declared Mr. George Kleine, "Chicago is the logical center for our business. Its transportation facilities are unequaled and it is in direct communication with every part of the country. Within a radius of twenty-six hours from Chicago you can reach most of the important cities of this country and Canada, while twenty-six hours east of New York you are on the high seas."

Mr. Kleine's chief activities will be along the distributing line momentarily, excepting perhaps for occasional "Musty Suffer" comedies, with which he is concerned. "If I do decide to produce big pictures," he states, "it will not be with any degree of regularity. I may bring out an occasional production which will mean something and be worth while.

"I do not believe in the frequent presentation of new pictures," he continued. "You do not see the theatrical producers presenting a new play every week or month. When Klaw & Erlanger or Cohan & Harris are ready to put on a play they do so. That is how the picture business should be conducted, and in time it will be."

Mr. Kleine is a sufferer from the European war. Shortly before it began he, with two Italian associates, constructed an immense studio in a small Italian town five miles from Turin. He was ready to begin production work when hostilities opened.

The Brooklyn exhibitors now have a membership representing one hundred and forty theaters and the treasury is in good condition.

Film Footage Decreases

The report of the Pennsylvania board of censors states that more than 1,000,000 feet less of film were shown in the state in 1916 than the year preceding. The board states also that only about ten per cent of the films are educational and a recommendation is made to the governor that an effort be made to enact legislation to give moving pictures the part they really deserve in education.

STATE MOTION PICTURE DAY

Lieutenant-Governor of New York State Arranges Film Day at State Fair—Several Producers to Co-operate

If the plans which were discussed at a conference held in the lieutenant-governor's chambers in the capitol at Albany during the past week materialize, it is not unlikely that a "motion picture day" will be set aside during State Fair week in Syracuse this year.

Lieutenant Governor Edward Schoeneck, who is president of the New York State Fair Commission, invited several film executives, who were at the capitol attending the hearing before the Joint Codes Committee on the various bills providing for Sunday motion picture shows, to confer with him, including William A. Brady, director general of the World Film Corporation and president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry; Arthur S. Friend, treasurer and attorney of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Paramount Pictures Corporation and Artcraft Pictures Corporation; J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Films; J. Robert Rubin, attorney for Metro Pictures Corporation and the National Exhibitors' League; Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Lieutenant-Governor Schoeneck, who is an enthusiastic advocate of motion pictures, stated that there were few persons up state who knew anything at all about the making of motion pictures, and thought if a day were devoted to the motion picture industry at the State Fair, that it would attract the greatest number of people to the fair during the week and would be very instructive and entertaining to the farmers and rural citizens who are not familiar with the way in which motion pictures are made or assembled before they are presented to the public on the screen.

It is proposed to erect on the State Fair grounds at Syracuse a temporary structure for the use of the motion picture companies representing the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, where they may install exhibits and make sets for scenes. The lieutenant governor proposes to invite some of the great directors as well as several of the well-known motion picture stars to attend the State Fair upon this day, each of whom will be asked to give short talks upon their experiences and explain how films are produced. While in Syracuse the film officials, directors and stars will be the guests of the State Fair Commission and the city of Syracuse.

During the conference President Brady announced that he would be willing to undertake the making of some scenes on the State Fair grounds which would be embodied in a picture to be released by the World Film Corporation, and in this way the Empire State's great agricultural exposition would be advertised all over the country.

It is not improbable that the other companies to be officially invited by the State Fair Commission would also be willing to stage scenes for some of their releases upon this occasion providing the great crowds and background afforded upon such an occasion could be utilized to good advantage.

The drama and the photoplay are two co-ordinate arts, each perfectly valuable in itself. The one cannot replace the other; and the shortcomings of the one as against the other reflect only the fact that the one has a history of fifteen years while the other has one of 5,000. —Munsterberg: The Photoplay.

Screenshine

By Mel Ody

THERE was a blaze of glory at the Fulton theater of Union Hill, New Jersey, last week. It was "Red-head day," all red-headed girls having been invited to attend the show free of charge, to see the play in which Ella Hall and Polly Red Head are featured.

They came in swarms, the Titian tinted girls, and one red-headed man and his red-headed wife and two red-headed children also applied for admission, and though they didn't exactly come under the specification "girls," they were given free tickets. As many as sixty-seven attended the afternoon performances and even were on hand for the night entertainments.

The manager turned off all the heat and lights while his hot-headed audiences were in the house.

WE FAVOR CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Spring fever often affects the brain, it seems.

Here's the latest P. A. atrocity, committed under the season's malignant influence. It comes from the Fox publicity department:

"March 21. June Caprice celebrated the advent of spring by catching her finger in a spring lock at the Fort Lee studio."

FAN PASSES BOGUS MONEY

"Charlie" Lawrence, 816 West Sixty-third street, Chicago, an inveterate motion picture fan, a devotee of the bright lights and refreshments, was taken in charge recently while trying to pass bogus money.

Complaint was made by a druggist whom young Lawrence approached. Upon learning the prisoner's identity, the police telephoned to Mrs. Lawrence, his mother, who was considerably agitated.

Mrs. Lawrence told the police her son was much given to movie shows and was fond of the lights about the theaters. The money he attempted to spend for candy was a wooden nickel. Charles is three years old.

STUDIO FORCE FLOCKS TO LEG SHOW

Paul M. Bryan, editor of Gaumont's "Reel Life," recently passed the word about in mysterious fashion that those who made a prompt visit to the projection room would be present at a "leg show." Work almost came to a standstill about the Gaumont plant. When the projection room was so filled that it was playing to capacity, Mr. Bryan turned out the lights and ordered the operator to start. The edifying spectacle to which he had lured his colleagues was a section of film from "Reel Life," showing how artificial legs are made. At last reports Mr. Bryan was still in hiding.

Chicago film men have gone to Springfield to kloroform the censor bills being hatched there.

Add a little dynamite, fellows.

SERMON

There are a good many theaters that would look and feel a deuce of a lot more attractive if a good old-fashioned Irish washerwoman got after them a day or two.

Do you like to sit still and chew your cud after dinner?

That's what Fatty Arbuckle does, according to his wife, and she ought to know.

Mrs. Fatty says that for a solid hour following the evening meal, Fatty is in a dormant condition, so far as conversation is concerned. That is the time he takes for figuring out gentle little stunts for himself for the following day's work.

"Well," says Fatty, "you've got to stoke up the engine to make the wheels go round."

There are two vice-presidents of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago. They are M. G. Watkins, of American Standard, and Richard C. Travers, former Essanay star.

The two "vices" are now associated in a new producing arrangement.

We always did believe in segregation.

A Suit-Case Size Projector

AMERICAN PROJECTOSCOPE TO BE MANUFACTURED IN CHICAGO

THE American Projectoscope is the name given a new type of portable projection machine, the manufacture of which has just begun. The American Film Company, 6225 Broadway, Chicago, is the firm behind the new projector. Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American, heads the new enterprise and expects shortly to incorporate a special company to handle the manufacture and sale of the American Projectoscope.

Weighs but 21 Pounds

A number of unusual features distinguish the American Projectoscope from other small projection machines. The new device is light—weighing but 21 pounds; compact—folding up to a size no larger than a small suitcase; uses any ordinary electric light socket as its means of securing current—the light being generated in a specially made nitrogen bulb which casts a light fully as brilliant as that secured from the ordinary professional projection machine; can be started or stopped at any point and held stationary on the screen without danger to the film, permits the film to be turned backward if it is so desired, and has numerous other features that will instantly appeal to the buyer seeking a portable projection machine for the display of industrial or commercial films. The cost, too, is a feature for the American Projector sells for but $175. The Projectoscope, in short, seems admirably adapted to its purpose.

President Samuel S. Hutchinson of the American in discussing the American Projectoscope said: "Here at last is a machine that can be offered without an apology. It has overcome all of the handicaps that marked previous attempts to construct such a piece of apparatus, and contains many features never before attempted. The American Projectoscope is a perfect device. Its light positively amazes projection experts. It uses three condensing lenses and throws a picture equally good, whether projected on a screen 8 feet across or a bit of card only 8 inches in width. It is mechanically perfect in every respect. It is fool proof and so easy to manipulate that a child can operate it. Standard size film is used, and the film can be run forwards or backwards, or if desired for lecture purposes can be stopped at any point and held stationary on the screen like an ordinary stereopticon slide, without the slightest danger from fire or other damage to the film.

Ran 169,000 Feet Without a Stop

"In actual tests 169,000 feet of film have been run through the American Projectoscope without a stop of any kind other than to change reels in the reel boxes. The film was not torn for any cause and the light never gave trouble. In fact the actual wear and tear on the film itself is far less when used in the Projectoscope than when run through the ordinary standard projection machine. We have found it ideal for inspection purposes at our plant and the stop and start feature alone made it superior for this purpose, when it came to the examination of sub-titles where it is sometimes hard to find a typographical error when the film is constantly on the move.

"Already a big demand exists for such a projector. Hundreds of big commercial organizations already possess thousands of feet of commercial film that they find it difficult to make use of. They have the pictures, but the showing of them has been a difficult problem. With the Projectoscope their salesmen are prepared to visit customers anywhere and in a moment display before them in motion pictures the product they are being asked to buy. It means the elimination of the small working model of locomotives, huge tractors and ponderous machinery of every kind from the salesman's equipment. Instead of asking his customer to examine the small model or look over still photographs of the machinery, the salesman now pulls down the curtains of an office, sets up his Projectoscope, and in ten seconds is prepared to show the actual machines themselves being assembled at the factory, tested out, and in actual operation. It will revolutionize salesmanship. Anybody can learn in a half hour's time to operate the Projectoscope. It will screen pictures anywhere—on a white wall—a window shade—a piece of white cardboard—even on the ceiling. It weighs but 21 pounds, carries like a suitcase, draws current from any ordinary electric light socket, uses either alternating or direct current, throws a perfect light, costs but a small sum.

"So far," went on Mr. Hutchinson, "we have only considered the use of the American Projectoscope for commercial purposes, but when we have our new plant operating to capacity we will aim undoubtedly to turn out a model for use in schools, churches and for educational work. The field is practically unlimited for such a device."

WITH NORTHWEST EXHIBITORS

Plans Made by Exhibitors for Big Convention on May 1, 2 and 3 with Unusual Entertainments for Guests

At the meeting held this week at the West Hotel, Minneapolis, the larger part of the time was devoted to discussing the progress of the convention committee on its work for the big convention to be held May 1, 2 and 3.

It was unanimously decided that an exposition involved so much work by the members that the important matters would be neglected and the purpose of the convention lost sight of. Therefore it was agreed that merely a convention would be held this year, with all the day hours devoted to the several important matters which are now under discussion by the Northwest Exhibitors' Corporation and the evenings to the entertainment of the out of town exhibitors.

All entertainment for the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the northwest will be absolutely free. The form of entertainments have been fixed as follows:

A banquet to be given at the West Hotel, which promises to be the best ever given, full of fun and entertainment.

A grand ball for the exhibitors and public, which will positively be the biggest ball ever given by the Northwest Exhibitors.

A midnight show, at which will be represented the best talent the Twin Cities can furnish.

A cabaret entertainment, which will satisfy the hearts of all exhibitors.

The Northwest Exhibitors' Corporation wants it understood by their out of town members that this entertainment will not be paid for by the individuals but by the organization, and promises the exhibitors the best time they have ever yet enjoyed at any convention.

Meetings will be held every day, and all the matters which have attracted so much attention of late, and which mean so much to the exhibitors, will be ably taken care of. Offices will be provided, so that the needs of the out of town visitors will be provided for and well informed persons will be stationed at prominent places to give information.

Arrangements will be made for the exchanges to meet the out of town exhibitors and have ample time to display their new features.

Taken all in all, this promises to be the biggest and most profitable convention ever held in the northwest.

Agnes Eyre, Powell player, who will appear prominently in support of Marjorie Rambeau and Nance O'Neil in several of the pictures made under the direction of Frank Powell for distribution through Mutual, works in and lives near the Powell-Mutual Studio at College Point, Long Island. Miss Eyre is very fond of her morning dip and the snow and the ice and the temperature of the water worry her not a bit.

FAIRBANKS SIGNS FOR STORY

Artcraft Star Obtains Typical Fairbanks Story by Editor of Picture-Play Magazine—Big Publicity Campaign

Douglas Fairbanks has just signed for the screening of "Far From the Maddening Girls" by Gerald C. Duffy, editor of the Picture-Play Magazine, the Street and Smith monthly. Mr. Duffy was assisted in preparing this story by Keene Thompson, well known in fiction circles for his humorous short stories.

In connection with the exploitation of the Duffy story an elaborate publicity campaign will be conducted which will include all the Street and Smith publications, including a novelization in four installments in Picture-Play to be published during the staging of the subject. The story is scheduled for production in about four months to be released by Artcraft, taking its turn with other already scheduled Fairbanks' scenarios.

A Good Drawing Serial

When one exhibitor is so enthusiastic about a production that he writes to his fellow theater manager and advises him to book it you may be sure it is an A-1 production.

C. H. Ross, manager of the Grand, Elmira, N. Y., is responsible for this letter recommending the Mutual serial:

Thinking you might be interested in a good drawing serial, I am writing you a little of my experience in one I am now running. It is "A Lass of the Lumberlands," featuring Helen Holmes. I have not had the crowd on Wednesdays in a long time that I had last Wednesday and the week before. I surely believe this serial is doing good business for me. If interested come up next Wednesday and see for yourself.

Pickford Picture Packs New Madison

Mary Pickford's latest Artcraft picture, "A Poor Little Rich Girl," marked the opening of the new Madison Theater in Detroit, John H. Kunsky's latest motion picture palace. For the entire run the theater witnessed capacity business and proved a fitting attraction as the opening feature for such a fine theater as the Madison. In speaking of Miss Pickford's newest offering Mr. Kunsky said:

Without a doubt, this is the finest, the brightest motion picture I have ever seen and little Mary is wonderful—wonderful! There is nothing better in the market today that could be used for the opening of our new theater and business has been enormous.

In order to view "A Poor Little Rich Girl" and pass upon it as a probable attraction to open his house Mr. Kunsky made a special trip to New York and immediately following the screening signed a contract for this production.

Much has been said about the illustrated title—not all in its favor. Like any other applied art, its value cannot be tested without a measure of efficiency in those applying it. A conclusive argument for the permanent installation of illustrated titles has been made by the splendid illustrations in the French play, "Mothers of France."

Interior Decorator Engaged by Lasky

The drift of times in motion picture production is indicated by the engagement of an interior decorator by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co., Inc. This man, an expert in his field of endeavor, will have complete supervision of every interior setting that is erected in the Lasky studio in Hollywood. Before work is begun on the construction of any setting, the plans must meet with the approval of the interior decorator who will immediately set about the procuring of whatever mural decorations and furniture he may deem advisable. This is the first time that any motion picture company has engaged an interior decorator exclusively for this work, and it is an indication of the amount of time, effort and money that is being expended in feature photoplays of today.

Clinton M. White is editing both "See America First" and "Tours Around the World" for the Gaumont Company.

Sunday Pictures Winning

OPEN HOUSES IN NEW YORK, NEW JERSEY AND CONNECTICUT PROBABLE

THERE is every indication that Sunday motion picture shows will be legalized in the states of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut within the next few weeks, as the result of well planned and energetic campaigns conducted by representatives of the exhibitors' leagues in these states, in co-operation with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

In New Jersey the Colgan Bill, containing a clause for referendum has passed the Assembly and is expected to be favorably acted upon in the Senate within a few days. It is generally believed that if this measure is passed by the senate it will be signed by Governor Walter E. Edge. Splendid work has been done in New Jersey by the exhibitors' organization, under the leadership of Dr. H. Chas. Hespe, the president, who has co-operated with Louis L. Blumenthal, a prominent New Jersey exhibitor and a director of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Connecticut Bill Passed

The Martin bill, introduced in the Connecticut legislature, providing for local option in regard to Sunday opening, was passed by the House by a vote of 137 to 80. This measure authorized athletic sports and amusements including the motion picture shows between the hours of two and ten o'clock on Sunday afternoons and evenings in towns of ten thousand population or more, provided a majority of the voters have decided by referendum vote to accept the provisions of the statute. This bill has been actively supported by the Connecticut Liberal Sunday Association and is acceptable to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

As the result of a hearing held before the Joint Codes Committee at Albany on Wednesday, it is confidentially expected that one of the bills under consideration will be reported favorably to the legislature, where there is little doubt but that a big vote will be recorded for the measure.

The advocates of picture shows on Sundays in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut have received wonderful encouragement in their campaigns through the enactment of a new law in Indiana where the motion picture theaters have been closed for the past five years.

Senator Franklin McCray of Indiana, introducer of the bill which successfully passed the legislature and was signed by Governor Goodrich, happened to be in New York last week and upon receipt of a wire from the Exhibitors' Protective Association of Indiana, offered his support in an effort to help, with the result that the Indiana legislator appeared before the Joint Codes Committee at Albany when he made a forceful argument in favor of the Sunday measures.

Other speakers at the hearing representing the film interests were William A. Brady, president of the World Film Corporation and president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Mayor George R. Lunn, of Schenectady, and Congressman-elect Harry Robitzek, chairman of committee of the board of aldermen of the city of New York, which had voted unanimously for having the motion picture theaters open on Sunday; Peter J. Brady, president Allied Printing Trades Council and representing organized labor in the State of New York; Rev. William H. Jackson, of the Dutch Reformed Church of Oyster Bay; Dr. Thomas B. Gregory, journalist, of Brooklyn, and J. Robert Rubin, attorney for Metro Pictures Corporation and the Exhibitors' League, who introduced the speakers representing the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Clergymen of all denominations were lined up against the proposed law to permit the opening of the theaters in New York on the Sabbath day.

Brady Makes Stirring Speech

One of the most vigorous speeches in favor of Sunday opening was made by William A. Brady of the World Film Corporation and president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. He declared that in a few years the story of the life of Christ will be taught in all schools on the motion picture screen, and added that other studies will be assisted by the films. He said:

I resent the accusation that the men behind the motion picture industry strive for immorality, and I also resent the accusation that the actors and producers are baneful and harmful and want to destroy the morals of the youth of the United States.

No class of entertainment ever invented in the mind of man has done more good for the masses than motion pictures. I am a churchgoer and attend to my religious duties, so do my wife and children, and I resent the insinuation that because we go to a motion picture show on Sunday that we have no respect for the Sabbath day. The motion pictures are doing more to make Sunday decent than all the churches.

Workmen in Favor

Peter J. Brady, speaking for the State Federation of Labor, said that the workmen of the state are in favor of Sunday showings. He viewed the opposition of the clergymen as being due to their inability to get people to go to their churches and blamed it on the motion pictures. Mr. Brady declared that the films are the poor man's pastime and education, and had done more to keep families united than any other form of amusement.

EXPOSITION HEADQUARTERS

General Managing Director Schindler Establishes Offices in Masonic Temple for Big National Exposition in Chicago July 14 to 22

Headquarters for the 1917 National Exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America have been established by Ludwig Schindler, manager, on the fourteenth floor of the Masonic Temple, Chicago, and within a week preparations for the annual event will be in full swing.

Schindler has tackled the task of managing the exposition in the characteristic Schindler way, and the Schindler way is action—lots of it. Many of the minor preliminaries are already out of the way. He is now selecting his aids although he is going at that task slowly for he wants to have the most efficient available staff to help him.

His next move is going to be a direct appeal to the producers and accessory manufacturers to make an early reservation of space in order that the exposition can be more thoughtfully planned than most affairs of its kind are. He will make an aggressive campaign to line up every possible exhibit at the earliest possible hour on the theory that by having his big exhibits arranged so soon in advance he will be able to make the exposition more complete and produce better results for the exhibitors.

Prize for Exhibitors

The 1917 exposition manager is not going to be content with merely a large list of exhibits. He is going to make a drive, in co-operation with the exhibitors at the show, to invite every theater owner in America to the 1917 exposition and convention and urge upon them to attend. To carry out this idea, he has in mind, in conjunction with the national executive committee of the League, a plan to offer a prize to the local organization having the largest representation in Chicago, July 14 to 22.

Manager Schindler is elated over the fact that the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has selected Chicago for its annual meeting and that the sessions will be held at the same time that the National Convention of exhibitors meets. The two conventions will bring together in Chicago during exposition week the big men in all the branches of the picture industry.

It is only necessary to know Ludwig Schindler to know that the 1917 exposition will be a success. He is full of enthusiasm and pep and is a result getter.

A Chicago honorary committee for the exposition has been appointed as follows: George K. Spoor, president Essanay Film Mfg. Co.; William N. Selig, president Selig Polyscope Co.; George Kleine, president Kleine Optical Co.; John R. Freuler, president Mutual Film Corporation; Watterson Rothacker, president Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co.

The finance committee, as announced in a previous issue of Motography, is as follows: Peter J. Schaefer, chairman Jones, Linick & Schaefer Co.; Nathan Ascher, Ascher Bros. Theatrical Enterprises; Joseph Trinz, Lubliner & Trinz, Enterprises.

"THE LAW THAT FAILED"

A Surprise Mystery Drama, Whose Leading Players Are Famous in Film World, Art Dramas Release

"The Law That Failed," an Apollo production on the Art Dramas program, combines the talents of three people especially distinguished in their chosen fields. These are Alma Hanlon, the leading woman, Edward Ellis, the leading man, and Louis Reeves Harrison, the author.

Alma Hanlon is known as "America's Magnetic Screen Star." She has appeared in several earlier Art Dramas, notably "God of Little Children." Before joining Apollo, Miss Hanlon was connected with Kalem, Ivan, Fox and other companies, where she was starred in big productions.

Edward Ellis, who plays opposite Miss Hanlon, has won distinction on the speaking stage, in the field of literature, and on the screen. He is also the author of a photoplay, to be released in the near future on Art Dramas program. It is a detective story, entitled "The Great Bradley Mystery."

Mr. Harrison, the author, is one of the best known motion picture journalists. He is the author of several valuable books on the photoplay, besides being a regular writer for the Motion Picture World.

"The Law That Failed" is a drama with a surprise ending, built out of a little known fact in law, that a murderer, proven guilty of his crime, can be acquitted on a legal technicality. Out of this Mr. Harrison has constructed a drama of unusual suspense, with no lack of human interest. A love story lightens the nature of its theme, and in the hands of the excellent cast it promises to be one of the most popular releases of the distinguished Art Dramas program.

New McClure Series

Frederick L. Collins, president of McClure Pictures and general manager of Superpictures, announces that "Seven Deadly Sins," the series of seven five-reel features now being released through the Triangle Distributing Corporation, will be followed immediately by a new series in a slightly different form.

The next McClure production is to consist of nine connected photoplays, divided into three groups of three dramas each with the stories so told that an exhibitor who cannot devote nine consecutive weeks to the showing of the series will be able to book them in three different periods as best suits his program. Shirley Mason, star of the former series, will appear in the new series whose themes and titles will be announced in the near future.

Mr. Collins is now in Los Angeles negotiating for actors and directors for his new companies and expects to obtain a McClure Los Angeles studio for the winter work.

Most of the McClure pictures will be made in New York but Mr. Collins now plans to make temporary arrangements for the spring work and by next fall expects to have a permanent studio established as the new McClure plans call for at least twelve features a year.

A publicity campaign in twenty-five magazines and many newspapers, will be launched as soon as the run of "Seven Deadly Sins" is completed. The newspaper campaign will begin as soon as the pictures are ready for release.

On his trip west, Mr. Collins stopped in a number of cities to confer with exhibitors and to study the motion picture situation. He says:

I find a strong demand for more pictures like "Seven Deadly Sins." Exhibitors want big pictures backed by big publicity and they all agree that in "Seven Deadly Sins" they have been furnished just what they want—which, of course, is just what the public wants.

Illinois Men Fight Censorship

The film men of Chicago and other cities in Illinois have mobilized to fight the pending censorship bills in the state legislature at Springfield. There are several bills affecting the industry pending in the legislative body, among them the Guernsey bill, which provides for state censorship, eliminating all local censorship. This is most likely to be passed.

This bill was discussed by Senator Guernsey and the Chicago film men at a meeting of the Reel Fellows' Club, March 16. A full report of this discussion and the complete Guernsey bill was published in the last issue of Motography.

Joseph Hopp, president of the Chicago Exhibitors' League, headed the delegation of film men which went to Springfield early in the morning of March 29. The other members of the delegation were Robert Levy, Alfred Hamburger, Fred Schaefer, Wm. Heaney, Wm. J. Sweeney, and Dr. Sam Atkinson, formerly of Los Angeles. A. J. Pegler accompanied the delegation, representing the Mutual Film Company.

Mary Miles Minter Feature April 16

April 16th has been set for the release date of the next Mary Miles Minter feature entitled, "Environment." This will be the first of a new series of four star productions featuring the young American star, which will be released through Mutual. These productions will be released on a four weeks' schedule.

Horse Introduces New Series

MANAGER D. S. McCARTY of Clune's Comedy Theater on Broadway in Los Angeles arranged an effective stunt featuring Shorty Hamilton on the occasion of the first run of the new series of Shorty Hamilton comedy-dramas, written and produced by William H. Clifford of the Monogram Film Company for the Mutual program.

Shorty Hamilton, accompanied by a band of cowhands and cow girls, opened the show by riding on the stage on his trained horse, Beauty, which appears in all of the "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton." Instead of making a speech after he was introduced, the cowboy stood by his horse while the screen showed him going through the motions of speech-making, abruptly ended by his horse boosting him out of the scene. "Even the horse wouldn't stand for it when I rehearsed," declared Shorty in conclusion, "so why should I inflict it on you folks?" After acknowledging the cheers, Shorty Hamilton rode down the aisle of the theater and out on the sidewalk where a large crowd had gathered.

Manager McCarty of Clune's declares himself greatly pleased with the reception which was given to the first of the pictures to be shown in Los Angeles. The first of the series, "Shorty Breaks the Yellow Ring," is to be followed each week at Clune's by another of the series of two reel comedy-dramas.

Exhibitor Sachs Blazes a New Trail

Edward Sachs, manager of the Morningside Theater at 2139 Eighth avenue, New York, originated a novel stunt that packed his theater recently, when he announced the personal appearance of a photoplaywright, as an added attraction.

Just before running the feature play, "The Royal Pauper," the author of the play, Henry Albert Phillips, appeared and made a few remarks that gave the audience some idea of the author's problems. When and how the story originated and how it was produced proved to be absorbingly interesting to the audience, judging from the profound attention and enthusiastic applause.

Henry Albert Phillips is already well known as a lecturer on the photodrama, as well as the author of several books on the subject, so he appeared to advantage in an element that was at his command. Mr. Phillips may be remembered for his one-act plays that have appeared in the Proctor and Keith houses and his magazine stories. Current photoplays by the same author are "The Royal Pauper," "A Dream or Two Ago," "Just a Song at Twilight" and "A Builder of Castles."

Manager Sachs is well known to the picture industry for his remarkable work in building up the patronage of the Drury Lane Theater at Fortieth street and Eighth avenue, New York, during the several years that he directed this theater. He was previously in the theatrical field, having played in vaudeville and on the legitimate stage, in "The Quaker Girl." Mr. Sachs was recently promoted to the management of the Morningside Theater as a reward for his good work at the Drury Lane. Already, the Morningside under his direction is showing a decided increase in business. Manager Sachs is a firm believer in high-class films and owes his success to his policy of keeping in close touch with his patrons and booking the photoplays that please them most.

"The Only Advertising That Pays."

F. R. Fancher, of the Pavilion Theater, Redondo, California, has analyzed the theater manager's advertising situation in a particularly clever manner, and because he has made a success out of his experiences, he has been willing to pass along his ideas in a terse, direct-to-the-point contribution. In telling the "only advertising that pays," he says:

Correct Screentime on This Clock

A clock face which indicates the hour at which each succeeding performance starts, six times a day. The Majestic Theater, Columbus, Ohio, uses this device. It is a reminder which serves as a convenience to patrons and has an influence in controlling the size of the audiences, by causing patrons to get in the habit of coming at a regular time.

"A boss bill poster at one time was trying to convince the owner of the circus that it was folly to use so much of the lithograph paper. His argument was answered by the owner something like this: 'I don't know which lithograph it is that gets the business—but we're getting the business. Keep on lithographing.' Taken in its broad sense this would seem to me to pretty well cover the question of what advertising pays best. First by experience find out what your locality requires and then keep everlastingly at it.

"There is no set rules that can govern all localities. Each exhibitor must solve the problem for himself. He must meet the conditions which surround the locality from which he draws his patronage.

"In my own case, in a city of 4,000, I have three standard bill boards located in widely separated districts in the residence section, each built to carry five three-sheets together with a date line on each. Each of these carries my full week's booking and is covered new, beginning each Monday morning, allowing a wide border of clean white paper. In the business section and in the vicinity of the theater I have three three-sheets each carrying the paper for one change only. These are posted early on the morning of the day of the showing.

"A mailing list of 300 carries my weekly program (no outside advertising) into the homes of a goodly share of my patrons. These are mailed on Thursday of the week preceding the showing. Once a month Paramount's Picture Progress is mailed with the program. By having programs printed at the local newspaper office for a small additional charge I secure their publication of the subject matter in their paper every week. Also use local papers for an occasional story on some of the more notable plays or players. This with a neat lobby display, seems to cover the needs of this house. I don't know which item gets the business but like the circus owner we get the business and I am satisfied.

"Advertising is a very important item. But what is of far more importance is to please your patrons after getting them. This is far easier today than was the case a few years ago. With the high-class pictures supplied by Paramount and a few other distributing organizations, with a fair degree of common sense displayed by the exhibitor in going after business and by showing an interest in the welfare of the patrons not altogether centered in the dime they leave in the box office, success becomes a matter not altogether depending on the amount of money spent in advertising.

"The very best advertisement there is consists in making one's patrons carry away a feeling of gladness for the time spent before his screen. After saying all that can possibly be said on the subject, that is the only advertising that really pays."

Mitchell H. Mark, who built New York's Strand Theater, joins Arthur Hopkins of the Goldwyn Pictures in the prediction that the day is not far distant when the higher class photodrama will be executed entirely in natural colors.

"Any one who has studied the Prizma Pictures as they have appeared at The Strand," declares Mr. Mark, "cannot but agree that photography in natural colors elevates screen production to the plane of genuine art. It is a process that transports more than action; it gives life."

The Orpheum Theater on State Street in the heart of Chicago presents some interesting studies in advertising and publicity practice. One feature of the house is the big lobby banner, new every day. It has become one of the institutions of State Street and it catches the eyes of thousands every hour. This picture was taken at the first run showing of "The Greater Woman," Marjorie Rambeau's first Powell-Mutual production.

A San Juan Picture House

The "theater beautiful" best describes the Cine Ideal of Santurce, San Juan, Porto Rico.

Ventilation being an important factor in all buildings in the tropics, nothing was overlooked that might contribute to the comfort of the patrons of the Ideal. There are doors every few feet along each side of the building, which can be left open when pictures are being projected, causing a constant circulation of air. Around three sides of the inside of the building there is a gallery having only a few rows of seats, and patrons are sure of not being overcrowded.

There is a sunken orchestra pit, used when all the seats on the lower floor have been taken out, and dances are held, but for pictures, a young musical prodigy performs on the piano.

The theater is located in the residential section of Santurce, and Americans are among its best patrons.

Gay Theater in Portland Oregon

In the height of Portland, Oregon's motion picture boom when keen competition demanded first class buildings and superior equipment, the Gay Theater was built. This house is now managed by H. C. Phelps but was originally built by Van Scoy and Hauck and was opened by S. S. Range.

Since Mr. Phelps took over the theater the admission price has been five cents except Wednesdays and Sundays when a dime is charged. The Gay is patronized by people of the working class who live in one part of the territory and by more well to do people who live in another part. By careful selection of the programs Mr. Phelps holds both classes. Projection is furnished by two Power machines.

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

THE state of Ohio and "The Birth of a Nation" have been fighting for sometime. The determined effort of the state legislature to procure the enactment of a law prohibiting the Griffith play from the state, has come to nothing. According to admissions recently made by Ohio politicians, this probably means that the noted play will run in Ohio without further difficulty.

Foundation work will start on the new theater at Miami, Oklahoma, April 1, to cost $30,000. T. F. Humphrey, formerly manager of the Electric at Claremore, will be the manager.

Some Irishmen have organizel the Shamrock Photoplay Corporation in San Antonio, Texas, with a capital of $10,000. The incorporators are P. S. McGeeney, A. Wolfson, L. S. Bishop and others.

It is estimated that over 500,000 tourists have prolonged their stay at Jacksonville, Florida, during the winter to see the construction of motion picture productions by the many film companies visiting that city.

At a recent vote in the house of assembly of the New Jersey legislature, the bill which would permit the operation of picture houses on Sunday, failed to pass only by three votes. It is expected that the bill will be taken up again later.

The pupils of the city high and Central Grammar schools at Hazelton, Pa., attended a performance in the Palace Theater recently when the Boston store showed special educational films about the manufacture of silk. The theater was crowded to overflowing.

Uncle Sam is the first to put federal censorship into actual operation; it is, however, limited to the showing of American naval vessels. A number of producers have been asked by the navy department to eliminate any such pictures from their releases.

Philadelphia is to have a brand new theater building costing about $750,000. It will be located at the southwest corner of Nineteenth and Market streets, and will be built by the Stanley Realty Company. Its material will be brick, steel and stone.

J. D. Fulrath, whose opera house at Savannah, Georgia, was destroyed by fire, has received the plans for his new theater which will soon be under process of erection. The new building will be four stories high. The basement will be eight feet. On the main floor there will be rooms for offices on either side of the entrance. There will also be office rooms on the second and third floors.

A feature of the Mardi Gras pageant of New Orleans during the recent festivities was the procession illustrating the products of the film industry, of which Frank Davis, manager of the Magic Theater, acted as marshal. The display of the Mutual Film Corporation led off this procession. One of the attractive floats was that illustrating the Mutual serial, "A Lass of the Lumberlands." This was piled high with great logs and a little girl impersonated Helen Holmes while a group of small boys in typical lumberman costumes represented the rest of the Signal players. S. T. Stephens, manager of the New Orleans Mutual exchange, was responsible for the Mutual representation in the Mardi Gras.

George M. Cohan was at the Strand Theater, New York, to greet members of the Friars Club who marched in a body from the Clubhouse to the theater to witness their Abbot's initial screen appearance in "Broadway Jones."

Uncle Sam is going to use Columbus, Ohio, picture houses to get his recruits for the army. Major Roberts of the recruiting station has announced he had made arrangements with the Colonial, Grand, Keith's and Majestic theaters to show a slide at every performance that will urge recruiting.

Fifteen hundred school children attended the "spud" matinee at a picture house at Lawton, Okla., March 17 No admittance fee was charged, other than that of a potato, which was accepted in exchange for a ticket at the box office. Six bushels of potatoes were the afternoon spoils for the picture show proprietors.

Interesting and thrilling motion pictures of the Pendleton, Oregon, Roundup will be shown for the first time at the Strand Theater, New York, during the weeks of April 1 and 8. These pictures were taken by the Oregon-Washington Film Company, under the supervision of the Pendleton Roundup Association.

Following his extremely successful presentation of Bernhardt's "Mothers of France" at the Rialto, Mr. Rothapfel is taking five days of well earned rest at Atlantic City. He went there with Felix F. Feist, sales manager of the World Film Corporation, and the first one that talks shop has to buy the other a spring hat.

Jack Leyland and F. S. Mosher have sold the Rex Theater at Utica, New York, to E. Andrew of Malone. Mr. Leyland has been engaged in the picture business for the past eight years and during that time has conducted a high grade class of entertainment, bringing to the business a natural gift for entertainment and an experience of several years standing.

The Brooklyn Museum enterprise of offering attractive and educational picture entertainments for older children and high school students, is achieving great success. On March 19, the following films were shown: "How a Letter Travels From Central Africa to Paris," "Landing of the Pilgrams," "The War on the Mosquito," "Pigs Is Pigs."

The theater owners' organization at St. John, New Brunswick, is called the Maritime Exhibitors' League. Its members include exhibitors from the coast towns in the district. The League's officers and the towns they represent are as follows: W. H. Golding, president; N. V. Gastonguay, Halifax, vice-president; G. J. B. Metzler, Halifax, treasurer; S. C. Hurley, St. John, secretary; F. W. Winter, Moncton, vice-president for New Brunswick; R. J. McAdam, Sydney, vice-president for Nova Scotia; F. G. Spencer, vice-president for Prince Edward Island.

E. and P. Garrison disposed of the Lyric Theater lease at South Bend, Indiana, to B. Deardorff of Three Rivers, Michigan. The consideration was not made public. Mr. Deardorff is an experienced motion picture manager and will give the Lyric his personal attention. Plans are being made for very extensive improvements in connection with the playhouse.

Judge Charles M. Foell has dissolved an injunction restraining the village clerk of Oak Park, Ill., from placing on the village election ballots a proposition concerning Sunday motion picture shows in that village. Attorney Myer J. Stein for the defense made a motion that the Rev. C. M. Carpenter, who obtained the injunction, be compelled to pay the costs. The court took the matter under advisement.

Jack Gleason, secretary of the Friars Club, through the courtesy of the management of the Strand Theater of New York, issued invitations to the members of the club to attend a performance at the Strand to honor their Abbot, George M. Cohan, during his stay with Broadway picture audiences, in "Broadway Jones." The Friars marched in column, headed by a brass band, from the Monastery to the Theater.

Two motion picture audiences were sent into the street and a three story building at 746 Milwaukee avenue, Chicago, was destroyed by fire last week with a loss of $100,000. The blaze originated in the upper floors of the building. Adjoining the burning building 700 persons were watching the motion pictures. The manager of the theater warned them and they filed out. This was repeated in another theater a few doors away.

According to a report of the Wheeler committee, which investigated the picture industry in New York recently, with a view to the possibility of imposing a tax upon it, one-tenth of all the films shown in the country, or thirty-eight million feet of film a year, is shown in New York. Also, the committee found it cost from $1.50 to $2.00 a foot to produce motion pictures. The committee also estimated that a million people a day attend pictures in New York.

The exhibitor is to be relieved of some of the impositions he now bears if the new producing company just organized in New York State carries out its plans. The concern is incorporated for $3,000,000, under the name, "Paralta Plays, Inc." The company will produce high class photo dramas and will release under conditions which it is said will revolutionize that part of the industry and extend to the exhibitor actual co-operation between him and the producer.

A broad smile of recognition may be seen to spread over the faces of George M. Cohan's friends as they pass in multitudes along Broadway in front of the Strand Theater of New York. He is standing out in the lobby every day while "Broadway Jones" is on the screen—two of him, in fact. Miniature statues of Mr. Cohan, fashioned by Helena Smith Dayton, the sculptress and originator of the "Animated Sculpture" being shown at the Strand, present the yankee doodle comedian in one of his eccentric dances waving an American flag, and in a contrasting pose, in one of his quiet moods, with his derby sloping sideways on his head and his legs crossed, while he leans on a frail cane.

Control of nine motion picture theaters in Atlanta, Ga., has been procured by Jake Wells, owner of large theatrical interests in Richmond and other Southern cities. The new theaters, which are added to the Wells interest through reorganization, are the Rialto, Odeon, Strand, Vaudette, Alamo No. 1, Alamo No. 2, Alpha, Criterion and Savoy.

A new big film house covering East End activities, Bridgeport, Conn., is the Hippodrome, managed by Joseph Saperstein, a former New York theatrical man. This place is being rebuilt and remodeled on East Stratford avenue by its enterprising manager. It will be finished by June, seating 1,200 people, at a cost of $15,000 extra expenditure. First run pictures will be a feature. Big business now attends pictures in this thriving center of the manufacturing town.

With Celtic music in honor of the day, the new moving picture theater in Roselle Park, Elizabeth, N. J., which is housed in the Borough Hall, was formerly opened March 17 by Alphonse Goettler, of New York. A high-class program of films was exhibited. This is not the first time film men have tried to do business in Roselle Park, but they failed chiefly because of a gradual decline in the quality of the films exhibited. Goettler says he will furnish good films.

The Rialto Theater of New York featured "The Clock," a Bluebird play, as its chief pictorial feature in its last week's program. A young tenor from the San Francisco Opera Company sang several selections, supplementing the work of the Rialto orchestra. The Rex Beach-Dr. Salisburg pictures were also shown. These deal with a lion hunt and views of central American industries. "The Dipper," a novel comedy based on Walt Mason's popular small town poems and the regular topical weekly, completed the program.

The Minneapolis grand jury has been asked by Judge Dickinson in the district court to watch for violations by theaters of laws and ordinances relating to decency, and to censor motion pictures and stage productions. The mayor is usually looked to to exercise this authority. The action of the court follows revocation of the license of the Regent Theater after James McClenaghan, manager of the theater, had exhibited for three weeks the film "The Garden of Knowledge," without hindrance from the police or the mayor's office.

The Rialto of Denver, showing Mary Pickford in "The Poor Little Rich Girl," entertained the state officers and members of the Legislature, and credential cards good for the balance of March for admission to the film theaters of the city have been placed on the desks of the members of the Legislature. The censorship bills are apparently securely buried and will not come to a vote for the reason that they are inadvisable legislation and the popular demand for such legislation is not very strong. The law prohibiting Sunday theaters, which has been a dead letter for many years, is to be repealed, providing the upper branch of the Legislature reaches the bill for action.

"Business as Usual"

IT has been the pride of Great Britain, during thirty-two months of intense warfare, to maintain as nearly as possible the status quo of national life. "Business as usual" has been the slogan of English industry.

If, as seems destined, we get into actual war, we should be equally jealous of our ability to continue business as usual. Some lines, of course, will be busier and more prosperous than usual. Others, perhaps, must suffer.

But the motion picture business is one of those which, logically, should be little affected. The picture theater is outside of the luxury class by reason of its low prices. It is available to those out of employment, who have ample leisure, for the same reason. It is available to those who are exceptionally busy because of its convenience to either their place of employment or their home.

But the feature that best guarantees its continued activity, even in the midst of war, is its adaptability. It is fitted to help in the scheme of the hour. It can join with enthusiastic usefulness in whatever work is being carried forward. It can convey to the people news of importance, lessons of value, stories of heartening effect.

The very necessities of war, the work of recruiting for navy and army, the graphic illustration of what it means to be a nurse or a munition worker, are only examples of a hundred things that the pictures can and will do as their part in the general scheme.

Though we are all willing to face what privations may be brought upon us in the cause of justice, there is always the hope that a nation that subsists upon its industry may continue to offer all the rewards of industry to those who labor. And there is satisfaction in the thought that our own industry will earn its continuation of activity by a usefulness to humanity greater than its workers could render in any other way.

More Showmanship and Less Criticism

NO exhibitor, of course, can make first class entertainment out of a bad program, any more than a good workman can get artistic results with poor tools. But some few talented showmen can come pretty near doing it. They can project even the lowest grade of pictures with such care, and surround them with such good music and such an atmosphere of romance—the peculiar glamour of the first class theater—that their patronage will be persuaded it was a good show.

A certain traveling exhibitor, whose name will be recalled by many of our readers, made a big success of this very thing. It was his custom to take one of the best theaters in the biggest cities for a week's showing of the same program—the only program he had. He charged fifty and twenty-five cents.

His films were old scenic, travel and industrial subjects. Some of them may not have cost him anything, and certainly none of them cost very much. He never changed them. They did not get rainy or dirty or oil-spotted because he paid his operator a little more than the usual scale, and demanded care. Between films he filled in with a few trick slides, such as itinerant lecturers used to spring on the Sunday school class. All old stuff.

That's the negative side of the picture. Here is the positive side:

When he took over a first class theater for a week, he maintained all its regular machinery. The seats were reserved. There were plenty of ushers. The lighting of the auditorium was correct. The performance began at standard "legitimate" time. The orchestra played an overture before the curtain went up—yes, he used the curtain, though there was nothing but a screen behind it.

The orchestra, though small, was good. Never having to adapt itself to a new program, it naturally became extremely proficient in interpreting the old one, and the pictures and music fitted together like the finished parts of a machine.

The orchestra was not the only sound-producer this exhibitor employed. Behind the screen he had a highly ingenious collection of "sound effects." There was hardly a sound of any kind suggested by the pictures that he could not, and did not, reproduce in a refined way.

That was about all. The only things he had that are not now employed by the average exhibitor were reserved seats and sound effects—those and the afore-mentioned glamour of the first class house.

The reserved seat plan is useful only when the prices for seats are graded according to location. It is the formal system against the informal system of finding your own seat. Informality has many virtues. It has encouraged the working man to escort his family to the neighborhood theater without troubling to shave or change his collar. Therefore it has brought many patrons who otherwise would have stayed away.

Nevertheless, formality also has its attractions. The reserved seat plan carries with it a sense of importance, a feeling of occasion and circumstance that helps hugely to get a larger admission price. It is a great deal easier to get twenty-five or fifty cents for reserved seats than it is to get the same amount for general admission. The exhibitors of better pictures, or perhaps we should say the better exhibitors of pictures, will come to the reserved seat plan in time because its psychological effect is money in their pockets. The better class of patrons prefer the reserved seat house to the general-admission house just as they prefer the table-service cafe to the cafeteria.

Sound effects lost out mainly because there was a tendency to make them ridiculous. Properly studied, sound effects are artistic and valuable. The fact that it takes a real artist to fit them to the picture without overdoing it, to make them merely help the imagination of the audience without attempting to attract a major part of its attention, and the fact that real artists are scarce in the exhibiting field, explains their absence from the modern program.

The glamour of the first class "legitimate" theater can be reproduced in the picture theater by the proper exercise of showmanship—though it seldom is. That is all that need be said about that feature.

The whole point of all this argument is that, in our opinion, the typical exhibitor pays entirely too much attention to criticism of his film service and neglects the elements of showmanship that bring success out of even a mediocre program.

The films supplied right now are good enough for any reasonable admission price, if presented with the care and skill and appreciation of show psychology (meaning merely human nature) that some of the old showmen displayed.

The exhibitors rely too much on the producers and too little on the brains that a benevolent nature supplied them with. The old showmen, in the days before the pictures spoiled their business, could attract a crowd with almost anything—backed up by their ingenuity. Today, if the whole show is not served to them in shape to draw paying patronage without further effort, they kick.

It is up to the progressive exhibitor to demand the best that he can get. It is up to him to rent the best film service he can afford. But it is not up to him to complain if the films alone do not bring him business enough to pay a profit.

Human nature responds to a lot of things that the average exhibitor does not even dream of, apparently. There would be fewer failures in the motion picture theater business if there were more old fashioned showmanship used, and less tendency to put it all up to the producer.

Vitagraph De Luxe Re-issues

FORMER FAVORITES RELEASED TO AUDIENCES OF NEWER PATRONS

GREATER VITAGRAPH, encouraged by the warm reception given the recently re-issued edition of "My Official Wife" by exhibitors and patrons alike, is planning to send out in de luxe editions re-issues of a number of its early favorites so that the many converts to motion pictures made since the first release may have an opportunity of enjoying these pictures. The two announced for release through V. L. S. E. to follow "My Official Wife" are "A Million Bid," dated April 2, and "Captain Alvarez," April 9.

Exhibitors who booked "My Official Wife" reported a tremendous business. Their consensus of opinion was that their audience went away well pleased and feeling that the entry fee had been amply repaid. This experience caused the management of Greater Vitagraph to feel that re-issues should be the vogue rather than the exception.

In putting out "My Official Wife" the Greater Vitagraph management, through the V. L. S. E. branch managers and roadmen, cautioned the exhibitors that there would be wisdom in the course of advertising and promoting the picture as a re-issue and warned them that it would be unwise to attempt to foist the picture on the public as a new production.

The great majority of the exhibitors who booked "My Official Wife" did advertise it as a re-issue through an explanatory note on the house program and several of them later announced that this was an unnecessary precaution owing to the excellence of the picture.

Greater Vitagraph used these precautionary measures believing them to be necessary owing to the strides made in later day photography and also believing that the costumes of the performers would show conclusively that the productions had been screened some time ago.

The fact that the re-issued picture had been rehabilitated, retitled and practically remade as far as possible without the retaking of the picture seems to have eliminated all of these dangers, but Greater Vitagraph is still suggesting that re-issues be described as such in order that the public will not be misled.

Another condition that has caused Greater Vitagraph to decide to re-issue its early masterpieces is the advance made by the exhibitors in their knowledge of the proper manner to show the pictures to their audiences. Some of the former masterpieces which were shown to audiences without music accompaniments, with miserable projection, with titles and sub-titles that failed to tell the story and left too much to the imagination, will be increased in show value at least one thousand per cent when shown to the accompaniment of music, with new titles and sub-titles and with expert printing and projection.

"A Million Bid" on April 2

The next re-issue scheduled by Greater Vitagraph on April 2, "A Million Bid," as many of the exhibitors will recall, is the story of a man who is supposed to have lost his life in a shipwreck leaving a widow and a child. He is rescued absolutely devoid of memory. After a suitable length of time the widow is married to a prominent surgeon, a sweetheart of her younger days. The first husband returns. He is brought to the second husband for an operation to be performed with a hope of restoring his memory. During the operation the supposed widow of the patient as well as the wife of the surgeon, in hysterics, awaits outside the operating room.

With the operation apparently successful the patient dies just when thought to be out of danger—and without recovering his memory. With the operation proving to be a failure the question arises whether the surgeon did his best or deliberately left something undone in order that he would not have to give up his wife to her legal husband.

The play is replete with tense situations which are brought to the acme of dramatic perfection through a cast consisting of Anita Stewart, Harry T. Morey, E. K. Lincoln, Julia Swayne Gordon, Charles Kent, Mary Maurice and Kate Price. The direction is by Ralph W. Ince.

A Spanish American Love Story

"Captain Alvarez" is one of those gripping Spanish American revolutionary stories in which love, intrigue and treachery surrounding love, politics and the country's treasury play equal parts. The entire action surrounds a young American who journeyed to Argentine on business some seventy years ago and who immediately became the leader of the revolutionists. He is trapped and retrapped, captured and escapes and finally is conceded to bear a charmed life. Eventually in the sixth reel of the picture he defeats the Federalists and marries the woman who was the cause of his revolutionary inspirations.

When the picture was originally shown, Kitty Kelly, the discriminating motion picture critic then with The Tribune of Chicago and now with the Chicago American wrote:

> There are so many things to say about "Captain Alvarez" that it is hard to know where to begin, and what is worse, it would be harder to know where to stop. It is an exceedingly good picture—good from all the angles which a picture has to show the public—and therefore it bristles with opportunities to say nice things. It is as romantically melodramatic a story as any fertile-minded novelist ever conceived.

The "Captain Alvarez" cast consists of Edith Storey, William D. Taylor, George C. Stanley, George Holt, Otto Lederer, Myrtle Gonzales, and George Kunkel.

In keeping with the idea of bringing its re-issues up to date Greater Vitagraph is issuing a new line of paper, consisting of stands from one to twenty-four sheets, with each re-issue, sending out new press sheets and is advertising the re-issues as if they were recent productions. Every possible assistance is given the exhibitor to make the same box office attraction of the re-issue that thouands of them throughout the country are doing with Greater Vitagraph's current releases.

Cohan Picture Praised

Shortly following the trade showing of George M. Cohan in his initial Artcraft picture, "Broadway Jones" in New York, the production was given an advance premier for the benefit of the daily press at Pittsburgh, following a luncheon tendered by the local Artcraft exchange manager, Jos. Klein, at the Fort Pitt Hotel. Every Pittsburgh daily, seven in all, was represented and upon conclusion of the showing the picture was unanimously announced a triumph. Great success was predicted for the film.

COMING MUTUALS

Margarita Fischer in "The Devil's Assistant" for April 2—Unusual Chapters in Unusual Series—"Two Good Gigglers"

Margarita Fischer in "The Devil's Assistant," a dramatic picturization of the drug evil, will be released by the Mutual Film Corporation at the top of its schedule for the week of April 2.

"The Devil's Assistant" is a six-part production from the Pollard Picture Plays studios at San Diego, made under the supervision of Harry Pollard.

While the picture may be classified as a propaganda picture against the drug evil, it is presented in true dramatic narrative form, with a story which does not depend on the drug element for its interest and suspense.

Special promotional possibilities present themselves. The exhibitor perhaps can gain special attention to the production in some communities by inviting ministers and physicians to the initial showing—and giving liberal publicity to their opinions.

Miss Fischer's role in this picture is somewhat reminiscent of her important success in the big birth control picture entitled "The Miracle of Life," released nearly two years ago with marked success. "The Devil's Assistant" abounds in spectacular material, with startling use of storm scenes, a few views of Hell and many handsome interiors.

Shorty Is Still Sleuthing

"Shorty Solves the Wireless Mystery," released April 2, the twelfth of the stories in which Shorty Hamilton is appearing for Mutual, deals with intercepted wireless messages, and foreign submarines obtaining the dates of the sailing of American vessels, and shows submarines appearing and receiving messages and then submerging again, all of which will immediately arouse interest at this time.

Advertising the fact that the story shows how a piano and a wire clothes line were utilized for sending wireless messages will attract every boy and young man who is interested in the mysteries of sending and receiving of wireless messages.

"Kidnapped" is Last "Girl Reporter" Story

"Kidnapped" is the fifteenth and final story in "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" series which Mutual is releasing. It is a strenuous story of a caveman, who, when the woman he loves will not do just as he says, kidnaps her and keeps her prisoner on a houseboat.

Grey Seal Gets in Some Good Work

"The Counterfeit Five," the third of the "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal" series, will be released on April 6. These stories have raised many arguments among the people seeing them as to whether the good which Jimmie does for the deserving poor counteracts his criminal acts. To intensify the interest of your patrons in the series it might be a good plan to offer a prize of a pass too the theater for a certain length of time, to the person, who after seeing each of the eight first stories, writes the best letter of not more than one hundred and fifty words telling why the criminal appearance of Jimmie's acts should be overlooked in view of the good he does.

Two Good Gigglers

The Cub Comedy which will go to the public on April 5 will be "The Lady Detective." George Ovey will be featured in this picture as he has in the last seventy-five Cubs.

The Vogue "laughter," ready April 7, will be "Why Ben Bolted." Ben Turpin enacts the principal role in the story, the plot of which hinges on the result of an April fool joke.

One-Reel Gaumonts

"Mutual Tours Around the World," released April 3, shows two of the three islands in the West Indies recently purchased from Denmark, St. Thomas and St. Croix.

"Reel Life," ready April 5, is made up of the following topics: "Rubber," showing the cultivation of rubber plants in northern Brazil; "A One-Man Submarine," demonstrating how these boats will be operated; "Making Bread the Modern Way," and "Magnetism," showing how magnets are made.

Art Dramas Films Zola

"A Man and the Woman," an Art Dramas play produced by Herbert Blache, is the first presentation in motion pictures of a novel by Emile Zola, the famous French novelist, founder of the realistic school of literature. It is a picture version of "Nantas," a story which aroused much discussion when first published.

The original story has been followed closely in the adaptation, only the locale being changed. In the screen version the story is laid in America, instead of in Paris.

The play deals with James Duncan, an unsuccessful young lawyer who married Agnes, a rich girl, to save her from the disgrace of a former love affair threatens her with. He grows to love her. Later her first lover returns and wishes to marry her. She sends him away but by means of a false friend of Agnes', he causes Duncan to suspect his wife, and there is a quarrel. In the end, Agnes realizes that her love is for her husband and not for the man who had wronged her.

A cast of sterling merit enacts this tense drama. Edith Hallor is Agnes. Leslie Austen gives a vigorous characterization of Duncan, while Crawford is played by Kirke Brown.

Smith Novel on Lasky Screen

F. Hopkinson Smith's famous novel "The Tides of Barnegat," which has been one of the most popular books of the generation, has been adapted as a motion picture by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co. and is scheduled for release by Paramount on April 12, with Blanche Sweet starring. Mr. Smith's wonderful descriptive powers and his knowledge of the sea combined with the quaintness of the setting which he chose for his story make "The Tides of Barnegat" so realistic and so absorbingly interesting that it ranks today among the few really great American novels of our time. It is a peculiarly human story of self-sacrifice and sisterly devotion which in itself would have a strong appeal were it shorn of its fascinating elements.

End of a Rumor

The General Film Company and the Essanay Company wish to announce that the report that the Essanay Company has withdrawn from the General Film Company is untrue.

The Essanay Company will continue to release its short subjects through the General Film Company as usual.

"The Great Adventure," a five act feature, featuring Mignon Anderson and Molly Malone, is nearly completed at Universal City.

Triangle Expanding

KAY-BEE AND FINE ARTS PLANTS SUPERVISED BY INCE—NEW STUDIOS

THE announcement that Thomas H. Ince will have charge of the Triangle-Fine Arts studios in Hollywood, California, in addition to carrying on his work as director-general of the Kay-Bee studios in Culver City, has aroused unusual interest among exhibitors

H. Bristol, Thomas H. Ince and Allan Dwan, big guns behind the new Triangle. Mr. Ince is to have charge of the Fine Arts plant in addition to his own Kay-Bee.

throughout the country. Since the news was wired from the coast last week, telegrams of congratulation and endorsement have poured into the Culver City and New York offices of the contracting interests. The tenor of these messages makes it plain that from the exhibitor's point of view, no move could have been taken to give a better guarantee of leadership to the Triangle program.

Triangle executives in the East are also being congratulated upon securing the services of Allan Dwan as supervising director of the new Triangle studios recently opened on the former estate of Clara Morris at Yonkers, New York.

W. N. Seligsberg, secretary of Triangle Film Corporation, issued the following statement regarding these important changes:

The announcement made by us in the trade papers last week that Thomas H. Ince will in future have charge of production at the Fine Arts studios in Hollywood, California, as well as the Kay-Bee studios in Culver City, while Allan Dwan will be installed as supervising director of the new Triangle studios at Yonkers, N. Y., has aroused so much favorable comment that we feel sure these moves have met the desires of our patrons in all parts of the country.

According to the most carefully compiled reports of unprejudiced film critics, Triangle releases produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince have been the best box-office attractions of any program releases produced during the past year. This fact confirms the claim of Ince adherents that the presiding genius of Culver City is perhaps the greatest supervising director that the motion picture industry has yet produced. It would be unreasonable not to admit that other directors have achieved the same degree of excellence in individual productions, but it is a noteworthy fact that Ince has outdistanced all competitors in his ability to keep his organization running at the top notch of efficiency month in and month out. No other producer can be called to mind with a list of successes equally imposing, turned out in the regular course of events. Ince is not only a director of the highest quality himself, but he possesses the much rarer accomplishment of being able to stimulate his subordinates to their best endeavors under all circumstances.

Allan Dwan is also a man who has proven his worth by the production of features of remarkable box-office value. Many of the most successful Fine Arts plays were done under his direction, and like Ince, he has the unusual faculty of getting splendid results out of associate directors, working under his supervision.

Career of Thomas H. Ince

Although the career of Thomas H. Ince is too well known to call for more than the briefest mention in retrospect, the spectacular rise of this young American producer would make a human interest drama as compelling as any he has put on the screen.

Born in Newport, R. I., in 1882, the son of John E. Ince, a well-known comedian of the past generation, young Ince grew up in the atmosphere of the theater, and while he was still young enough to wear knickerbockers, appeared in a satire on "Lady Windmere's Fan" with Henry Miller and May Irwin. This led to other engagements and finally he forsook the legitimate stage to become a vaudeville headliner. During the autumn of 1910, when things were none too prosperous in the amusement world, Ince was glad to accept a job as an actor in the old Imp studio at $5 a day. But this marked the turning of the tide that rapidly carried him out on the high seas of prosperity. Ince was soon put in charge of a company, and was so successful that his work attracted the attention of

Kessel & Baumann, who engaged him as manager of the plant they were opening up in Edendale, California. From the first he sought newer and better ways for improving screen production.

In less than seven years Thomas H. Ince has risen from the ranks of the $30 a week cohorts to the management of two of the largest and best equipped producing studios in America. Judging from his past achievements, Ince will add many more interesting chapters to the history of motion picture drama as a world force in his dual capacity of director-general of the Kay-Bee and Fine Arts studios during the months to come.

Triangle Plants Expanding

For some weeks past extensive construction work has been under way at both the Culver City and Hollywood plants.

A fifth huge light-studio is already nearing completion at Kay-Bee headquarters. This is said to be one of the largest glass buildings in the world. There is only enough structural steel being used to support the great glass sashes, so that the volume of light necessary for the taking of perfect exposures will be unobstructed. In order that sufficient electric current may be guaranteed at all times, Ince is also installing a large generator for the new Kay-Bee power house, which is being erected between studios No. 2 and No. 3. This power house is of hollow tile construction, faced with concrete stucco, to harmonize with the other buildings at Culver City. The generator has a capacity of 450 horsepower, and will supply current to all of the buildings covering the ten-acre enclosure.

Recent additions to the Fine Arts studios at Hollywood have put that plant in excellent shape to take on a new lease of life under the Ince regime. A new central dock, 180 feet in length and 70 feet in width, has been built to house the elaborate interior settings that are being utilized for forthcoming releases. On either side of the scene dock is a runway, leading to each of the new stages, while a fleet of large baggage trucks with low wheels is employed to carry sets and properties to their proper destination.

The new light studio nearing completion at the north end of the property is up-to-the-minute in every particular. It is said to have the highest roof and the best facilities for overhead lighting of any building of its kind on the coast. Some idea of its unusual construction may be gathered from the statement that there is a distance of 48 feet from the floor to the first roof girder. A new electric generator has also been installed, and under the guidance of efficiency engineers the entire plant is being overhauled.

Stars Remain with Triangle

The new management has taken over the existing agreements with Bessie Love, Wilfred Lucas, Seena Owen and Alma Rueben, and these popular players are being supported by full and well rounded companies.

Work is being rushed to completion upon the new Triangle studios on Riverdale avenue, Yonkers, which will be in charge of Allan Dwan, as supervising director. As previously mentioned, this is the former Clara Morris estate, one of the most beautiful and historic properties in the Riverdale section. The old twenty-roomed mansion, overlooking the Hudson River, has been remodeled into an executive building. H. E. Aitken, president of the Triangle Film Corporation, will have a suite of offices here, together with his associates. Charles M. Parker, vice-president of Triangle, will also make his headquarters at the Yonkers studio.

A new light studio, with an adjoining outdoor stage, is now being equipped with every modern appliance to meet the needs of three companies. The walls and roof of the building are made of ground glass, instead of the ordinary florist's glass, so that the diffusion of light will be uniform under all circumstances. The eastern walls, opening on the outdoor stage, have been swung on hinges, to allow the shifting of entire sets indoors or out to meet weather conditions.

It is proposed to make the plant entirely independent of outside assistance, and to carry out this ideal, a large carpenter shop and machine shop is being erected, as well as a developing laboratory. Projection and cutting rooms will also be the best that money and brains can devise.

Director Dwan is an Electrical Engineer

Allan Dwan, who leaves the employ of Goldwyn to direct the dramatic destinies of the new studio, has already firmly established his right to be classed as one of the most remarkably successful directors of production that the industry has developed. Born in Toronto, Canada, about thirty years ago, Dwan accompanied his parents to Chicago as a child, and after a course in the local public schools, entered Notre Dame University. He graduated as an electrical engineer with honors, and during 1907 taught electrical engineering in the same institution. Fired with the ambition to become an author, however, he forsook the life of a college professor, and after a brief experience as a free lance, secured a position as a scenario writer for the Essanay Company in 1908.

Two years later he became scenario editor for the American Film Company, and in the course of events was given a company of his own. Successful from the first, it was not long before Dwan received an offer from the Famous Players, where he directed Mary Pickford and other luminaries. Shortly after the formation of the Triangle, Dwan joined the producing staff, and during the year he was connected with the organization, prior to his engagement by Goldwyn, directed a number of the biggest popular successes released on the Triangle program. Dwan was largely responsible for the phenomenal success of the Fairbanks' classics, "The Habit of Happiness," "The Good Bad Man," "The Half Breed," and "Manhattan Madness." In this connection it is perhaps not generally known that Dwan produced "The Good Bad Man," which was used to open the new Rialto Theater in New York, in less than ten days, a record that has never been equaled by any director in the world. Dwan writes his own working scripts, and his ability to plan the literary details of his productions, together with his thorough familiarity with the mechanical and laboratory work that goes to the making of a faultless screen play, gives him an all-round grasp of the art that is rarely met with.

"Vital, interesting stories, full of constructive ideas and brimming with human characterization is the ideal we have set for accomplishment at the new studio," Dawn announced when asked for a statement regarding immediate plans. "We shall be extremely conservative regarding the exploitation of new stars, and shall make no effort to force personalities into popularity that have not been earned by genuine accomplishment. In fact, this matter shall be left to Triangle patrons to decide. The advancement of players will depend entirely upon their ability to win the aproval of their real employers—the general public. Records will be kept to determine the manner in which stories and players are received, and we can promise that no unwholesome or forbidding themes will be foisted upon our patrons, and that no 'stars,' unworthy of the brilliance accorded them, will be manufactured overnight. The Triangle trade-mark has come to have a value greater than the drawing power of any particular personality. In the future, as in the past, we expect to add to this prestige by the production of big plays, throbbing with vitality. The successful dramatization of human nature—that will be our end and aim."

Exchange of Players Planned

Among other interesting plans that the unification of Triangle producing interests will make possible, will be the exchange of players between western and eastern studios. The first exchange of this kind will take place early in the summer, when Enid Bennett will come east to appear under Dwan's direction for several months, and incidentally to get the benefit of eastern environment.

Goldwyn Comedienne Draws Cartoons

MADGE KENNEDY'S NAME WILL APPEAR ON NEWSPAPER COMICS

Madge Kennedy, Goldwyn comedienne, whose name is to appear on a series of newspaper comics.

MADGE KENNEDY, the Goldwyn Pictures comedienne, who devotes talent and brains to the serious business of making the public smile as much and as often as she finds channels of expression for her art, is making the acquaintance of editors. She has hit upon a new idea for supplementing her work before the camera. Her popularity, already wide-reaching, will be given food for growth through a series of cartoons, the handiwork of Miss Kennedy, which are to appear shortly in newspapers all over the country.

Each exhibitor can if he wishes demonstrate his gallantry by interesting the editor of one of his local newspapers in publishing Miss Kennedy's cartoons, at the same time benefiting himself as an exhibitor, if later on he presents any of the productions of Goldwyn in which Miss Kennedy is to appear. The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is arranging with the first applicant among the newspaper editors of various cities and towns for the exclusive use of the cartoons. Exhibitors may often have enough influence with their local newspapers to induce one of them to use the series.

Print Three of Series a Week

Miss Kennedy is now hard at work on the cartoons, which will be published in a series consisting of comic strips of the dimensions as the "Mutt and Jeff" and "Polly" comics in the daily papers. They will be furnished in matrix form, seven columns wide. The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation places one condition on their use. The newspaper must print in the signature line above the strip, "By Madge Kennedy, Goldwyn Pictures Famous Star." Three comics a week will be available and possibly six later.

The new Goldwyn Pictures producing alliance, which was not content until it had captured Mae Marsh, Mary Garden, Maxine Elliott, Jane Cowl and Madge Kennedy for the screen, has several distinctive ambitions. The Goldwyn managers do not want their productions to be like other motion pictures. They wish to bring a new type of players to the screen, a new type of scenic settings into the celluloid drama; to create a new type of direction and build up an atmosphere distinctive to Goldwyn productions.

How it has been done in one of the Goldwyn pictures in which Mae Marsh is the star offers an illustration. There is a restaurant scene in the play which must be peopled with "smart" women. Adolph Klauber, who engages the artists for Goldwyn, despaired of finding the types the picture calls for from among the job-seeking extras that haunt the studios. He solved the problem of obtaining the "right" people when, a few mornings ago, sixteen charming women living on upper Fifth avenue and the West Side of New York received invitations to be the guests of Mary Marsh for a luncheon at Sherry's. Mary Marsh, the hostess, was, of course, Mae Marsh, the Goldwyn Pictures' star, a fact that she did not reveal to her guests, fourteen in number, until the luncheon party of four tables was well under way.

As a result of the venture, Miss Marsh will be supported in her newest Goldwyn Picture by an even dozen New York society girls.

"Bobbie" Harron at Goldwyn Studios

Mae Marsh and Bobbie Harron are at work in Miss Marsh's second Goldwyn Picture, now being made at the Fort Lee studios by Director John W. Noble. The scenario for their picture is the work of Mary Rider, a playwright and author of wide reputation who wrote a dramatic vehicle in which Marguerite Clark won successes, as well as several successful scenarios for Mary Pickford pictures.

Vernon Steele, who is Mae Marsh's leading man in her first Goldwyn Picture, is a handsome and clean-cut young Englishman who, in his brief film career, has, like countless other sons of the empire, followed his country's flag into the world's far corners.

Miss Elliott has just completed her first picture under the direction of Allan Dwan and in a few days will face the camera again for her second picture under a second director not yet announced by Goldwyn. Miss Elliott's second picture gives her a mystical and powerful role bigger than any she has ever had in her entire career, says her director.

There is still another Goldwyn player in the person of Marguerite Marsh. "Lovey" Marsh, as a star of Biograph, Reliance and Fine Arts-Triangle pictures, including many Griffith productions, has been seen by more millions than any man or woman who was born or ever lived in the Sunflower state.

"Lovey" Marsh With Goldwyn, Too

Mary Garden's first picture will be ready in September. . Goldwyn is directing its newspaper publicity for Miss Garden's introduction to picture audiences, toward the end of drawing new patrons to the theaters, as well as the old audiences. The stories of conditions in France which will appear in American newspapers during her stay in France is only one of the instruments of publicity that are now being utilized by Goldwyn to create a national fame for Miss Garden as a motion picture star, as well as to keep alive the popularity she has known for many years as a star of grand opera.

Adrian Gil-Spear to Head Scenario Department

Goldwyn has announced the engagement of Adrian Gil-Spear as the chief of its scenario department, effective April 1.

Gil-Spear, who made the exceptionally fine scenario of "The Barrier," Rex Beach's recent production of his own novel and who has just completed the scenario for "The Auction Block," another of Mr. Beach's stories, is also well known as a poster and magazine artist, whose name and work are familiar to virtually all readers of the larger illustrated magazines.

His last work before joining Goldwyn will be the completion of the scenario of "The Dark Star," a Robert W. Chambers' story for the International.

Gil-Spear brings to Goldwyn a vigorous artist's appreciation of pictorial values and a definite understanding of drama.

Dion Titheradge in Marsh Picture

Dion Titheradge, now playing with Laurette Taylor in "The Harp of Life," has been engaged by Goldwyn Pictures to appear in the second Mae Marsh production, now being made in Fort Lee. Miss Marsh's latest picture is the work of Mary Rider, who is the author of several of Miss Pickford's successes.

When the porter asked President Freuler of Mutual if he would be brushed off he replied that he would prefer being helped off by Helen Holmes. It was the occasion of Mr. Freuler's visit to the Signal studios. The train he went back to town on was Signal's own special, which you will see often in "The Railroad Raiders."

Exhibitor Kills Sunday Laws

By J. E. Hipple

Proprietor Bijou Theater, Pierre, South Dakota.

The legislative session of South Dakota just adjourned resulted all right for the picture man. The writer was the only one on the ground of the state picture men except Representative Widlon. The state ministerial association presented a drastic and cinching Sunday law, but this was killed. A new law was passed regulating booths and seating and exits.

This law takes the place of the old state license law, which provided a $5.00 annual license. That is repealed and a new inspection bill places all public buildings under inspection of the state fire marshal department. They will collect $5.00 for an inspection and not over twice in any one year shall the fee be paid. This places churches and school houses under the same inspection and booth regulations, but churches and schools are not forced to pay the fee.

I feel that our good luck is due largely to the exhibition of nothing but feature films in the Bijou during the legislative session, including Sunday nights. Our program regularly is Metro, World, Triangle, Paramount and V. L. S. E.

There was an opposition house part of the time and on one occasion he ran a birth control film, advertising in the afternoon for women only and throwing the doors wide open at night. This caused some just and severe criticism, but as this opposition house closed before the bills were finally acted on, that stuff did not hurt as much as it might have.

The exhibitors are to blame for running this sensational stuff and one showing of such a film makes more trouble from a legislative standpoint than all other features of the picture business combined.

There is too much production for the market. The producers of good programs should refuse to furnish pictures to a fellow who will run these rotten programs, that are billed "for women only"; "children under twelve not admitted," and the like. We have a Sunday law now that is supposed to shut off moving pictures, but it is not enforceable as the title is defective. Whatever good luck we have in escaping drastic legislation cannot be traced to any state organization, as we have none and it has remained for Pierre to look after this subject very largely, no film exchange or anybody else helping to furnish even the smokes.

Petrova Begins First Lasky-Paramount

Madame Olga Petrova, the celebrated dramatic actress who joined the stars of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company several weeks ago, has begun her first picture for the Paramount Program. Maurice Tourneur, who has just signed a contract for one year with the Lasky company, is to direct the production, the opening scenes of which take place in Egypt at the time of the Rameses. Maurice Tourneur will also direct Mme. Petrova's second production, the title of which has not yet been decided upon.

The offices of the Frank Powell Producing Corporation have been moved from the Times Building to larger quarters at 71 West Twenty-third street, New York.

The new offices of the Powell company will be those that formerly were occupied by the executive offices of the Mutual through which distributing organization the productions now being made under the direction of Mr. Powell are released.

Critics Praise "Babette"

"Babette," the Greater Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, met with a remarkable reception at its pre-release run at the Rialto in New York City on Saturday, March 17. Director Rothapfel had staged the five-part photoplay with his usual artistic settings, enhancing its natural value as a picture with remarkable music. As a result of the opening the Rialto played practically to capacity through the entire week. "Babette" is to be released through the V. L. S. E. exchanges on April 2.

The photoplay was reviewed by the critics of the New York newspapers who were lavish with their praise.

T. E. Oliphant of the Mail wrote:

"Her acting as 'Babette' is such stuff as screen stars are made of." And of Marc MacDermott who takes the part of the hero-crook Critic Oliphant says: "His acting ably seconds the work of Miss Hyland. These two players provided adequate support in making a feature well deserving of the applause it received from yesterday's Rialto audience."

The New York Herald had the following to say:

Mr. MacDermott's work placed him distinctly in the better class of motion picture heroes as he rarely jars the funny bone of the spectator when he means to be serious. Miss Hyland was a charming heroine.

Harriet Underhill in The Tribune wrote:

Pretty Peggy Hyland is at the Rialto in a fascinating little picture play called "Babette," which embodies all the thrills which audiences love to feel. Miss Hyland does not try to be cute—she is cute. Marc MacDermott is quite irresistible.

"A romantic and amusing picture was the feature to start the new week at the Rialto," is the way the critic of The World describes Greater Vitagraph efforts.

The Morning Telegraph:

"Babette" will be found of exceptional artistic merit from the angles of acting and setting. The Vitagraph Company has produced nothing better in some time. This production is in every respect worthy of the exhibitor's attention.

The Sun critic said:

Peggy Hyland will add much to her growing popularity with the title role "Babette." She has regular features and large lustrous eyes like those of Marguerite Clark and is destined to become an American favorite.

Anita Stewart is starred in "The More Excellent Way," the splendid new Blue Ribbon feature which appeared March 26. Charles Richman plays opposite Miss Anita.

Governor Attends Opening

UNQUESTIONABLY the biggest demonstration in behalf of motion pictures in the history of New England occurred last week on Tuesday night at the premiere in the Colonial Theater of Cecil B. De Mille's great motion picture production, "Joan The Woman." Not only was Geraldine Farrar, the star of the picture; Jesse L. Lasky and other prominent film men present, but Governor McCall of Massachusetts and his family and official staff; and Mayor Curley of Boston, his family and staff, occupied boxes, which gave to the occasion an eclat not enjoyed by any other theatrical opening in Boston in years.

Geraldine Farrar in "Joan the Woman."

In New England film circles they are still talking about the enthusiastic way in which two thousand of Boston's best and bravest were stirred by the picture and thrilled by the extemporaneous events of the evening. These included, chief and foremost, the singing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" by Geraldine Farrar, a native of Boston; and the exchange of complimentary phrases between the Governor, the Mayor and the prima donna.

The Boston premiere of "Joan The Woman" was the first big exhibition outside of New York and Los Angeles. The Colonial was gayly decorated for the evening, the boxes occupied by Governor McCall and his suite were bedecked with the national colors and the Seal of the Commonwealth; while Mayor Curley's box was distinguished by a great gold seal of the city. Miss Farrar sat under a rosette of French, English and American national colors. The lobby of the theater was decorated with costumes, armor, spears, flags, lances and trumpets actually used in the making of the picture by Cecil B. De Mille last summer.

All Boston was alert, as was also New England, which is a hot-bed of pro-Ally sentiment, to see Miss Farrar's anticipated active loyalty to America in refutation of the frequently published slanderous statements that her heart was not with her native people in the world crisis. Any such doubts were entirely dispelled by the prima donna herself in interviews with Boston newspaper men and also by her actions on Tuesday evening—the premiere of "Joan The Woman" having been postponed from Monday night in order that she might be present—as she not only sang "The Star-Spangled Banner" but wore as a scarf a ribbon of national colors.

"I am an American first, last and all the time," said Miss Farrar.

Mr. and Mrs. Jesse L. Lasky, Mr. Hiram Abrams and other well known film men came over from New York for the premiere.

The New England rights to the De Mille picture are controlled by the Cardinal Film Corporation of New England, 193 Pleasant Street, of which M. J. Garrity is general manager.

Rothacker's New Book

Because only the best will satisfy him, and because he disregards expense in attaining the best, Watterson Rothacker's occasional contributions to advertising literature are always works of art. We employ that rather hackneyed term in the absence of any that would be more fitting.

Rothacker, besides the remarkable industrial ability he has been demonstrating with constantly increasing force for seven or eight years, is a writer of parts and a builder of brilliant business epigrams. We were about to comment on his long experience in this line before he became a manufacturer and a first-line film producer, but probably talent is more responsible than experience. At any rate he has put it to good and lavish use in the booklet entitled simply "Moving Pictures," and carrying the characteristic signature of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company.

Reading beyond the purely literary merit of the composition, its description (well illustrated) of the company's highly modernized plant in Chicago is worth admiration—both for the plant and for the description. There are thirty-two pages of it altogether, including the double covers; and it is one of those jobs which printers are often moved to advertise as samples of what they can do when they really try.

Incidentally Rothacker's partial list of those his organization has already served includes most of the big industrial names that you can think of—and we have no doubt he will add all the rest of the important ones to the catalog in due time.

Vitagraph Has "First Aid" Room

The officials of the Vitagraph Company recently requested a first-aid room where all employees might receive immediate attention in case of accidents or illness to be established in the studios.

Immediately their request was put into effect and now one of the larger dressing-rooms closely resembles a hospital ward. The walls have been painted white and all sorts of surgical instruments and appliances have been installed.

This room has been placed under the direction of Sig Stark who attended one of the city's largest medical colleges and who has gained much knowledge from practical experience.

Although this innovation is still very young a number of employees have already found is necessary to visit Mr. Stark and in one or two instances the prompt attention which they received prevented them being confined to their homes indefinitely.

Theater Companies Combine

One of the most important combinations of theatrical interests announced recently is that of the Saenger Amusement Company of Shreveport, Louisiana, and Fischtenberg Amusement Enterprises of New Orleans. This consolidation was effected on March 24.

The new combination represents a large number of first-class houses in southern territory. The theaters affected are located in New Orleans, Shreveport, Monroe, Alexandria, Louisiana; and in Texarkana, Houston, Texas; Vicksburg, Mississippi, and Pensacola, Florida.

The new amusement combination will control in all thirty-five motion picture theaters.

General Inaugurates Special Service

EXHIBITORS ENDORSE FOUR REEL FEATURE

PRESIDENT BENJ. B. HAMPTON of the General Film Company has inaugurated a new "popular priced service" for the smaller exhibitors who are patrons of the General Film Company. The outline of the plan is revealed in the following letter to exhibitors:

To Our Customers:

Many exhibitors have asked us for service at a price lower than we can accept for our new subjects.

We want all the business we can get at a profitable price, and also we want to do all we can to assist all classes of exhibitors. Therefore, we submit the following plan for a service at popular prices.

We have on hand about 50,000 reels of various subjects in various lengths. These pictures are our regular program subjects from our regular manufacturers, dramas, comedies, etc. Our exchanges are now prepared to serve exhibitors with programs booked from this vast assortment of products at very low prices, prices at which any exhibitor can make money.—General Film Company.

President Hampton believes that the small exhibitor has been neglected to a considerable degree in late years and with the increasing cost of production and distribution the price of new features has gone up to a point beyond the reach of a large number of these smaller theater owners. It is for this reason that he has inaugurated the new popular price service which seems destined to meet a big and immediate demand.

Exhibitors Endorse "One Hour Screen Time"

Every since the General Film Company made its first announcement of the new famous "Fortune Photoplay" series, the executives of that company have been receiving letters from exhibitors endorsing the "One Hour Screen Time" idea. "Fortune Photoplays" are all founded on stories that have appeared in the Street & Smith group of magazines—Ainslee's, The Popular, Smith's, People's, etc., and when the General Film Company made its first plans for the series it was decided to limit the length to four reels since that length of picture was found after a careful investigation to be the most popular with exhibitors. Letters were sent to 5,000 prominent picture theater managers throughout the country asking them what length of picture they preferred and by far the great majority answered the inquiry by placing their vote in favor of the hour length. Accordingly this length was adopted and featured prominently in the advertising and publicity. The first subjects in the order of release are "The Inspirations of Harry Larrabee," "Mentioned in Confidence," "The Devil's Bait," "The Yellow Bullet," and "Vengeance of the Dead." A famous film beauty is featured in each picture. The General Film Company has received word that "Fortune Photoplays" will be the opening attraction at the new Palace Theater in Duluth which will open early in April.

Living Library of American Fiction

If the plans of General and Columbia College are carried out, the films of the series based on the O. Henry short stories will form the nucleus of a living library of American fiction to be inaugurated at the famous New York educational institution.

The plan it to keep a screen record by means of the films themselves of the works of all great American writers. As these great literary efforts are transferred to the screen the various manufacturers will be asked to contribute to this library and it seemed only fitting to the college authorities to inaugurate this idea with the pictured short stories of O. Henry long conceded to be the greatest of all short story writers.

Accordingly prints of the first of the series have already been placed in the departments to be devoted to the living library at the college and as fast as the stories are picturized the reels will be filed in the department allotted to them.

It is announced that there has been a slight change in the order of distribution of the O. Henry series. The first subject will be "The Third Ingredient" and following in the release order are "Friends of San Rosario," "The Marionettes," "Past One at Rooney's" and "The Gifts of the Magii."

It is safe to say that no pictures recently placed upon the market have excited the same amount of curiosity as have the O. Henry subjects, which form a vast mine of intensely dramatic and unusual material. To a greater extent perhaps than the works of any other author the writings of O. Henry lend themselves to the film. It must also be considered that in making the pictures the racy flavor of the author's genius is always present; every title and sub-title being taken direct from the pithy matter of his books. Also every "location" is authentic, whenever it has been possible to film the actual background whether the scene was in "suicide Hall" on the Bowery or in Mrs. Vere DeVere's Fifth Avenue drawing room. The above mentioned features in themselves make the O. Henry pictures a distinct advance in the cinemagraphic art.

COHAN PICTURE A TRIUMPH

Exhibitors and Trade Notables Enthuse Over "Broadway Jones"—J. J. Murdock Attends Showing and Doubles His Bookings

The advance showing of George M. Cohan's initial Artcraft photoplay, "Broadway Jones" attracted an unusual audience to the Forty-fourth Street Theater last Tuesday morning where exhibitors, theatrical celebrities, trade-reviewers, actors, wine agents and in fact every representative Broadwayite gathered to view the Cohan screen debut.

One of the most notable guests was J. J. Murdock of the United Booking Offices, who attended to pay George M. his respects in his new venture. This is the first motion picture trade showing that Mr. Murdock has ever attended. Immediately upon conclusion of the showing Mr. Murdock congratulated the famous actor-author-producer as well as Director Kaufman and proved the sincerity of his enthusiasm by doubling the bookings of this picture over his circuit. Originally booked for a three-day run at the U. B. O. houses the production is now scheduled for a week at each theater.

Mitchel H. Mark, president and general manager of the Strand Theater, New York, in a letter to Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft, said: "Harold Edel, Max Spiegel and myself witnessed the initial performance of 'Broadway Jones' this morning. It is a most happy combination of star and play, well produced, and to our mind fitting the most popular taste and fancy. It is commendable efforts of this kind that will insure the stability of the business. We cannot too strongly endorse this production. We are sure that it will meet with favor and success wherever shown."

Among the notables present at the advance showing were Douglas Fairbanks, John Emerson, Holbrook Blinn, Marie Cahill, Mr. and Mrs. Jerre Cohan, Dennis F. O'Brien, Walter E. Greene, Joe Kaufman, Ben Mosley, J. J. Murdock, Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, H. Whitman Bennett, Al Kaufman, John De Wolf, Carl Pierce, Mitchell M. Mark, Max Spiegel and Harold Edel. The trade press was represented by the following: Edward Weitzel, Ben Grimm, Pete Milne, Frances Agnew, Weed Dickinson, Edward Reddy, Adam Hull Shirk, George W. Graves, Jolo, Jim Milligan, Laura Hostetter, George Pardy, R. W. Baremore, Jim Beecroft, T. Rendall and Milt Lowenthal.

New Titles for Art Dramas

The coming Erbograph feature, the working title of which was "The Dragonfly," will be released on April 5 on Art Dramas program under the final title of "The Inevitable," and the Apollo picture, formerly known as "Whose Hand?" will be released as "The Great Bradley Mystery," on April 12.

Anna Q. Nilsson is the star of "The Inevitable," which is a drama of intrigue and revenge, threaded with an appealing love story. Chester Barnett, William Bailey, and Lucile Dorrington are in support of the star. The play was written by C. Hobart Doty.

"The Great Bradley Mystery," which was written by Edward Ellis, the renowned actor-author, is a surprise drama of unique construction. Alma Hanlon is starred, while Edward Earle plays the leading male role. Edward Ellis himself is in support.

Charlie Is Having His Troubles

A telegram from Charlie Chaplin to the Mutual Film Corporation makes it necessary to postpone the release date of the next Mutual-Chaplin special, "The Cure," from March 19 to April 16. Charlie telegraphs:

"Owing to the incessant rains on the coast, and because I do not care to run the chance of a single Chaplin release being in any way below quality, it is impossible to complete 'The Cure' according to schedule."

"Speeding Up Susan," featuring Jack Mulhall, is a four-act comedy-drama being filmed at Universal City.

"WOMANHOOD"

Greater Vitagraph's Eight-Reel Film on Preparedness Shown in New York and Philadelphia Aids Patriotic Campaign

Timely in its appearance on the screens of America, just at the moment when the pulse of patriotism beats strongest, the Greater Vitagraph battle picture of eight-reel length, entitled "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," has met with a quick response from the public. In New York and Philadelphia, where the pre-release engagements are setting in motion the waves of patriotic interest that give the picture drawing power, several large patriotic organizations have gone to work to swell the attendance in the interests of the national preparedness campaign, wherever the picture is shown in the United States.

The picture begins a pre-release run at the Broadway Theater in New York, Sunday, April 1. Accompanying its public presentation, the wheels are turning which will unite such organizations as the Daughters of the American Revolution, the National Preparedness Society, the American Defense League, the National Security Society and the Navy League, in promoting a country-wide sweep of patriotism to encourage attendance of able bodied men everywhere whom the patriotic societies wish to reach with the message that the film "Womanhood" bears.

"Womanhood" is the brain child of former President Roosevelt, who probably is the greatest advocate of preparedness in the United States. More than a year ago Colonel Roosevelt foresaw the dangers to the United States through the lassitude of its people. He knew something radical was necessary to arouse them and to save the country, should it become embroiled in war.

Colonel Roosevelt, who is a close personal friend of Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, director general of Greater Vitagraph, suggested to the widely known motion picture magnate that a picture, preaching "preparedness" in every foot of film, should be made. The result is "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation."

Commodore Blackton and Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady, acting on numerous suggestions of Colonel Roosevelt, wrote the story which was immediately scenarioized. It took eight months of constant effort and work to complete the eight reels in order that the picture will carry the message intended. Colonel Roosevelt appears upon the screen and pictures of President Wilson are utilized to make the photoplay as realistic as possible.

In Philadelphia, where it began its run in the Chestnut Theater March 19, the picture was greeted with enthusiasm. It was acknowledged that the first performance brought out a class of persons who heretofore have not been patrons of motion pictures.

The critic of the Philadelphia Record writes: "Of the greatest timeliness is the new super picture 'Womanhood.' The picture gave an impressive example of the need for preparedness in this country. Excellence of photography, fine characterizations and many unusual effects combine to give this picture a foremost position among pretentious and important productions of the screen."

starring Alice Joyce and Marry Morey with an unusually powerful all-star cast.

All of the Philadelphia critics agreed that one fact contributed largely toward the success of the picture besides the splendid direction by Commodore Blackton, superior photography, picking of locations and that was the fact that "Womanhood" was produced by an all star cast. Alice Joyce and Harry T. Morey are the co-stars. They are ably assisted in their work by such players as Peggy Hyland, Joseph Kilgour, James Morrison, Naomi Childers, Templer Saxe, Walter McGrail, Edward Elkas and Little Bobby Connelly, the foremost child actor of the screen.

"Womanhood" will be released throughout the country through the various V. L. S. E. exchanges on April 9. Greater Vitagraph purposes to give the preparedness advocates every assistance in spreading the propaganda by advertising "Womanhood" in newspapers throughout the United States and through the use of more advertising space and most conclusive advertising than ever has been put out by Greater Vitagraph in the past. The paper and heralds for "Womanhood" are lavish, the paper consisting of two one sheets, two three sheets, one six sheet and one twenty-four sheet.

Walt Mason in Films

The Filmcraft Corporation of 8 West Fortieth street, New York, has secured the exclusive motion picture rights to the material of one of America's most unique and lovable writers and one of the most widely known and read—Walt Mason.

It is Walt Mason of whom William Allen White says:

The philosophy of Walt Mason is the philosophy of America. Briefly, it is this: The fiddler must be paid; if you don't care to pay, don't dance. In the meantime, grin and bear it, because you've got to bear it and you might as well grin. We do not claim its medicinal properties will cure everything. But it is good for sore eyes; it cures the blues; it sweetens the temper; it cleanses the head and aids digestion. In cases of heart trouble, it has been known to unite torn ligaments and encourage large families.

Walt Mason's record as a producer of poems and rhymes is unique; he is in a class by himself. Through the George Matthew Adams Service he supplies a list of over 200 of the leading newspapers of the United States with a new poem every day in the week, fifty-two weeks a year, and has been doing it for years past. Day after day the fountain flows. There is no poison in it. And sometimes real poetry comes welling up out of this Pierian spring of Emporia, Kansas, where Mason lives.

The first of these pictures, "The Dipper," in one reel, has already been completed and is scheduled for a week's run at the Rialto, New York, in the very near future. In speaking of this after reviewing it, Mr. Rothapfel said in part: "It is the kind of comedy that the industry needs, clean, wholesome and done with good taste. The humanness and the wit and simplicity of this picture makes it an extraordinary release."

"The Dipper" was directed by Addison J. Rothermel, formerly with the Edison and Kalem companies, and embodies a very effective combination of "legitimate" screen dramatization with a touch of animated comedy, the latter work being under the direction of A. B. Heath of the Kineticartoon Corporation.

No releasing arrangements have yet been made, Royale V. Rothermel, general manager of Filmcraft, stating that his company is considering offers for both, a releasing arrangement on a program and for an outright sale of the negative.

Brady Tells Methods

The photomotorial activities of William A. Brady for at least another year will insure World-Pictures being Brady-Made. A contract has been made to take effect next month.

Referring to his experience as director general for the past twelve months, Mr. Brady said to a reporter:

When the board of directors finally induced me to take an active interest in World-Pictures, I consented to try it for six months only, upon the assurance that I should have an absolutely free hand. I am free to say that I have not been hampered in the slightest degree, and the fact that I have already remained twice as long as I had agreed to stay, coupled with the present renewal, indicates that the situation is satisfactory all around.

We are extremely careful in the selection of World material. Everything is laid out in detail and made ready for use on short notice, then when the director finishes with his work I take the picture and supply any deficiencies I am able to detect. After that, perhaps two months before the release date, I go over the play again, and if I find anything of a serious nature requiring time to fix up, the date of issue is postponed, another picture substituted, and we go at our work with all the deliberation we need.

There are several reasons why I do not direct our pictures from start to finish. First, we issue a picture every week and frequently have three or four under way at the same time. Secondly, under the present system I am able to give my best attention to putting the finishing touches upon all of them.

This has been my system through all my years of producing spoken plays. If results are what count, anybody who looks over my list of successful stage plays will be likely to concede the value of my plan in that field, while reference to the list of World-Pictures Brady-Made to date will show how it has worked out in the film business.

Making Money with "Sins"

Several theaters showing McClure's "Seven Deadly Sins" in the territory served by the Chicago Superpictures office, inform Branch Manager C. B. Price that they have been holding people out on days when the "Sins" are shown. The management of the Princess Theater, at Peoria, Illinois, owned by the Seaver Amusement Company, showed "Greed" recently. People were unable to get to the box-office. A letter received by McClure Pictures tells how tickets were peddled, circus fashion, among the crowds on the sidewalk in front of the theater, a hand satchel being used to hold the dimes and dollars. Peoria audiences receive the pictures with marked approval, the management reports.

The Vaudette Theater, at Springfield, Illinois, runs the "Seven Deadly Sins" on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays. Exceptional business has been the rule on those days.

J. C. Grampp, proprietor of the Orpheum Theater, Rockford, Illinois, uses considerable newspaper advertising in the local newspapers to supplement the publicity which the "Sins" have received through the McClure publications, and writes that the pictures are going in great shape.

Melford With Fox

William Fox announces the addition of George H. Melford, one of the best known and best liked moving picture directors in the industry, to his directorial forces.

Mr. Melford will make photodramatic subjects in the Fox studios at Hollywood, Cal.

CONQUEST PICTURES IDEA

New Motive Back of Edison-Made Pictures Is to Build a Program of Clean Plays, Says Manager L. W. McChesney

The big idea back of the Conquest Pictures, which Thomas A. Edison, Inc., is offering through Forum Films, Inc., is set forth in a statement made by L. W. McChesney, manager of the Edison studios.

In selling Conquest Pictures through Forum Films, Inc., we primarily are selling an idea. We are not at first going to emphasize the productions because we believe that the idea is bigger than the pictures. We also assert that it is greater than any pictures on the market and that it contains more possibilities for future development than any definite plan that is behind the production of any contemporary program or open-booking pictures. In Conquest Pictures, we are selling exhibitors the idea of clean pictures, and, in turn, we want exhibitors to sell this idea to the public. We do not claim that the pictures on our new program will be ideal according to the standards that now exist in the motion picture industry, but we do claim that they will meet the ideals upon which the permanency and prosperity of the business must be based.

There is not going to be any buncombe or any blare of trumpets connected with the launching of the Conquest Pictures program, because we do not feel that this is necessary. We are not selling a more or less sensational state rights production that is designed to appeal to the more morbid element of the public for a comparatively short period of time. We are selling an idea and in doing this we naturally must use marketing methods that are distinctive from any that have been used before. The major part of our work will be done through personal contact with exhibitors. Through representatives of Forum Films, Inc., we are going to the exhibitors of America and ask them to use five reels of Edison Conquest Pictures each week and to program them each week on a certain day. We are not going to do any sensational advertising in selling these productions to exhibitors, and we do not want the latter to make any exaggerated claims in presenting them to the public.

We will be satisfied if the public very gradually and almost subconsciously absorbs the ideal that somewhere there is a new influence in the motion picture world. We want the patrons of picture houses to come to realize, even if the process is a gradual one, that pictures that bear the Edison Conquest brand cannot offend any of the ethics of good taste.

We are not minimizing the difficulties that confront us in this project and we do not expect to overcome them in any short period of time. We are ready to spend years, if necessary, in bringing to a successful working basis the campaign that we have started to produce pictures that will set a new moral standard in the motion picture industry.

Clean Pictures Welcomed

We have not the slightest doubt regarding the ultimate success of our new policy. From the time we first announced that we had committed ourselves to the production of absolutely clean pictures we have received endorsements of various kinds from every part of the country. We also are favored by a universal demand for cleaner and better pictures—a demand that Conquest productions specifically are designed to meet. We are going to present a new, moving, living and growing program—a program that will acknowledge no restrictions except those imposed by the ethics of good taste and decency. In other words, Conquest Pictures are going to be the tangible expression of a great idea. And the idea is—clean pictures.

War's Other Side in "Motherhood"

War and hate and mother-love, patriotism and fear and daring—all are mingled elements in "Motherhood," Marjorie Rambeau's second production for Mutual, made under the direction of Frank Powell.

Miss Rambeau in the role of Louise, a peasant woman, is called upon for all of her ability in emotional portrayal, and in the opinion of many of her critics, succeeds remarkably in the scenes where her mother love is awakened for her child—a son of the lust of war.

"Motherhood" is a story which will appeal alike to the promoters of peace and those who are anxious for war. It is not a preachment for peace but shows war in all its hideousness when the glamour has been removed. It is not a picture of battlefields and great armies engaged in conflict but rather shows the woman's side of war. It shows how even the innocent children are forced to share their burden of the warfare, and brings out strongly the fact that there is as much suffering for those left at home as for those in the midst of battle.

The next Clara Kimball Young picture to be offered to the public will be "The Easiest Way," adapted from Eugene Walter's great drama, directed by Albert Capellani, for Selznick-Pictures.

Scenes from "Motherhood," Mutual production featuring Marjorie Rambeau, made by Frank Powell. Miss Rambeau was formerly one of Manhattan's favorite stars before the footlights of Broadway. She has done remarkable work in many stage successes and her work on the screen has the same captivating qualities which mean good box office returns.

Hart Again With Triangle

The noted good-bad man, William S. Hart, has sufficiently stated that he has renewed his contract with Thomas H. Ince to appear in Triangle plays for a period of two years longer.

William S. Hart, re-signed with Ince.

In a telegram to Motography, Mr. Hart states that his reason for re-signing with the Triangle forces, is because he considers the present "lineup of Triangle" one of the strongest in the country. "I assure you that my efforts will be to make my future productions bigger and better than ever," concluded Mr. Hart.

This announcement will chloroform the various rumors that have sprung into life during the last few weeks regarding the association of Mr. Hart with a number of other companies.

Mr. Hart is without argument the dean of the screen bad men, and has remarkable following among picture goers. He is essentially a man's actor, but thousands of women and children are open admirers of him and his cave man ways.

Both Mr. Hart and Thomas H. Ince are to be congratulated upon the new contract.

Advertise State Rights Picture

Prompted by a thorough appreciation of the justice of the contention of territorial rights buyers, that there is a lack of sincere co-operation between the exchange man and manufacturer, in the selling and exploitation of super-motion picture productions, the Frohman Amusement Corporation issues the following interesting statement:

Unfortunately, it is a seeming truth that the great majority of manufacturers are concerned only in grabbing the almighty dollars for return of the sale of territory rights—there is apparently no thought of future relations and a building for stability in their business or a permanency in the list of customers. As a result of these observations, this organization has, for the past few weeks, been in active correspondence and consultation with its clientele, requesting suggestions for the correction of these grave errors, and in reply to our inquiries we have, practically, without exception, been requested by the buying personnel, to lend our attention first to the manner and method of advertising our productions. There has been a generous request, that consideration be given to the advertising of a production at the time when it will do a material good to exchange man and producer alike—at that time when the production has been sold and is ready for its bookings. It is a just claim indeed and will have its application, at least from this office.

Beginning with the release of our next super-production "God's Man" in which H. B. Warner makes his bow under the Frohman banner, we will inaugurate a radically different style of advertising schedule, which we conscientiously believe is in part solution to the just wants of our buyers. We have made but a restricted announcement of the preparation of "God's Man," still enough to notify the buying public that such a product is in the making.

In response thereto there has been almost general reply from all sources, with offers for the purchase of "God's Man" which we consider most frankly, as flattering in a great many instances. We do not doubt but that the sale of this production could be completed without further usage of advertising space in motion picture journals—but such a method of procedure would assuredly be an injustice to those men who have bought our production; therefore, we desire to record ourselves forcefully in both our contentions and promises. "God's Man" will receive an advertising representation worthy of the production, a general display, that our buyers may reap a benefit therefrom. We propose with this production and with our productions of the future to give the greatest consideration to the aiding of our buyers to market the product after they have paid their money to us.

A number of weeks of consistent advertising of our production will, in all instances, be our rule, after the picture has been sold, and we will endeavor to prepare this style of advertising of the strength to carry return to the territorial buyer in the form of applications for bookings. "God's Man" will have an advertising equipment of unusual scale, which equipment are a number of noval ideas for exhibitors.

Early April Fox Plays

Theda Bara, Genevieve Hamper, Gladys Brockwell and Stuart Holmes are the notable stars who head the casts of the first four April releases which William Fox announces. The order of the photoplays will be:

April 2—Theda Bara in "Her Greater Love," a special production; also, Genevieve Hamper in "Tangled Lives."

April 9—Gladys Brockwell in "Her Temptation."

April 16—Stuart Holmes in "The Derelict."

Miss Bara's third super de luxe feature, "Her Greatest Love," is a magnificent film based on Ouida's widely read novel, "Moths." J. Gordon Edwards directed the picture and has put the beautiful natural backgrounds in and around St. Augustine and Palm Beach, Florida, into the work. Harry Hilliard, Glen White, Walter Law, Alice Gale, Marie Curtis and Calla Torres are in the cast.

J. Gordon Edwards also screened "Tangled Lives," in which Genevieve Hamper, the distinguished star of silent and spoken drama, has the lead.

Stuart Holmes does brilliant dramatic work in "The Derelict," written and directed by Carl Harbaugh, whose production of "The Scarlet Letter" for Fox Films was so popular throughout the country.

The little barefoot lad is Volo Vale in General's Fortune Photoplay, "Mentioned in Confidence." In the circle is Mildred Monning featured in General's O. Henry series.

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

Wants Long Extension Shaft

I have tried several places to get an extra long extension shaft or shutter spindle for my machine, a Power's 6A. I have used them but do not remember who they are made by. Are they made by the Power Co. or not? Do you think that an extra long extension shaft would help my picture any with only a 55-foot throw? I can't get the right focus on the shutter from the condensers with the one I have.— Bert Gorman, operator, Pastime Theater, Alexander City, Alabama.

You can get the shutter shafts from the Nicholas Power Co., 88-90 Gold street, New York. They make an extra long spindle and they make an extention shaft to fit over the spindle on the machine. If you order the extra long spindle you will have to change spindles on the machine, and I would not advise any operator to attempt to do this unless he has the proper tools and is experienced in this kind of work.

I would suggest that you order the extension shaft and then you can fit it over the shaft that you are now using and do the job in about five minutes with the aid of a screw driver. Before you order the shaft, measure and see how long a one you will need to get the shutter in focus and when you do order, give the distance from the end of the old shaft to the point where the shutter is in focus so that they will send you an extension long enough.

In setting the shutter to get the best results proceed as follows: First loosen the shutter screw so the shutter will move freely on the shutter spindle. Then throw the light through the machine, without any film in the machine, on the wide blade of the shutter. Next open the lamp house door and with your left hand place a screw driver blade as near flat as possible against the rear condenser. With the right hand, move the shutter on the spindle until the screw driver blade is in perfect focus on the blade of the shutter. Tighten the set screw in the shutter at this point and then run off a few feet of film and you will notice that a large per cent of the flicker is missing.

If you are using two machines in the booth, set the shutter on one of the machines according to the above rule and then try first one machine and then the other and you can readily see the difference. By making a temporary shutter out of cardboard and using it instead of the regular shutter, you can measure on it and you will find that you can cut down the width of the blades when the shutter is at the proper distance from the lens.

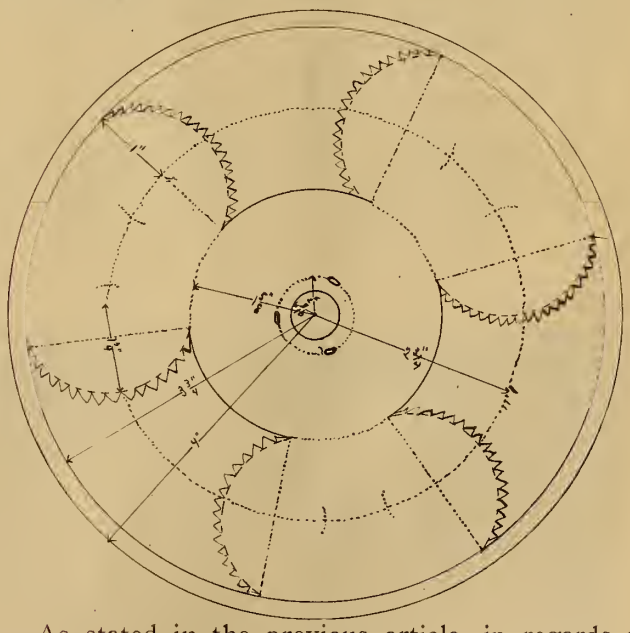
Measure on the cardboard shutter with the light thrown through the lens, without any film in the machine and mark with a pencil at the point where the intermittent sprocket starts to move; then move the intermittent movement to the point where the intermittent sprocket stops moving and mark the blade at this point. Remove the shutter from the shaft and cut down the blade on each side to within 1/16-in. of the lead pencil marks.

Then place this pattern over the regular shutter and cut the regular shutter to the same width as the pattern. Then place the regular shutter back on the shaft and set it at the proper place. The object of the extension shaft is to lessen the flicker and by cutting the width of the shutter blades gives more light on the screen.

Another Shutter Proposition

While attending the convention of the I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. at Cleveland, O., several weeks ago, the writer met Brother Novotny, a delegate to the convention from Local No. 202 of Waterloo, Iowa, and he gave me a diagram of a three-wing shutter that he has been using and asked me to try it out and then pass it on to the operators. I have tried it out on a Power's machine on a short throw and it works very well. I do not know what it will do at different distances, but will give the diagram with the different dimension here below and the operators using D. C. current and Power's machines can try it out.

The same style of shutter may be used on any make of machine using an outside shutter but the diagram shown below is for a Power's. This shutter, I am told by Brother Novotny, will not work with the two blades on A. C. as well as it does with the three blades on the D. C.



As stated in the previous article, in regards to setting the shutter in focus with the condensers, the width of this shutter may be varied to suit the throw of the picture. The diagram shown here will not do for every machine. But the operators wishing to try it out can make the shutter blades to suit their own case. Try it out and I would be glad to hear from the different operators as to what they get in results from the experiment.

Filming Tornado Wreck

Brother J. H. Finke and the writer made a hurried trip on Monday, March 12, to Newcastle, Indiana, and filmed the remains of the resident section of the city that was visited by the tornado on Sunday afternoon about 3:30 p. m. We left Indianapolis at 3:35 a. m. and arrived at Newcastle at 5:00 a. m. After securing a military pass countersigned by Mayor Lem Watkins, we visited the stricken district and I will not try to describe it for that would be impossible. The Animated Weekly of the Universal has several feet of the film and that will describe it better than words ever could. The first thing we did on arriving in the city was to look up the several operators or make inquiries about them, and I am happy so say that they were all fortunate, as not a single one was harmed nor suffered any property loss as far as we could find out. Brother Hoffman, also of Local No. 194, went over with us and represented the Pathe News.

Saturday a. m. Brother Finke and myself made another hurried trip to New Albany, Indiana, and filmed the results of another tornado that visited that city at 4:00 p. m. Friday, March 23. We left Indianapolis at 3:35 a. m. and arrived at New Albany at 7:30 a. m. and were the first cameramen on the job. After securing our military pass, countersigned by Mayor Morris of New Albany, we visited the stricken districts and the damage done and the loss of life here was about three times greater than that at Newcastle. When we left on Saturday noon, March 24, there were thirty-two dead and over one hundred in the hospitals and many of them were not expected to live. Once again the operators were lucky, for we made inquiries at the different relief stations and at the police stations and as far as we could find out none of them were hurt nor had any property loss.

Film Renovators Installed

R. D. Hanish of the Rex Film Renovator Company of Columbus, Ohio, was in Indianapolis for several days last week installing one of the firm's renovators for the Blue Bird Company. This makes two machines of the Rex brand that are working here. The other one is at the Central Film Service Co. The operators in this territory using first-run film from these two firms give the renovator their hearty indorsement. New releases after being treated can be run through the projector without being tension marked and you operators who have to battle first-run film know what that means.

Apollo Buys Ellis Play

Contracts have just been signed by Harry Raver, president of Apollo Pictures, Inc., whereby a play by Edward Ellis, entitled "The Great Bradley Mystery," becomes the property of his company for picture purposes. Work on the production has already been started at the Apollo studios in Fort Lee, under the direction of Richard Ridgely.

Mr. Ellis, who is a noted actor as well as a playwright, won fame in the latter field with his play, "Any Night." This drama, written for the Lamb's Gambol, so appealed to Holbrook Blinn that he made it the feature of his bill at the Princess Theater, New York, where it enjoyed a successful run.

Selznick Talks of "The Deemster"

Speaking of his deal with Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, of the Arrow Corporation, under which he attained control of "The Deemster" in New York state, Lewis J. Selznick states that he proposes to give this picture the widest possible publicity campaign.

"I am taking up 'The Deemster,'" stated Mr. Selznick, "because it fulfills my idea of what a special feature production should be, both in subject and magnitude. There are real brains behind this photoplay, from the author, Hall Caine, down to everyone who had anything substantial to do with its development on the screen. It's a big story founded on a big theme and it has been made a big thing from the highest standpoints of motion picture production.

"It long ago became evident to the men who are the real leaders of progress and attainment in picture production that the only substantial foundation of a successful picture is a real story—one that has sufficient spiritual force behind it to make an impression on the consciousness of an auditor.

"To my mind also 'The Deemster' possesses many elements which make it a very safe business proposition. The author has been before the American public as a writer of realistic fiction for fully thirty years. This story introduced him to the literary world in America and he has constantly remained conspicuously before it since that time, subsequently writing several other novels of great dramatic power and literary merit. Mention Hall Caine's name and immediately people about you will begin to name his books and discuss them. I do not think I am saying too much when I say that Hall Caine is more intimately known by American readers of fiction than any other contemporary writer. 'The Deemster,' in the view of every literary critic, is the most powerful of Mr. Caine's stories. Its dramatic power was appreciated over twenty years ago when it was produced as a play.

"The Arrow production is splendidly done—it's a credit to the producing corporation in every way. It is superb in its detail, most satisfying in cast, convincing in locale of scenes and unsurpassed in photography. In the latter essential it is undoubtedly one of the best pictures I have ever seen."

Briliant Now Scenario Editor

Arthur M. Briliant, general editorial and publicity representative of Consolidated Film Co., since its formation, has resigned to become chief of the scenario department of the Erbograph studios at 203-211 W. 146th street. The Erbograph Company is producing five-reel photographs for the Art Dramas program.

Mr. Briliant announces that his company is in the market for first-class scenarios. Only stories of unusual merit and novelty of theme are desired.

George Ovey Signs Again

George Ovey has signed a new long-term contract with David Horsley whereby he will continue to be featured in the Cub comedies released weekly by Mutual.

Music for Submarine Films

For the first time in the history of the trade a completely equipped and expertly managed musical department has been embodied as part of the regular organization of a film manufacturer.

This progressive innovation has been attempted by the Williamson Brothers through their company, the Submarine Film Corporation, New York. The step is taken for the benefit of the exhibitors and territorial buyers of the Williamson Brothers' productions.

The department in question will be under the direct personal charge of M. Winkler of the Carl Fisher Music Publishing House. Mr. Winkler has achieved an enviable reputation in this particular phase of amusement and is recognized as an authority upon the subject of music for motion pictures. In addition to acting as Musical Editor for several of the foremost trade papers, he has arranged music for such productions as "The Dumb Girl of Portici," "The Ne'er Do Well," "The Common Law," "War Brides," "The Battle Cry of Peace," for different states rights buyers.

As the first step in the perfection of his organization, Mr. Winkler has engaged the services of M. L. Lake, a composer of exceptional reputation, who is already engaged in preparing the musical themes for the first new production of the Williamson Brothers.

In keeping with their plans to do the thing as perfectly as possible, the Williamsons have sent Mr. Lake to their producing headquarters in the Bahamas where he will be enabled to descend into the photographic chamber at the bottom of the sea and there compose his themes and melodies in the exact environment of the production itself.

A complete orchestration will be furnished by this department for every Williamson production. In order to make these scores available to the small exhibitor a plan has been devised whereby the exhibitor can rent them from his exchange or from the executive offices of the company at a small outlay.

Longer Runs in Vogue

The willingness of theater managers to depart from the established regime of the daily change in favor of more extended showings when occasion offers, is well illustrated by the bookings for runs of two and three days length in Chicago theaters which are running the current Mary Pickford-Artcraft picture, "A Poor Little Rich Girl."

On the north side are the Vitagraph, Bugg and Covent Garden Theaters running the picture three days. The Michigan and South Side Theaters have booked it for three-day runs, while the De Luxe Theater will show the picture for four days. These are all neighborhood houses.

Geraldine Farrar in "Joan, the Woman," the remarkable Lasky picture produced by Cecil De Mille which opened at the Colonial Theater, Chicago, March 28. Jones, Linick and Schaefer are giving the photodrama an unusual presentation.

The picture will run one week at the Strand Theater, in Evanston, a suburb of Chicago, and three days in the Oak Park Theater, of Oak Park. Other neighborhood houses which have booked the feature for several days are the Circle, five days; Famous, three days; Crawford, three days; Ashland, three days; Avon, three days. Numerous other theaters will run the feature two days. All of the houses of the Ascher chain and those of the Lubliner and Trinz system will show "A Poor Little Rich Girl."

"Fatty" Arbuckle in Statuettes

Paul Beygrau, artist, designer and sculptor whose work for the King of England won him notice, has modeled a life-like statuette of the famous comedian who recently joined Paramount to make for them two-reel comedies for all exhibitors. These odd little figures are being distributed throughout the country by the Western Novelty and Doll Mfg. Co., of Seattle, Washington. Exhibitors are planning to use them in connection with their window and lobby displays.

LESSER EXPLOITS ART DRAMAS

Noted Independent Distributor Secures Control of Art Dramas Productions for California, Arizona and Nevada

Sol Lesser, known to the film industry by the number of important and successful enterprises he has engineered, among them the control of "The Ne'er Do Well," "The Spoilers," and "Cabiria," and who recently purchased "Intolerance" for the western territory, has just contracted for the rights to the Art Dramas program for the states of California, Arizona and Nevada.

In a statement regarding this important transaction, Mr. Lesser said:

I have contracted for Art Dramas for the western territory after a thorough investigation. I have faith in the men behind the organization. I believe in the Art Dramas policy because it means Star Stories without the inflated star. Exhibitors are beginning to see the uselessness of paying exorbitant rates for a picture with a poor story, a poor cast and a poor production, redeemed only by the name of a fifty-thousand-dollar star. The excellence of the Art Dramas program, on which there is no picture that is not distinguished by a splendid story, competent cast and artistic production, will, I am sure, prove a gigantic force towards putting the motion picture industry on a business-like basis.

Because they are not forced to pay out exaggerated salaries for so-called stars, the producers of Art Dramas are able to give exhibitors features of superior merit at a price within reason. The exhibitors and exchange men are thus assured of a satisfactory profit, and photoplay audiences have an opportunity to witness strong, original dramas of the highest entertainment value.

Harry Raver, president of Art Dramas, Inc., referring to the deal with Mr. Lesser said, "That Sol Lesser, a man known to be the most important and most discriminating individual distributor in America, is so convinced of the soundness of Art Dramas ideals that he contracts for the program for the western states, is a conclusive proof that we are supplying a long felt want."

NAOMI CHILDERS PLAY

"The Auction of Virtue," Art Dramas, Introduces Popular Star on This Program in a Strong Story Written by Joseph Poland

Naomi Childers will make her debut on the Art Dramas program in "The Auction of Virtue," made by the U. S. Amusement Corporation. The play was written for the star by Joseph Poland, famous novelist and writer. Mr. Poland is the author of "The Cloud," a recent Art Drama in which Jean Sothern was starred.

Leslie Austen, Wyndham Standing, Kirke Brown and Evelyn Dume are in support of the star in this picture, while Herbert Blache was in charge of the direction.

Miss Childers takes the role of Phyllis Shaw, the daughter of an invalid mother, whose life has become embittered by poverty. She has consequently brought Phyllis up with one aim—to marry a rich man. Phyllis works as a cloak model. While she is posing in an expensive gown, an artist, Jerry, sees her, and becomes interested. Through him she secures an opportunity to pose for artists and she soon becomes a popular member of the Bohemian set. Her mother dying, Phyllis is left alone. Through overwork, Jerry goes blind. His money rapidly diminishes and Phyllis suggests holding an auction of his possessions.

At this auction is present a number of millionaires, all interested in Phyllis. When the last of the trinkets is sold, she cries, "What is the bid for me?" Someone suggests "A house on Riverside Drive." Another bidder says, "Two limousines." The bidding goes higher, until suddenly Jerry rushes up and says, "Mine is the highest bid: Marriage!"

She is interested in the rich man's offer, however, and accepts his invitation to look over the house he has promised. While here she is attacked by him, and escapes in terror. She goes back to Jerry, now convinced that poverty is not the worst thing in life, and that she loves and wants to help the young artist.

The company has been at work on this picture for some time, although the announcement of Miss Childers joining the U. S. Amusement Corporation was not made till last week. It was thought best to hold this from the public until the picture was practically completed.

"None So Good as Motography"

Motography, Chicago:

Quick Response to New Policy

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay announce that, as an accelerator of business, Mr. Kleine's recent statement that, beginning April 2, Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay would release a feature every week proved a great success, evidenced by the yearly contracts already signed and the large number coming into the general office from their branches.

Exhibitors recognize pictures of unusual merit and are glad to contract for a year at a time, thus ridding themselves of the vexations incident to shopping for pictures to fill in open dates.

In New York alone, Manager W. E. Raynor reports an unusual response to Mr. Kleine's announcement, and he expects to have at least 300 new yearly contracts signed in his territory before the new policy goes into effect April 2.

"The Trufflers," by Essanay, featuring Nell Craig and Sydney Ainsworth, will be released April 9 as the first release following this new policy.

"Builder of Castles," Edison, featuring Marc MacDermott and Miriam Nesbitt, will follow April 16.

"Jones' Bubble," Essanay, presenting Bryant Washburn and Hazel Daly, will be released April 23.

"The Faith of Nancy," Selig, with Tom Santschi and Bessie Eyton featured, will be released April 30.

Film Enlargements Practical

Announcements have recently been published of a new process in photographic enlargement, which permits the making of photographs from motion picture negative.

Ernest Shipman states that Joseph Shipman discovered and invented this process of photographic enlargement from negative three years ago. Certain parts of his invention have already been patented at Washington. For two years photographs have been sold to the trade by the Shipman process.

Nearly every photograph used in the exploitation of "Civilization" was made by this process, Mr. Ince entrusting Joseph Shipman with his negatives in order that the finest results might be obtained. The first order on photographs was for $2,000 and the state rights buyers are now continuing to purchase these photos, as there was a dearth of the ordinary still pictures. The Williamson Brothers have made arrangements for the enlarging of all their undersea photographs by this process. The plant is situated at Los Angeles, where Joseph Shipman is doing a great deal of work for the government in connection with the Lick Observatory at Mt. Lowe, California.

The tremendous benefit of this process to the motion picture industry, which has already passed the experimental period with the Shipman process, should make this new feature of great interest to the trade generally. Arrangements are now under way for plants to be opened both in New York and Chicago.

Art Dramas Captures Earle

Although he is still a very young man, Edward Earle, who plays the lead in "The Great Bradley Mystery," an Apollo-Art Drama, has had more experience on the stage than probably any of the leading men of today. His stage career covers a period of sixteen years. Naturally he began very early; he started in a Toronto stock company when a boy, playing juveniles at a salary of five a week.

Edward Earle, who is now with Art Dramas.

In this company he soon began to play every conceivable role, and after a year or so he left it to join Tim Murphy, who was then playing one-night stands. His first New York appearance was in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs." Later he joined Mary Mannering in "Glorious Betsy," and since then his career has been with one star after another, in Broadway successes. His screen career began two years ago with Famous Players. Later he joined Pathe and went from there to Edison, where he starred in features for some time. His recent acquisition to the Apollo force of players is considered a great triumph of that comparatively new company.

Writers on motion pictures have commented often on the naturalness of Mr. Earle's acting. In his characterizations there is no suspicion of "acting."

Mr. Earle, curiously enough, objects to being called handsome. It is his desire to win recognition, not through an accidental grace of feature, but through a genuine acting ability. But those who have seen the star in "God's Man," "Ranson's Folly," "Eugene Aram," and others of his big successes know that in appearance he is of the type which is known as "matinee idol." Unlike most matinee idols, however, he relies more on his ability than on his appearance.

In "The Great Bradley Mystery," the Art Drama in which Mr. Earle will next be seen by photoplay audiences, he has a splendid role. Alma Hanlon plays the lead in this picture, which was written by Edward Ellis, the actor-author, who also plays an important role. This picture will be released April 5.

Fierce Fight in "Square Deal Man"

A fierce fight with knives and six-shooters—in which William S. Hart battles savagely against two powerful opponents—is one of the hair-raising scenes of "The Square Deal Man," the new Triangle-Kay Bee play by J. G. Hawks, in which Thomas H. Ince presents Hart as star. The encounter is declared unequivocally to be the most bitter struggle ever staged at Inceville.

As "Jack O'Diamonds," a gambler, Hart, in the play, escapes from two scheming Mexicans who had planned to kill him, and then returns to a hacienda, intent upon rescuing its mistress, a young girl, whom he knows will become the object of the "greasers' " attack. It was for this scene—wherein he appears at the opportune moment and clashes with the Mexicans—that the fight in question was staged.

Darrel Foss, as "Pedro" and Thomas Kurihara, as "Anastacio," acted as Hart's antagonists in the affray. Armed, one with a knife and the other with a knife and gun, they rushed at Hart viciously and pinioned him against the wall. Then, Hart succeeded in drawing his own gun and backing the two away from him, only to have them return again and again in their desperate frenzy.

More than two hundred members of the Hart troupe, engaged to work in other scenes during the day, watched the struggle, and united in pronouncing it to be the most realistically fierce combat ever filmed at the big plant.

Lasky Works on Defense Committee

(When you read this story, if you have not already sent in your name, join the thousands of loyal Americans who have already shown their desire to stand by the government of the United States by sending in your name to the Mayor's Committee on National Defense, 50 East Forty-second street, or to the office of Jesse L. Lasky, 485 Fifth avenue, New York.)

Immediately after his appointment as chairman of the motion picture division of the Mayor's Committee on National Defense, Jesse L. Lasky distributed to every motion picture theater in Greater New York slides asking for patrons' signatures to the declaration of patriotism, and one-sheet posters effectively designed with the star spangled banner for theater lobbies. This is one of the very few occasions for which permission was granted for the use of the American flag on lithographic posters. These posters have been mounted on cloth and draped on touring cars which are covering the theaters of the city, distributing patriotic declaration blanks and collecting signatures.

Mr. Lasky is devoting much of his time to this patriotic appeal to loyal Americans in an endeavor to obtain two million signatures through the medium of the motion picture theater. So far his efforts have been more than repaid, judging from the big number of signatures which are coming in.

"The Silent Master," the forthcoming Robert Warwick production for Selznick-Pictures, is founded upon the E. Phillips Oppenheim novel, "The Court of St. Simon," adapted and directed by Leonce Perret, a famous French director who will be introduced to American audiences in this photodrama of romance and mystery.

These new Triangle plays ought to keep all your seats warm. The one on the left is "A Woman's Awakening," with Seena Owen, and the other scene is from "Cheerful Givers," with Spottiswood Aiken.

New William Hart Play

William S. Hart will make his next appearance under Triangle-Kay Bee auspices when he is presented by Thomas H. Ince in a powerful western melodrama, "The Desert Man." This is declared to be one of the most unusual plays in which the beloved character star ever has appeared.

"The Desert Man" is a tense tale of the eternal strife waged between good and evil; of the successful struggle carried on by a good man who is quick on the draw, in a hopelessly dejected town on the border of the desert. It is bristling with adventure of the kind that is so dear to Hart audiences, and is made refreshing by a love interest that never wanes.

Hart is not a bad-man in this play. He is wholesouled and God-fearing, but is not reluctant to resort to forceful methods of erasing vice from the village he has chosen for his home. As "Jim Alton," the wanderer on the desert, he is said to have equaled, if not surpassed, his many remarkable performances of the past.

In the principal feminine role, Margery Wilson is seen as "Jennie," the girl who brings gladness to the heart of the "desert man" and thereby inspires him to fight for the betterment of the little town. The production was directed by Hart.

New Fox Players

William Fox announces this week the addition oi many new players to the casts of pictures which are now, or soon will be, in work. To the William Farnum company in the studios at Hollywood, California, are added Alan Forrest, Florence Vidor, Lillian West and Genevieve Blinn. Miss Vidor was seen in "A Tale of Two Cities," and Miss Blinn appears in "Tangled Lives," a Fox release for April 2.

Three newcomers to Fox Films have been assigned to roles in the next George Walsh feature, which Otis Turner will direct again. They are Florence Mayon, Kenneth Everett and Phil Gastrock. Mr. Walsh's leading lady will be Doris Pawn. Also in the cast are Willard Louis, William Burress and Josef Swickard. Mr. Swickard will be recalled for his excellent portrayal of Dr. Manette in "A Tale of Two Cities."

George Walsh himself will have the part of a book agent in the photodrama.

In the East, Valeska Suratt has just begun posing before the camera under the direction of William Nigh, who joined the Fox organization a short time ago. Miss Suratt herself returned a few days since from Tampa, Florida, where Kenean Buel has finished the scenes showing the star in the screen version of a famous Rider Haggard novel.

Nance O'Neil Productions Ready

Word comes from the studios of the Frank Powell Producing Corporation at College Point, Long Island, that Nance O'Neil, the celebrated star who was recently signed to appear in Powell pictures released by the Mutual, has completed two dramas.

"Mrs. Balfame," the picturization of Gertrude Atherton's famous book of that title, which brings the works of that celebrated novelist for the first time to the screen, was completed a number of weeks ago.

The release date of this first O'Neil offering through Mutual exchanges has been set for April 9, in accordance with the Mutual's policy to have all productions completed at the studio at least four weeks in advance of release date.

The second of Nance O'Neil's Mutual-Powell dramas is Henrik Ibsen's "Hedda Gabler," that striking characterization and picture of Norwegian life which formed one of the noted actress's strongest stage roles. It will be released some time in May.

Two New Subjects for Gail Kane

Gail Kane has started work at the American studio on her second production for Mutual. This will be an adaptation of H. S. Merriman's popular novel "With Edged Tools."

The third vehicle chosen for Miss Kane will be entitled "The Indiscretion of Molly." This is an adaptation of the novel by Charles Sherman, "The Upper Crust."

The first feature in which Miss Kane appeared for Mutual was "Whose Wife?" This is now completed and the release date will be announced in the near future.

College Women See Minter Play

The Alumnae Club of the University of Minnesota entertained at a "movie" afternoon on Saturday afternoon, March 17, at the Calhoun Theater, Lake Street and Girard Avenue South, Minneapolis, Minnesota, for the benefit of a cottage dormitory for girls who desire to live cheaply while going through the university.

The feature of the two performances was Mary

Miles Minter's first Mutual Star Production, "Youth's Endearing Charm." Films showing various activities at the University of Minnesota, and selections by the Girl's Glee Clubs completed the program.

Miss Minter sent a telegram to the Alumnae Club, assuring them of her good wishes, which was shown upon the screen.

Handle Big Advertising Campaign

Following the appointment of Cameron H. Bristol of Philadelphia as manager of Triangle's special department of advertising, R. W. France, general manager of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, makes the following statement:

Triangle Distributing Corporation has created a special advertising department which will be in charge of Cameron H. Bristol, whom we consider to be one of the best advertising men in the country.

Mr. Bristol has been in the advertising business for over ten years. His most recent connection has been with the Electric Storage Battery Company of Philadelphia, where he conducted one of the most successful advertising campaigns ever carried on in this country. He made the word "Exide" known throughout the entire world. He has been for some time past familiarizing himself with conditions in the moving picture industry, and while this is a new field for him, he comes to us with a fresh viewpoint and full of new ideas with respect to moving picture advertising from which we expect big results.

He is now working on plans along special lines, and we are trying to devise the best method of adding to the knowledge which the general public has of the Triangle product. We expect to be able to make some interesting announcements along this line in the near future.

Jackie Saunders as "Sunny Jane"

In "Sunny Jane," Jackie Saunders' first production for Mutual, Miss Saunders plays a harum-scarum, imaginative, gingham-dressed little country girl who plays about every trick that you ever thought of when you were about that age.

Besides being up to all sorts of pranks, Jane is also a highly imaginative child, and her statement, "I am not what I am," is always a signal for a flight into visionary realms in which she is always a heroine and some brave knight is saving her from death or disaster. At one time she is a queen, at another she is Cleopatra reclining on her couch while Marc Anthony drinks a love potion with her, or again she is simply a little country girl saved by a handsome man.

To anyone brought up on a farm or loving farm life "Sunny Jane" will bring a pang of homesickness. There are scenes of cattle in the fields, flocks of sheep, goats, chickens, big collie dogs, hay mounds stacked high and all that goes with a well kept farm.

Exhibitor Praises Bernhardt Feature

Concerning the engagement of the Sarah Bernhardt motion picture "Mothers of France," at the Rialto Theater, New York, manager S. L. Rothapfel has written the following letter to World-Pictures Brady-Made:

It is only fair to tell you that after terminating the engagement of Madame Sarah Bernhardt in "Mothers of France," the Rialto has shown its most pretentious presentation. Never in my career have I heard such splendid comment; never have I seen so much enthusiasm as was displayed during every presentation of this engagement. The business was enormous, the line extending way around to Forty-third street, both afternoon and evening, and not alone was it a financial and artistic success, but it did a great deal toward bringing in a good many patrons who never knew of the entertainment that we were giving here. I consider this last the most valuable, and makes "Mothers of France" the most profitable engagement I have ever had in the Rialto, in fact, one of the most profitable engagements I have ever had during my career.

Surely, there is no possibility of offending anyone in a matter where their sympathy may lie, as even the German papers spoke in glowing terms of the performance and said that it might well be called "Mothers of Europe" or "Mothers of the World," instead of "Mothers of France."

I congratulate you upon owning and having the distribution of this wonderful subject, and any exhibitor who presents it and uses even a small amount of pains, will reap a tremendous profit both artistically and financially.

Warren Completes First Production

Edward Warren has returned from Florida and North Carolina and celebrated the completion of the first production to be released under his own trade mark, "The Warfare of the Flesh," by making plans for his next feature. The play he has just finished for the state right market has engaged his attention since early last January. The interiors were finished a few weeks ago a the Herbert Brenon studios and the allegorical prologue was made in the South. The announcement of the release of "The Warfare of the Flesh," heralds Mr. Warren's debut as a producer-director-manufacturer. In discussing his work Mr. Warren says:

When I secured financial support for my own company, I was elated because of the opportunity and the avenue of progress and achievement it opened up to me, but I fully sensed my triple responsibility. As a producer, I felt responsible to those who ultimately were going to show their faith in my work to the extent of paying for state rights. As a director, I was keenly alive to my duty to the public and the exhibitor, both inexorable judges, but whose confidence, because of their position, is very much abused. As a manufacturer, I felt the burden of the counting room and necessarily actuated by the desire to produce the character and type of production that frankly will not only make money for the buyer and the exhibitor, but also for those who are financially supporting my enterprise.

Thus my position was not an easy one at the outset. However, I had my problems well fixed in my mind, and the solution of them, because I knew what I was after, was therefore not as discouraging as they would have been had I been lacking in a thorough understanding of requirements, and specifications. For instance, I was fully aware, before I started, of just what the state right buyers want. I made a study of market conditions, program competition and other fundamentals.

As a result, I have a production with many superlative selling points; points that the buyer can sell to the exhibitor and the exhibitor to the public. I have six stars, all of whom have been exploited by motion picture manufacturers and theatrical managers. They are therefore known to the picture public as well as the theatergoer. My story is of the kind that will interest all classes particularly the women, for it is a clean, domestic thesis. In all I am thoroughly satisfied that I have fulfilled my obligations and start work on my next picture with the satisfaction of knowing that final results will measure up to the expectations of all those who may be interested.

"The Trufflers," April 9

"The Trufflers," Essanay's picturization of Samuel Merwin's story of that title, will be released April 9. The advertising which the story, published in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, obtained formed a good basis for advance advertising for the picture. In addition to this an all-star cast of good box office drawing power, including Nell Craig, Sydney Ainsworth, Ernest Maupain and Richard C. Travers, was provided for the production by Essanay.

Reports of pre-bookings from the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, which is releasing the film, indicate that "The Trufflers" is off for a good run throughout the country. The picture has a screen time of 1 hour 12 minutes.

Third Max Linder Comedy

"Max in a Taxi" will be the title of Max Linder's third Essanay comedy. The noted European comedian, at his Culvert City, Cal., studio, has nearly completed the filming of this production. It is scheduled for release the fourth Monday in April through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. While the filming of "Max in a Taxi" is being completed, the comedian's second Essanay comedy, "Max Wants a Divorce," is having a record run, according to reports from the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. Backed by the big hit which the first Essanay-Linder comedy, "Max Comes Across," has made, and the national advertising campaign which Essanay is conducting for the comedian's "made in America" films, "Max Wants a Divorce" is drawing capacity business wherever it is being shown. Critics and exhibitors alike have praised the production, many declaring it better than the first comedy even.

With two hits to his credit already, Max's third production, "Max in a Taxi," cannot fail to be a big drawing card. A special line of novelties has been arranged by Essanay for exhibitors who book the comedy.

"Max in a Taxi" will have a screen time approximately of thirty minutes. The comedian's original comedy company, which was transported almost in toto from the Essanay Chicago studios to the Pacific coast, appears in the forthcoming offering.

New "Musty Suffer" Series

Essanay in co-operation with George Kleine has launched a new series of "Musty Suffer" comedies.

These comedies, presenting Harry Watson Jr. in the varied "Mishaps of Musty Suffer," will have a screen time each of approximately fifteen minutes. They are being released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service.

Through the co-operative plan the two films alternate in making the releases.

The first production, entitled "The Fried Egg Hero," was released by Essanay, April 1. A week later, April 8, the second comedy, entitled "The Soda Jerker," was released. The remainder of the series will be released as follows: April 15, "Wet and Dry," by Essanay; April 22, "Truly Rural," by Kleine; April 29, "The Ladder of Fame," by Essanay; May 6, "Pure and Simple," by Kleine; May 13, "Spliced and Iced," by Essanay; May 20, "Starlight Sleep," by Kleine; May 27, "Musty B. Young," by Essanay; June 3, "Musty's Vacation," by Kleine.

Filming of the entire series has just been completed.

"The Eternal Sin," a photodrama by Herbert Brenon, starring Florence Reed, adapted from Victor Hugo's famous tragedy, "Lucretia Borgia," is the latest Selznick-Pictures released, and was given its initial showing at the Broadway Theater, New York, for a run limited to two weeks.

"Broadway Jones"

Six-Part Artcraft Featuring George M. Cohan—Released March 26—Reviewed by George W. Graves

GEORGE M. COHAN'S first appearance on the screen is a triumph from all angles. First, the story lends itself most happily to screen restrictions and has plenty of dash and interest; second, the star's inimitable personality registers with smashing effect without the voice, which is largely made possible by subtitles that have the spontaneity of conversational repartee and the true Cohan touch of humor; third, Joe Kaufman's direction is that of a talented hand, making use of all comedy chances offering themselves; and fourth, the suporting cast helps at all times to make the picture realistic, lifelike. Mr. Cohan screens excellently under normal conditions, but when lighting is injudiciously used his rather light colored eyes lose for the moment their pictorial entity. This does not mean, however, that the actor's eyes are unsuited to picture work. The Cohan walk and the Cohan gesticulations lose none of their essential comedy power in the picture, while the irresistible Cohan facial expressions are brought into much more intimate view, revealing splendid subtlety necessarily lost in the distance on the legitimate stage.

Incidental to the production are some well-handled cabaret scenes and some remarkable interior night effects, showing New York's dazzling White Way. The usual lettering was cleverly replaced by that blazing forth the merits of "Chu-Chu" gum. The story provides for a little sympathetic work by Marguerite Snow, which is very delicately handled and very useful in keeping the action within the bounds of human appeal. Miss Snow was a happy choice for the part. Russell Bassett is splendid, as one by this time has grown to expect, as the old-fashioned gentleman with equally old-fashioned ideas in business, while Crawford Kent's work is entirely adequate.

From the moment "Broadway" sets out for the street he was named after, the story is thoroughly entertaining. There are any number of comedy "gags"—among them Broadway's having himself paged at the hotel purely for the advertisement—which are all sure-fires. This theme of "It pays to advertise" forms the groundwork of a number of ludicrous situations. The tale runs on, telling how Broadway makes friends with fashionable New York and entertains it at all the restaurants and cabarets, finally overdrawing his steadily depleting bank account. Not too proud to marry for money, he prepares to wed the corpulent Mrs. Gerard. The latter, however, is herself out of funds. She thinks that in Broadway she has access to all the cash she can spend. How the young spendthrift is led to see the light, how he returns to his home town and makes up with his disappointed sweetheart and how he saves from the hands of enemies the chewing gum factory which was his father's before him and his father's before him—the family ownership that the subtitles take pains to bring out—provides a very satisfying climax.

"Broadway Jones" is the kind of picture that the public cannot seem to get enough of. It is a sure dispeller of "the blues." George M. Cohan's name, coupled with that of the well-known play itself, has an enormous advertising value. The Strand theater in New York is giving special morning performances of the picture—rather convincing proof that it is a substantial box-office attraction.

"High Play"

William Russell in American Mutual Release of April 9—Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A MELODRAMA with sufficient excitement to satisfy the most thrill-loving audiences is this latest release starring William Russell. Julius Grinnell Furthman supplied the story, which contains material for a number of dramatic situations and which has been well directed by Edward Sloman.

The picture is a satisfactory one of its kind, and should prove a good attraction generally. The action is swift and the story in the main clear. The work of the star and supporting cast is thoroughly commendable. Settings and photography are good.

The Story: John Sevier (William Russell), vice-president of the International Trust Company, has been befriended by James Collins (Robert Klein), its president. When the company is threatened with ruin because of Collins' speculations, John comes to its rescue with a fortune of his own and saves both the company and his friend.

John has been engaged to marry Elaine Morier (Lucille Young), whose father keeps a fashionable gambling establishment. The girl breaks the engagement when she learns that John has sacrificed his own fortune, and John becomes interested in Marion Leonard (Francelia Billington). Later Elaine repents of her hasty action when she learns that John is made president of the company and will probably become wealthier than before. But the man now loves Marion.

Then through a complicated and exciting set of circumstances, John is placed in a position where he must decide between saving Marion's brother (Ashton Dearholdt) from suspicion of murder and saving Elaine's reputation. He has witnessed the shooting and knows who is guilty, but if he reveals what he knows to save the brother, Elaine will be compromised unless John marries her. The difficulty is solved when John frightens the guilty man into a confession. The brother is saved and John marries Marion.

"A Man and the Woman"

Art-Dramas Offering for March 22 Adaptation of Zola's "Nantas." Reviewed by George W. Graves

GOOD direction, good acting and an equally commendable modern adaptation of Emile Zola's plot make this a picture worth while. The adaptation, by Alice Blache, provides excellent screening material; enough for five entertaining reels. It has the elements of suspense, pathos and human interest. There is no hiding the fact that the play comes under the heading of "sex interest," but there is not the slightest indelicacy in the treatment, a condition which keeps the offering within the bounds of legitimate dramatic entertainment. The play, as compared with plots built along similar lines, has a refreshing odor of originality, lending to all of the action the needed interest-compelling power.

Coming to the players, Edith Hallor, a new star, shows a great deal of skill in the handling of her part, a role which requires of her no little difficult emotional work; Leslie Austen gives a virile interpretation of the part of the lawyer, while Yolande Duquette's work as the scheming, double-faced villainess, calls for unstinted praise. The cast is a strong one, helping to put the picture over with a distinct human feeling. Kirke Brown, H. B. Parker, Zadee Burbank and Lorna Volare have important parts.

It is our opinion that the deletion of the attempted suicide scene in the beginning of the play would have made a like scene at the climax more powerful. Tendencies to suicide do not indicate strength of character, and when the act is twice repeated a little note of comedy is apt to creep in unawares. The first enactment of this scene could have been eliminated much easier than the last. Right after the attempted suicide at the climax of the story, the heroine looks into the eyes of her forgiven husband and says, "I love you because you are so brave"—a statement that only half-way convinces on recalling past-events, especially the man's penchant to self-effacement.

For the social position it will give him, James Duncan, a struggling young lawyer, enters into a strange contract. He agrees to marry the wealthy Agnes Van Suyden to cover up an unfortunate incident in the past and to give her child a name. As time passes Duncan rises to a position of power and comes to love his wife and her child, although she regards him with lofty disdain. The man receives a terrible, galling punishment as the price he has paid for success. Agnes is innocent of any wrong, but through circumstances Duncan becomes suspicious. He has their servant, Miss Perrier, spy upon her. Crawford, the man who had betrayed Agnes, returns from Europe, and the crafty Miss Perrier starts machinations in his interest, intending to collect from both him and Duncan. A prearranged situation which Miss Perrier institutes to discredit both the husband and wife in one another's eyes brings the story to a startling climax. By reason of this Duncan is lead to believe that his wife is faithless, but the wife who has at last found love for her patient long suffering husband goes to him with evidence of her innocence prevents his suicide and a happy reconciliation, or rather, conciliation, ensues. The plotters have failed in their attempts.

"The Gift Girl"

Louise Lovely in Five-Reel Bluebird Release—Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A FANTASTIC story which introduces a number of picturesque scenes and characters, and which gives Louise Lovely an ingenue role in unusual settings serves as the basis of this Bluebird photoplay. It is a story-book plot and not concerned with real life. For this reason, the basic situation of the play, the scheme of the two dissolute old men to give the waif, Rokaia, to the wayward son of one of the men, which would otherwise be unpleasant, is accepted in the romantic spirit of the play.

The story is laid in Persia and in Paris, and the heroine is a little English girl who has been reared in an eastern harem. The story is treated in a light fashion, with elements of humor. Miss Lovely is a most attractive ingenue and her prettiness in the role of Rokaia is one of the enjoyable features of the role. The supporting cast of players, which includes Rupert Julian, the director, Emory Johnson, Wadsworth Harris, Frederick Montague, Winter Hall and Rex Roselli, is a capable one. The settings and photography are good.

As a whole, the picture will satisfy audiences which like a light, romantic offering, fairly amusing and interesting.

The Story: Rokaia, born in Persia of English parents, is left an orphan when a baby and is cared for in the household of a native prince. When she reaches marriageable age, she rebells at the idea of marrying the man her guardians choose for her, and with her tutor escapes to Paris. There she is separated from her tutor and comes to the attention of a nobleman who sends her as a "gift" to his son. The son is charmed by the innocence and beauty of the little waif and protects her. Later he falls in love with her and desires to marry her. But her Persian guardian finds her again and takes her away. After much excitement she is rescued and the story ends with her betrothal to the youth to whom she came as a gift.

"Trooper 44"

E. I. S. Motion Picture Corporation Drama Offers Novelty. Reviewed by George W. Graves

BOTH novelty and realism are injected into these reels by the participation in the drama of the Pennsylvania State Police, said to be the most efficient mounted force of its kind in the world. This was made possible by permission of Major John C. Groome, the organizer and head of the force. Captain Lynn G. Adams turns actor for the time being, having a rather conspicuous part. The scenario, by Garfield Thompson, has the distinction of being based on actual State records, as an opening subtitle reveals. It provides for a virile, convincing melodrama, with no dearth of exciting whirlwind situation and a well-sustained note of pathos and love-interest.

It is evident that Director Roy Gahris worked hard for realism, and his efforts are crowned with success. The general round-up scene in the saloon takes its rank among the biggest scenes of its kind to be yet imprinted on the celluloid. The manner in which the police, sixty strong, tear in there and clean things up sets one's blood tingling. As melodramatic entertainment, combining the detective and heart-interest elements, the picture ranks high. The novelty of having the Pennsylvania State Police take an active part in its production gives double worth to a story which already has the right ingredients for popularity.

Powerful scene in "Trooper 44."

Both the hero and the heroine (parts taken by George Soule Spencer and June Dayc) hold one's sympathies straight through. W. W. Black, always a good heavy, sustains his reputation in the role of Sandford, the boisterous villain. The role of Davis, villain No. 2, is satisfactorily taken by Roy Sheldon, while Betty Dodsworth gives an accurate portrayal of her character, Davis' mistress. Others in the truly efficient cast are Walter P. Lewis, Roy Gahris and Captain Adams, who, though this is his first appearance on the screen, offers nothing to prove that he is not an old-timer.

Captain Jack, in love with Ruth, daughter of an influential member of a gang of outlaws, is forced to arrest her as implicated in a murder case. Her bail is provided by Davis, a man who means to get her into his power. The latter, proprietor of the hang-out of Sandford's outlaws, takes her to the latter place and assaults her. Sandy, a member of the gang, for sufficient reasons, turns state's evidence against the gang and rides for the state troopers. The sixty mounted police dash to the tavern and, after a stiff fight, subdue the gangsters. Ruth is saved from Davis and later her innocence is proved by the dying statement of her father.

"Be My Best Man"

Current Essanay "Black Cat" Release—Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is a mystery story with not a little suspense and excitement. It is not very plausible and a number of events and motives are unexplained, but the action and interest are sufficient to overcome this defect in the minds of the average patrons. The acting, with Edward Arnold, Ernest Maupain and Hazel Daly in the leading roles, is fine. The photography of the interiors might be improved upon.

The cleverest touch in the picture is the introduction, in which is shown a throng of curious by-standers congregated to view a wedding party in which a rich man's daughter is the bride. Then the play flashes back to the story which preceded the marriage.

The Story: Grant Carver (Edward Arnold) is in love with Frances Alden (Hazel Daly), whose parents wish her to marry the Baron von Helmuth (Ernest Maupain). The girl's father tells Grant that he may marry the girl if he can show his ability to earn money. Later Grant takes pity on a vagabond and, learning that the stranger is a graduate of his own college, he aids him, even taking him to a dinner party at the Alden home. At this dinner, Mrs. Alden wears a valuable necklate, a birthday gift. During the evening this is stolen. Grant believes his protege is guilty, but events later reveal that the suposed baron is really a noted jewel thief and that the stranger is a detective in disguise. Because of Grant's kindness to him, he allows him to capture the thief and claim the reward. Then Grant and Frances are married.

"High Finance"

William Fox Five-Reel Photoplay Released March 26. Reviewed by George W. Graves

A PICTURE of splendid entertainment value is this lively Fox comedy-drama produced under the direction of Otis Turner. The piece is apparently not supposed to be taken seriously, and if one enters into the spirit of the play and forgets about strict conviction, he may derive unlimited pleasure from the well presented comedy situations. The play deals with a number of amusing characters, most of whom are eccentric. There is the rough-and-tumble, full-of-youthful-ardor American type, the bone-collecting faddist, and the unspeakable "sissy." Then there are two pillars of high finance—enemies—each of whom see red blood in the other's presence. Then, to finish up, we have that indispensable character ingredient—"the girl." These are the various characters whose function it is to keep the spectator from leaving the theater in a grouch. The combination of the actors selected for the parts and the story is all that is needed to keep the afore-mentioned viewer in a cheerful frame of mind.

George Walsh has the part of an idle son of the rich who proves to his father that he is able to take care of himself when he can no longer call on father's check-book. Mr. Walsh puts over some breezy comedy "business," including the occasional vaulting of furniture, etc., and gives an entirely pleasing, spontaneous performance. Doris Pawn makes a very charming ingenue, while Charles Clary and Hershel Mayall give their best to the parts of the two fighting financiers.

The story of the play concerns the "putting one over on father" by his turned-out spendthrift son, with a romance, a copper mine and a "bunco" financial operation thrown in for excitement. Interest holds from scene one, reel one, to the "finis" display at the end of reel five. Some very good situations are built around the lovers' suspecting each other of being thieves. The final fooling of both father and his rival by the designing son puts a well-ordered finishing touch to the play.

"A Million Bid"

Five-Part Vitagraph Feature Released April 2. Reviewed by George W. Graves

MANY will remember "A Million Bid" as a picture which sent many patrons away thrilled from the Vitagraph Theater in New York shortly after its opening three years ago. In 1917 the picture is, as ever, an excellent dramatic piece but little hampered in its effectiveness by old styles in the actors' dress and surface details in direction. One thing might have been corrected, however, if possible—the star's drifting half way out of the picture for a number of feet.

The story is absorbing, briskly told and has a maximum of real gripping situations. One marvels at the cruelty of the mother who intercepts the letters of her daughter and her lover and witnesses the girl's unspeakable suffering without softening a particle—all for the sake of cold, soulless money—but there may be, or there may have been such people in the world. Some may seriously question whether or not a man who has entirely lost his memory can start all over again from the state of baby mentality and win his way to success in the world once more in five years—a thing which is done in the final reel. The writer could have made the man lose his knowledge of past events but not his whole education. However, this appearance of the supposedly dead husband to be operated upon by the second husband of his wife gives occasion for an excellent climax.

The picture is enacted by a cast of unusual talents, the names themselves indicate—Anita Stewart, Charles Kent, Julia Swayne Gordon, E. K. Lincoln and Harry Morey. Ralph W. Ince put plenty of realism into his picture. The sinking of the millionaire's yacht and the attendant scenes have plenty to offer in the way of thrills.

After the death of Sidney Belgradin, his extravagant wife, thrown back on nothing more substantial than a small insurance, frowns on her daughter's love for a young doctor, Brent. She finally tells "the children" that they must separate for a year, and if at the end of that time they still have the same feelings toward each other she will give her consent to the marriage. Brent takes a position in the West, and through long weary months neither Agnes nor her doctor lover hear a word from one another—due to the mother's cruel interception of the letters.

Mrs. Belgradin takes Agnes abroad and fairly forces her to marry an Australian millionaire, Marshe. Agnes gives the man to understand, however, that she will be his wife in name only. While on the honeymoon Marshe's yacht sinks; Agnes is saved, but her husband is given up for lost. Arrived in New York Agnes finds the letters that her mother has intercepted and later a touching meeting occurs between the separated lovers, followed soon after by their marriage. In five years' time a case of lost memory is sent to Dr. Brent from Europe, a M. de La Mer. The wife is dumbfounded to recognize in La Mer her first husband whom she had believed drowned at sea. She tries to get to her husband to prevent the operation for the sake of their little child, but the operation is already under way. In awful suspense Agnes waits outside the door. Just as La Mer is beginning to recall the past he falls back dead—the operation is unsuccessful.

"The Eternal Sin"

Six Reel Selznick Offering for April Features. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS elaborate Herbert Brenon production was based on Victor Hugo's "Lucretia Borgia." Its most praiseworthy feature is the acting, especially that of Florence Reed, who makes us feel every bit of the intense grief, cruelty and mother love which are the outstanding emotions of her part. Miss Reed's work has the stamp of power and conviction and never once is there a suggestion of acting. The role is an exceedingly heavy and dramatic one. The story is told in lurid style; nothing in the way of detail is withheld in the interest of delicacy at the possible sacrifice of dramatic force. The fact that it is a tragedy is rather against the picture for popular consumption, but elegant, impressive production and flawless acting will do much to make the average spectator recommend the attraction to his friend as worth seeing.

The torture chamber scenes are gone into pretty minutely, but not enough to be needlessly offensive. The whole story keeps in a heavy line of drama, and the climax offers a tense situation where the mother unwittingly poisons her own son and he stabs her, not knowing that she is his mother. The second time Lucretia pulled out her antidote was the occasion for slight mirth in the audience—a condition that should be guarded against in a really serious scene. A repetition of an act of this kind often tends toward comedy. There are a number of small incongruencies in the action which will be overlooked by the majority, but which will prove annoying to the analytical mind. Among these was the jolly, buoyant conduct of the five sons directly after, in effect, the terrible murder of their plotting fathers.

"The Eternal Sin" has any number of sensational, highly dramatic situations, well spread over the entire action. The picture is no meagre tribute to Herbert Brenon's talents. The fact that there are twelve murders throughout the film is enough to scare away many people who enjoy a lighter, more cheerful form of entertainment, and this should be taken into account by the exhibitor who has a fair knowledge of his audience's likes and dislikes. However, the production is a big one, every bit worthy of a large outlay in advertising. Florence Reed's work is the finest, most memorable feature of the play, and her name can stand all the advertising tension placed upon it.

"A Woman's Awakening"

Triangle-Fine Arts Photoplay Released March 25. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS picture, showing the more frivolous modern society in glaring profile, has received rather novel treatment through the united efforts of Frank Woods, the author, and Chester Withey, the director. It includes both satirical comedy and tense melodrama in its quite artificial story, but manages to hold an even interest throughout. The different types of humans in the cast prove particularly interesting in this, even though the characters are not all convincing. Seena Owen makes her part stand out in very attractive fashion. She is given material aid by Charles Gerrard, Alma Reuben and A. D. Sears.

The story concerns a country girl who comes to the city, opens her ears to the temptings of her frivolous, vain friends and shuts them to the wise counsel of the man who really cares for her and sees the danger ahead. Paula's heedless, wild career leads to her marriage with Topham, a worthless parasite, an event which finally has its outcome in a tragedy. Topham, who proves to be a cruel, worse-than-worseless husband, is finally killed by Paula's invalid mother, who has witnessed more than she can endure. Paula and her faithful sweetheart who has constantly stood by, each have reason to believe that the other is guilty of the crime, although evidence points to suicide. However, the invalid mother, seeing how things are developing, confesses to the crime and expires shortly after. Then comes the happy marriage, the union that ought to have taken place in the beginning.

Due to the unlikely story, the picture is not exceptional, but its other merits are such as to rank it with the average good program feature. The acting is a feature, and Seena Owen's name belongs on the advertising, not because she is especially well-known but because she is a feature of this particular picture.

"The Law of the North"

Shirley Mason in Edison-K. E. S. E. Release of April 2. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

FOR a number of reasons, this is a very good attraction. First, its story holds the interest closely at all times. It is interpreted by an unusually well chosen cast and the leading roles are sympathetic. The location of the story in the north will give it a romantic glamour for most people, while it gave the Edison company a chance to introduce snow scenes of great beauty.

Shirley Mason is very attractive as the heroine, and Pat O'Malley as the young corporal has a fitting role. Richard Tucker as Reginald Annesley is a corvincing villain. Sally Crute plays Marie Beaubin, a half-breed girl, in a sympathetic manner. Others in the cast who deserve praise are Fred Jones and Robert Keggerris, as half-breeds, and Charles Sutton as Lieutenant Graham, Edith's father.

This is an offering which should thoroughly entertain any audience. They will leave the theater satisfied that they have been well entertained and are likely to send their friends to see the play, some commenting on the story, others on the star and not a few on the beauty of the picture itself.

The Story: Lieutenant Graham of the Northwest Mounted Police welcomes the return of his young daughter, Edith, from an eastern school to his home in Canada. His young friend, Corporal John Emerson, meets and falls in love with the girl. So also does Reginald Annesley, son of a lord, factor of the trading post. Annesley uses the power of his wealth and position to dazzle the girl but she loves the corporal.

Young Emerson is on the trail of Pierre, a whisky smuggler. He receives information from Marie Beaubin, a half-breed girl who fears Pierre. Annesley, who has wronged Marie, sees in the circumstance a chance to injure Emerson in Edith's eyes. He persuades Edith that Emerson is Marie's lover. Edith therefore gives up the young corporal and promises to marry Annesley.

Marie, learning of the engagement, threatens to tell Edith the truth. Annesley in anger kills her. Emerson is accused of the murder, but this cannot be proved. Edith by chance learns of Annesley's relations with Marie and believes he is the murderer. She tricks him into a confession. The brother of Marie kills Annesley and the law of the north is fulfilled.

"Told at Twilight"

Pathe Gold Rooster Play Starring Baby Marie Osborne. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE youthful star of this offering proves most entertaining as she romps through a series of amusing and realistic incidents in the life of a high spirited youngster. A story which holds the interest and proves an acceptable vehicle for her talents and personality forms the basis of the five reels. The direction, acting and photography are good throughout. Henry King, the director, plays the role of Marie's father. Daniel Gilfether as the millionaire is excellent. Beatrice Van plays Marie's mother. A little negro boy is an important member of the cast.

Comedy, pathos and excitement are blended in the story, with the comedy predominating. There are few picture audiences who will fail to be amused at the offering. As a feature for a neighborhood house, the production is unexcelled, while its novelty and reality will make it almost as acceptable for downtown houses.

The story is by D. F. Whitcomb.

The Story: Little Mary Sunshine is a "live-wire" youngster who goes from one mischievous exploit to another, from running away to go swimming with the boys to stealing a blind couple's sign, "Please help the blind parents of nine children," and with her little negro companion begging money for ice cream. The pranks of the youngster amuse greatly an aged millionaire who lives nearby and he and the baby become "chums."

Do Exhibitors Want "Stars" in Short Pictures?

To a number of exhibitors who asked us why various popular players have been taken out of short pictures, the following reply was made:

"Under the program system the producer cannot get money enough from his short pictures to pay the increasing salaries of the stars.

"Under the program system a picture containing an unknown player brings the producer the same money as a picture containing a star.

"Under the General Film 'Open booking' system every picture sells on its merit. If our quality short subjects (under 'open booking' system) receive co-operation from the exhibitor, they will earn a reasonable profit for the producer. Then he will be justified in keeping his stars in the short subjects.

"Consequently, it is now up to you, Mr. Exhibitor.

"If you want stars in short pictures, General Film producers will give them to you. Do your share by giving good short pictures a fair chance—give them long runs, and they will please your patrons. Then you can afford to pay the producer a decent price, and he can afford to keep his stars in short pictures."

The Stolen Rubies—Jimmie Dale Series—Mutual.—Featuring E. K. Lincoln. Jimmie Dale, millionaire bachelor, alias the Grey Seal, is the means of rescuing a young chap from the hands of some unscrupulous scoundrels. Burton, who is his employer's secretary, is under obligations to Isaac Pelina, a pawnbroker, who is in reality Perly, a crooked Jew of the underworld. At the bidding of Pelina, Burton robs his employer of a fortune in rubies, but there are complications before they are delivered to the pawnbroker. A fake murder is planned and Burton is given a gun full of blank cartridges. In a quarrel he shoots and kills, so he supposes, Perly. Through the Tocsin, the mysterious influence that governs the movements of the Grey Seal, Jimmie Dale is acquainted with the details of the case and arrives at Pelina's just in time to save the rubies from him. A shot from outside, from one of Pelina's victims, kills Pelina, and the Grey Seal exposes him and the trick to Burton, tells him to start life anew and superintends the mailing of the rubies back to Burton's employer, and affixes a "Grey Seal" to absolve Burton from any suspicion. Marie La Salle is forced to leave her home through the persecution of the Pretender, who is masquerading as her uncle, Henri La Salle, and his partner, the Woman in Black. She takes refuge with a friend, Mrs. Linden Gage, and here Jimmie Dale is introduced to her and both find themselves very much interested in the other.

They repair to Tiny's house and Jerry separates Tiny from Hank, the favored suitor. They pose as movie actors and stage a scene. Father and Hank break in on the scene, and Jerry, discovered on account of the loss of his wig, "beats it" down the road, to the accompaniment of a rainfall of bullets emanating from a shot-gun in father's hands.

He did so. The innocent wife, persuaded by Sanders to elope until Robert should come to himself, leaves a note for Robert. Ben applies for a job at Currier's place, who hires him to get into a box, on which is painted "Loof Lirpa." The box is left upside down at Gypsy's house, with Ben on his head. He is liberated by the maid, who falls in love with him. Ben calls up Laurie, who hurries to the house. Ben tells Laurie that if he will hide in the box he will meet a beautiful heiress, and Laurie gets in the box. Ben puts on some of the maid's clothes and poses as her sister. Gypsy returns, discovers Laurie, who makes a hit with her, and they all repair to a swell cafe. The wine flows freely, and becoming too boisterous, they are thrown out. Currier, discovering the money is bad, Ben and Laurie are pinched, Gypsy blaming Currier, saying it is his fault for sending her a "Loof Lirpa." Don in his disguise happens to fall in with "The Owl" and Alice who are the ringleaders of the coterie. He does not discover this fact, however, until he has fallen in love with Alice. In the gambling district Robert makes the acquaintance of a beggar and soon the beggar consents to rob Elwood's home so that Robert can pay his gambling debts. Quotations on Film Stocks have not changed much during the week. Active stocks were generally lower and some inactive stocks were higher.

Artcraft Pictures Corporation: Has now secured David W. Griffith, who is expected to produce several elaborate photoplays a year. This company already has contracts with Mary Pickford, George M. Cohan, Douglas Fairbanks, etc.

Biograph Company: Considerable demand has recently developed for stock of this company, and bid price has advanced from $5 to $12 per share.

Empire All-Star Corporation: There has been very little trading in stock of this company during the week. This company has adopted a policy of producing pictures faster than they will be distributed, thereby giving the company time to make improvements in the pictures and to arrange for the widest possible distribution.

Lone Star Corporation: In spite of reports of large bookings, there has been more stock of this company for sale than market would absorb, and price of common stock has declined to 35.

Mutual Film Corporation: John R. Freuler, president of this company, has been making a tour of all the branch houses of the company to "speed up" selling, and to put more "pep" in the organization. Sales of common have been reported at 21, and preferred at 31. The company has secured the services of Miss Billie Rhodes, who will produce 52 one-reel comedies to be released through the Mutual.

Prudential Pictures Corporation: The stock of this company, amounting to $5,000,000, is now being traded in daily on the New York curb around $4.25 per share.

Triangle Film Corporation: The market for this stock has been rather weak, with sales as low as $1.50 per share. This company has recently signed Irene Howley, formerly with the Biograph, Reliance and Metro companies.

World Film Corporation: Sales of this stock have been made recently as low as 62½ cents per share. This company has just secured the American rights to Sarah Bernhardt's patriotic picture, entitled "Mothers of France."

Demand Discontinuance of Deposits

WASHINGTON EXHIBITORS MEET IN ROUSING CONVENTION

THE third annual convention of the Washington Theater Managers' Association, held in Seattle on March 19 and 20, drew the biggest attendance of any gathering the exhibitors of the state have ever had. The exchange men also demonstrated their willingness to cooperate by attending the convention in full force. One of the important actions taken was the joining of the National League by the Washington exhibitors. The first day's meeting took place at 2 p. m. at the Butler hotel, with J. von Herberg, of the Liberty Theater, Seattle, in the chair.

In the first speech of the afternoon Lee A. Ochs, president of the M. P. E. L. of America, made a plea for national organization of exhibitors, pointing out that they might thereby abolish the deposit system, block the passage of laws harmful to the industry, and reduce the cost of film rental.

He said that Chicago had got into line on the deposit system and had won, and that the exhibitors of Philadelphia and Minneapolis had agreed to ignore their petty jealousies in order to combine in fighting this evil. He recommended that a resolution be passed against this system which worked such an injustice on the exhibitor by tieing up capital which he might otherwise use in the improvement or extension of his business. The exchanges, he said, should find some other way of protecting themselves against exhibitors whom they could not trust.

The greatest good to be accomplished by organization, the speaker declared to be in reducing the cost of film. By combining so as to give the producer twenty to thirty days in each territory, he said that exhibitors would reduce the cost of distribution to the producer and so reap the benefit in the lower rental price which the produced could then afford to make.

At each annual convention of the M. P. E. L. of America he explained that five representatives from each state were allowed, with an extra one for each twenty-five members in the branch.

"If you don't like the way the League is being managed," he concluded, "don't stay out and knock it. Come in and help. If you object to some of the officers, come in and vote them out. In organization lies power, and the bigger the organization the greater the power."

"Chain of Houses Owned by Wall Street"

C. R. Seelye, business manager of the Pathe exchanges, who was spending a few days in Seattle, was next asked to address the meeting.

Mr. Seelye declared his belief in the National League and the benefit to exhibitors through organization. Exchange men, he said, admitted the waste in the distributing end of the business. He claimed that exhibitors could help them in their efforts to reduce this waste by carrying out the plan outlined by the president of the league.

Moreover, he emphasized the actual neecssity for the organization of small exhibitors in order to prevent the annexation of their houses by the big interests. He expressed his belief that the industry would soon be divided into three big branches, viz., a few exchanges each releasing forty to fifty reels a week, a string of theaters operated by Wall Street, and the smaller theaters owned by the men already in the business, provided the latter organized. Otherwise, there would be only the two divisions.

He said that he believed in exhibitors' organization just as he believed in other business and governmental organization, and finished by urging every exhibitor to join the National League.

J. A. Koerpel, Northwest manager for the World Film Corporation, then spoke. He expressed his desire to help the exhibitors in every way possible. A motion was made that the Washington organization become a branch of the National League, and it was carried unanimously.

The meeting was then adjourned and a star chamber session of the Washington organization announced to follow immediately.

Demand Elimination of Deposit System

The following resolutions were reported by the secretary as having been passed in this closed meeting:

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

At the third annual convention of the Washington Theater Managers' Association at Seattle, Washington, Monday, March 19, the question of advanced deposits in film service was thoroughly discussed, and the sense of the convention was expressed in the following resolution, which was therein adopted, to-wit:

Whereas, heretofore it has been the policy of the manufacturers, through the motion picture film distributors, to exact an advance deposit on film service, which deposit has been paid and is now in the hands of the several companies, and

Whereas, this deposit system works an injury upon the exhibitors generally by reducing their working capital, and casts a reflection upon their commercial credit, and in other ways is entirely undesirable, and

Whereas, it is well known that the credit of exhibitors is in the main entirely stable and they pay, or are prepared to pay in advance for all film service; therefore

It Is Resolved, that after April 1, 1917, the Washington Theater Managers' Association and the membership thereof individually demand a discontinuance of the deposit system, and also that upon that date such deposits as are now held, whether in money, notes, bonds or other collateral, shall be returned to the depositor, either in kind as deposited, or if cash is on deposit, same may apply on current service.

It Is Further Resolved, that unless action is taken by the several companies affected, in conformity with this resolution, that after the above date the said Washington Theater Managers' Association and the membership thereof shall proceed as rapidly as possible to bring to a conclusion all existing contracts by cancellation of service.—WASHINGTON THEATER MANAGERS' ASSOCIATION.

Second Day of the Convention

A luncheon opened the second day's meeting, and the exchange men again demonstrated their feeling of good will toward the exhibitors by filling every place at the long table allotted to them. Showmen were present from all parts of Washington and some even from Oregon and Montana. Mr. Ochs was again asked to speak when luncheon was finished.

The National League president advised the exhibitors of Washington to form a Boosters' Club, pointing out the benefits which a similar club in Chicago had obtained for the organization.

He repeated his argument for economy both in the distributing end of the business and in the exhibiting end.

He declared in favor of the closed market and the shorter reel show, expressing his belief that the time would soon come when three reels would be the general thing, and the appearance of two stars on one day's program would not be unusual.

Again emphasizing the necessity of perfect co-operation among exhibitors and the importance of the league, he expressed his desire to do anything he could to help the exhibitors of Washington.

Waste in Distributing

Mr. Seelye was then asked to address the assembly again.

The Pathe business manager repeated his admission that the distributing end of the industry was inefficient, but said that they were working on systems to reduce the waste. He took the stand, however, that exhibitors could also reduce the expense of film production by making stars unnecessary. "I don't believe in stars and I don't believe that directors are half as wonderful as people think," said Mr. Seelye. "If exhibitors did their own advertising well, they wouldn't need a star's name to bring the people into their houses."

The speaker finished by again emphasizing the necessity of organization by exhibitors if they would save themselves, saying that he had knowledge of plans which showed that the division of the industry into the three branches he had spoken of the day before was really on its way.

H. G. Rosebaum, Seattle manager of Artcraft, and C. F. Hill, Seattle manager of Triangle, were each asked to speak, and both expressed their desire to co-operate with the exhibitors.

The meeting was then adjourned and the convention came to a close.

Mr. Ochs next visited Portland, where he addressed a convention of the Oregon exhibitors the next day.

CENSORSHIP DISCUSSED

Chicago Picture Men at Reel Fellows Club Hear Report of Progress of Illinois State Censor Bill.

Another enthusiastic meeting was held on March 30 by the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago at its new club rooms. One of the features of the meeting was the report of Joseph Hopp, president of the Chicago branch of the motion picture exhibitors league, concerning the activities of the film men at Springfield in connection with their fight against the Guernsey censorship bill, the measure which proposes to eliminate all local censorships in Illinois and provide for a state censor.

Mr. Hopp eloquently re-stated the stand of the exhibitors, declaring them to be emphatically opposed to censorship in any form, and stating that the film men had secured careful attention to the subject upon the part of the state legislators, and had caused the bill to be referred to a special committee composed of representatives Curran, Devereaux, Marcy, Mulcahy and O'Brien. This committee has held two special meetings at the Hotel LaSalle in Chicago and the whole censorship matter is being carefully investigated by the law-makers.

Representatives of the women's clubs, who are backing the censorship bill, are still active, both in Springfield and Chicago. The final discussion of the pending bill was held on Saturday, April 7. A complete report will appear in the next issue of MOTOGRAPHY.

Other speakers who addressed the gathering of fifty or sixty men present, were Alfred Hamburger, prominent theater man, George Siegmann, Griffith's former righthand man, who is to begin producing at Peoria, Ill.; Secretary A. E. Hamburg, William Burford and H. E. Whipple of the Crystal Photoplays Company.

One important action taken by the Reel Fellows was the decision to stage a big public banquet and ball on or about April 13. Douglas Fairbanks has already promised to be present at the affair, and it is possible that Mary Pickford, who is expected to be in Chicago about that time, on her way from New York to California, may also attend the event.

President Ralph O. Proctor, unable to be present at the meeting, turned the gavel over to Attorney David T. Alexander, who very efficiently presided over the successful meeting.

Exhibitors Benefit by New Plan

$3,000,000 PARALTA PRODUCING COMPANY BRINGS FORTH UNUSUAL SCHEME

PARALTA PLAYS, INC., with an authorized capital of $3,000,000, has been formed for the purpose of producing feature photodramas of the highest class under conditions of distribution that it is said will revolutionize this phase of the industry and extend to the exhibitor that long anticipated actual co-operation between him and the producer.

Co-operation with Exhibitors

Co-operation with exhibitors has apparently been a mania with many producers in the past, but this interest has never evolved itself into anything actually real in that direction. The time has now come when actual co-operation between producers and exhibitor, to the real benefit of the exhibitor, will be realized through Paralta supplying the incentive and a practical system.

The president of the new corporation is Carl Anderson, well known to this industry through his prominent connection with Lasky and Paramount. His abilities as an organizer are especially emphasized through the many practical and effective plans formulated by him, which have been generally adopted throughout the film business, greatly adding to efficiency in its various branches.

Herman Fichtenberg, of New Orleans, who conducts a chain of moving picture theaters in the south, and who is interested in several exchanges throughout that section of the country, is the chairman of the Board of Directors and will be very closely identified with the active management of the new corporation. He will practically be a representative of the exhibitors who identify themselves with its plans and future. His wide experience as an exhibitor places him in especially close sympathy with the man in the industry, who, at the present time, stands most in need of help and on whose progress and welfare the future of the business depends.

Herman Katz, of New York City, is the treasurer. He is identified with large retail business interests in that city and with manufacturing interests of national importance.

Nat I. Brown, of St. Louis, is the secretary and general manager. Mr. Brown has been long identified with the picture industry in connection with the national distribution of films. His experience has given him a very wide knowledge of territorial conditions. This information has proved especially valuable in working out the revolutionary distribution plan which the company is now about to put into operation.

Robert T. Kane, of San Francisco, who has been connected with theatrical and film production enterprises for several years, is the vice-president of the company. Mr. Kane will have the direction of all production interests and will make his headquarters in Los Angeles, where, at this time, studios for two producing connections of Paralta are being constructed.

Speaking of the new company and its aim to relieve the exhibitor of some of the impositions he now has to bear, Mr. Anderson said:

"We have come into this field the declared friend of the exhibitor. Our business sympathy is real and the co-operation we shall offer is genuine and will be profitable in actual money.

"We considered the whole subject for fully eight months," remarked Mr. Fichtenberg, "and the result has been the plan which we shall shortly present in full detail to all exhibitors in the United States and Canada.

"This plan is the result of practical experience, and has been, for the past seven months, in actual demonstration under the personal observation of our general manager, Nat I. Brown. The results have proved most satisfactory. I can say as an exhibitor of years of experience, and Mr. Anderson will tell you as a practical producer, that our plan is fundamentally sound in principle and will work out on exact, practical lines."

"Before proceeding further," said Mr. Anderson, "I should state that Paralta now has under contract two producing companies, each of which has been formed about a star of national reputation. The directors who will be responsible for the productions of these companies are of equal prominence in their respective lines of work."

"Exhibition Zones" to Be Developed

"Our plan of distribution is based on the development of exhibition zones or territories to their full capacity of results to exhibitors. We will say that a picture must bring a specific return in money on its first showing in a territory and to do this it must be seen approximately by a specific number of people.

"A town contains 16,000 people, or 4,000 families, and to accomplish the results desired, these people must be reached and the exhibitor must feel that he is justified to lay out the necessary money—he must know that he is in a position to have the picture as long as is necessary to get the majority of these families into his theater to see it, and the length of time must not be burdened with the rate per diem which makes this impossible. Knowing the value of a picture, knowing his ability as a showman and knowing the possibilities of his territory, it then becomes only a question of price to an exhibitor.

"And now we come to the solution of the trouble," continued Mr. Anderson. "We believe that the motion picture industry has now developed to the point where, instead of being entirely speculation it can be brought to a situation where it actually has some substantial basis from which results may be figured with certainty.

"In brief, we plan to entirely eliminate the speculative aspect from the exhibitor's standpoint and to place the hazard where it belongs—on the shoulders of the producer. He makes the larger profit and is responsible for the production and the burden of any hazard should be borne by him.

"Under our plan, our productions, which will be superior in every aspect, will be leased for a period of twelve months, or under an annual franchise to one exhibitor only in each exhibition zone or territory.

"For instance, take Newark, N. J. There are about 200,000 people in that city. We have determined, in conjunction with our exhibitor, that the territorial franchise for a given section of Newark is worth $100 a picture. That determined, we find that another section, in which there are ten theaters, has a value of $200 per picture; that another section, with 15 theaters, is worth $500 per picture, or that another territory, with but two theaters, is worth but $50 per picture. We aggregate this and find, in conjunction with the exhibitor, that Newark is worth to us $2,000 per production per annum.

Two, Four, Six Day Showing at Same Cost

"Otherwise, Bessie Barriscale in 'Rose O'Paradise,' will bring in $2,000 in one year from the city of Newark and it will only cost a territorial exhibitor, say $100 to control the run of this picture for one year in his territory—instead of $100 for one day.

FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

Many Exhibitors Cooperate with Chairman Jesse L. Lasky of Motion Picture Division of New York Mayor's Committee

The success of the motion picture campaign in behalf of the Mayor's Committee on National Defense was due entirely to the unselfish and patriotic co-operation of the exhibitors of Greater New York. In sending out the following statement and report Jesse L. Lasky, chairman of the Motion Picture Division, wishes to express his personal thanks to all who assisted in the patriotic work.

The campaign in New York City, under the auspices of the Mayor's Committee on National Defense, was concluded last week and a complete report of exhibitors' co-operation and activity was made to the Central Committee by Mr. Lasky.

With practically every agency, political, commercial and religious, working in behalf of national preparedness during the past ten days, the showing of the motion picture division was more than gratifying," said Mr. Lasky. "When I read the report of the progress of the work of the committee last week I was more than pleased to note a number of expressions of the deepest appreciation on the part of many prominent persons for the manner in which the picture industry as a whole, and the exhibitors in particular, had entered wholeheartedly in the mayor's committee plan.

In his report to the Central Committee at the meeting held in the Hotel Manhattan Mr. Lasky stated that in the Borough of Manhattan 279 motion picture theaters co-operated, in Brooklyn 280, in Queens 44 and in Staten Island 8; making a total of 611.

In all there were about 35,000 to 40,000 declaration blanks supplied to film exchanges, exhibitors and film studios in the greater city. Thirteen hundred motion picture slides were sent out to all exhibitors and shown on the screens in more than 90 per cent of the theaters in the city.

In addition to one sheets supplied to the exchanges, two thousand one sheets were exhibited in theater lobbies and on stands adjacent to the theaters, calling attention to signatures for declarations of patriotism.

All the reports which came into the Mayor's Committee headquarters have not yet been tabulated but it is estimated that through the channels of the motion picture theaters between 200,000 and 225,000 signatures were secured.

THEATERS AID PATRIOTISM

Chicago Picture Houses Co-operate With "Four-Minute Men," New Organization Working for Universal Military Training

The adaptability of the motion picture theater to the need of the hour and its importance in the national life is illustrated in the promptness with which Chicago exhibitors offered their stages to the "Four-Minute Men," a patriotic organization working for universal military training. Arrangements have been made whereby brief talks on the need of such training will be given in the following Chicago theaters:

Metropolitan, Oakland Square, Cosmopolitan, Frolic, Columbus, President, Lakeside, Lane Court, Calo, Terminal, Mulford, Victoria, Aristo, Castle, Alcazar, Albany Park, Apollo, Pine Grove, Willard, Twentieth Century, Grand Boulevard, Gayety, Playhouse."

These exhibitors were most eager to offer their houses for this purpose and their example will doubtless be followed by other theater managers. The representative of the "Four-Minute Men" will be introduced by a slide of introduction. The plan of appealing to the motion picture public will doubtless be very effective.

EVEN publicity has its drawbacks.

If you don't believe it, ask Richard R. Neill, of the William Fox forces. This is the reason:

When Neill was with another film company, he told someone that the great adventure of his life was "saving a girl's life after she had cut her wrist to the bone with a razor. Her moans attracted my attention."

The first newspaper which used the story made the last sentence read: "Her means attracted my attention."

It has been said that Charlie Chaplin has no greater ambition in life than to see what would happen to a plate of eggs if he should throw them into an electric fan.

We will not mention the fact that K. E. S. E. picked out the Chapin and Gore building in Chicago for its new headquarters, in spite of the fact that it is a logical combination.

Do we need to say that Chapin and Gore refer to well known brands of licker?

A film showing the process of manufacturing a bath tub was shown at the Chamber of Commerce in Columbus, Ohio. We could suggest a darn interesting sequel—if we wanted to—but Mabel and Annette are engaged by other companies.

ANOTHER TRAGEDY OF ART

Note in Philadelphia Enquirer building permits:

John M. Darcey, convert moving picture theater at the southwest corner of Fifty-third street and Lansdowne avenue into garage for Charles Segall; cost $300.

ANOTHER CASE OF GOOD JUDGMENT

In spite of the high cost of living people still have a good idea of what real values are. Witness the trading of New York for Chicago by K. E. S. E.

And George Kleine says the move wasn't made because Chicago is farther from Germany's ocean either.

There are many "cases of good judgment" found in Chicago. This is just one more, that's all, and it's to the credit of K. E. S. E.

TRY THIS ON YOUR PRONOUNCER

Many film men have great sport pronouncing the name of Florence La Badie, the Thanhouser star. Miss La Badie pronounces it Lah-Bah-dee. It's French and there is no accent on any syllable.

Exhibitors Like Children's Shows

THEATER MEN MORE PROGRESSIVE THAN PUBLIC, SAY CLUBWOMEN

By Genevieve Harris

THAT the question of special film shows for children is one affecting vitally the relationship of the exhibitor to his community is a fact clearly demonstrated by the growing attention progressive exhibitors are giving this phase of their business. From the first the exhibitor has considered the children. In many neighborhood houses they form a large proportion of his clientele. The interest the general public took in the question of children and pictures came later, and in some cases took so fanatic a form and so much censorship agitation grew out of the fear that pictures were harmful to children that the exhibitor often feared his youngster patrons were more of a nuisance than an aid. But again he has changed his mind and has discovered in them his best method of reaching the right people in his community.

Children's Matinees No Longer Experimental

A year ago the average exhibitor was skeptical about the value of special matinees for children. They might be worth while, or they might be only an added trouble and expense. Today their exact value has been pretty well established in his mind and they are no longer an experiment.

Mrs. Frederic Michael of Chicago, who is chairman of the Better Films committee of the Illinois Congress of Mothers, has been in close touch with the growing movement during the past year, not only in the Illinois territory but throughout the east and west. Her statements of the attitude of exhibitors and general public toward children's programs is interesting and surprising. Under her management this committee at the close of 1916 issued in booklet form a list of films judged suitable for children's programs. The announcement that such a list was available to exhibitors was first published in Motography.

"Although I had believed the question of children's pictures a vital one with exhibitors," says Mrs. Michael, "I was astonished by the quick response to the announcement. I was literally overwhelmed by inquiries, not only from Illinois theater managers but from those in the east and the west. They asked for the booklet and they asked for further information.

" 'How shall we establish children's matinees?' they asked. In fact, the exhibitors seemed more eager to try the plan than the club women were to aid them. The exhibitors saw in the idea a way to be a leader in the community. Of course the work of the Better Films committee was intended to be chiefly with the club women, mothers' clubs and parent-teachers' associations. But in many cases I am advising the exhibitors directly.

"My advice always is that the exhibitor get in touch with whatever women's club or educational association his city has, to interest its members in the project. For after all the children's guardians are, or should be, responsible for what the children see."

Clubwomen Run Performance

Mrs. Michael, at the time of this interview, was herself managing a children's matinee performance at the President Theater, one of the Asher houses in Chicago. That the affair was a success was indicated by crowd being "held out" early in the afternoon, and by the frequent bursts of applause from the house. The theater in this case had been rented for a benefit performance under the auspices of the Illinois Congress of Mothers and the Parent-Teachers' Association. Also Mrs. Michael wished to prove the attractiveness of children's matinees, both from the box-office and educational standpoint.

"We have the co-operation of the four schools in the vicinity for this program. We had our lithographs posed in each school and we are offering a silk flag as a prize for the school having the largest attendance at the matinee. In order to check up this attendance, and further to advertise the picture, we sent out cards of a different color for each school. These the children were asked to bring to the theater and we will give the prize to the school of whose cards we have the largest number. In addition to this, the cards serve as a reminder and can be taken home to the parents. The name of the picture, the time of the performance and the admission price are stated on them.

"We are charging ten and fifteen cents admission this afternoon. The entertainment consists of a five-reel fairy story, one reel of 'Motoy' film (animated toys), and a short vaudeville turn.

"I believe we can duplicate this attendance at any theater in the city, which shows that matinees for children can be made profitable. Another thing which shows this fact is that any exhibitor would be interested in the experiment. All the exchanges, too, gladly co-operate. Now, whenever they have a picture suited to the youngsters they invite us to see and give our opinion of it. They seem to have discovered that a picture pleasing to children has an added drawing power."

Exhibitor Makes Statement

That the guardians of the children must stand back of the children's matinee idea was further emphasized by Manager Beaumont of the President Theater. He explained the value of such entertainments to the exhibitor.

"I surely believe in the matinees for children, rightly managed," he said. "They make friends for the theater, and they bring people to the pictures who never came before, and they arouse the interest of the best class in the community. They are also financially profitable.

"But a manager should not try these entertainments without the aid of the parents and teachers. If he simply selects pictures for the children and believes they will come, he is likely to be disappointed. The children will go to another house, or come to another performance. Out of perversity they want to go where the grown folks go. At one time we were managing two theaters in the same neighborhood and in one of them we gave Saturday matinees for children, in the other a regular offering. At first the children responded. But gradually we found that the majority of children went to the latter theater. However, if the interest of the parents is aroused, this condition is changed. They are coming to realize the value of the pictures and to be interested in the programs given for their boys and girls. When the parents learn that the local theater manager is willing to cater to the best interests of the children, they have a most friendly attitude toward the neighborhood house, which is worth much to the exhibitor."

For the exhibitor, even in the smallest town, who wishes to interest the community directly in his house and who would like to have the "reform" element with him instead of against him, children's matinees, regular or occasional, offer a real opportunity. The number of films suitable for such showing is so large that there need be no difficulty in getting material.

The exhibitor should first obtain the co-operation of the schools and women's clubs, who will advertise the attraction and chaperon the youngsters. The matinee also offer an opportunity to introduce local talent, such as a story teller, or child musician or dancer. This, too, may be worked out in co-operation with the schools.

The manager who does not wish to make these programs a regular event and wishes to show them only occasionally can usually find some offering among his regular bookings which will adapt itself well for a children's matinee. Almost every feature program has some star whose plays appeal especially to children. Without added expense, therefore, the manager can make the appearance of this favorite an occasion for a children's matinee.

New Norma Talmadge Feature

Norma Talmadge's second Selznick-Pictures offering "The Law of Compensation," has been released. In this production Miss Talmadge returns to America from her tragic journey through Russia, England and France in her recent success, "Panthea," and is the central figure in a gripping drama of modern social conditions in this country.

"The Law of Compensation" is divided into three intensely interesting phases of the life of an American woman. In the first Miss Talmadge is seen as a happy young girl, first in a boarding school, and then as the only child of a wealthy and devoted father. Her mother she cannot remember. The next phase is the young married woman, in which Miss Talmadge portrays a distinct development of character as a young wife and mother, to whom comes the frequently encountered spirit of restlessness which often brings domestic tragedies to women who feel that their outlook upon life is too cramped.

Then comes the third, and most powerful episode. This is introduced in the form of a story told to the young woman by her father, who fears she is about to take a foolish step. He tells her the story of her mother, and in this Miss Talmadge plays the part of the mature woman, whose unhappy history she was in grave danger of repeating in her own life. Thus the popular young star is given the opportunity of depicting carefree youth, the romance of young womanhood, and the tragedy of an unfortunate, older woman.

Film Aids Recruiting

Secretary of War Newton D. Baker has notified the Greater Vitagraph that he has instructed the Adjutant General of the United States army to station a recruiting officer at every theater during the run of "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," in an effort to increase enlistments in the army.

Issues Book for Exhibitors

A unique and helpful book is being issued by The Rex Beach Pictures Company, in connection with bookings for "The Barrier." The book will contain 36 pages of helpful hints to the exhibitor. It will show samples of long and short advance notices and a number of special stories, poster and lobby displays, slides and samples of "pulling" advertisements that may be adapted to local use.

A department of especial interest is one devoted to suggestions on "How to Increase Attendance." Among these are a number of store window decorations and outdoor displays that are bound to attract attention and increase business. Attractive lobby magnets are outlined as well as ways and means to tap out of town tributaries, prepared by W. G. Beecroft, director of publicity, who for many years, has made a careful study of neglected opportunities for increased box office receipts in motion picture houses. Those shown in this brochure never before have been published.

The book will be off press, in a few days and may be had, without charge, upon application to The Rex Beach Pictures Company, No. 440 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

Kleine Offers New Comedies

What are perhaps the most expensive two-reel comedies ever filmed are to be released through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. They are offered by George Kleine, whose advertising department is on record as stating that these comedies cost as much as the average five-reel feature.

"The Fixer" and "The Politicians" are the titles. The first to be released April 15, the latter May 13.

Harry Watson, Jr., star of "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," is featured in these two-reel comedies and in them has splendid vehicles to demonstrate his original film mannerisms, which has made for him so many admirers.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service is laying stress on the fact that "The Fixer" and "The Politicians" are feature comedies, not fillers, and admonish exhibitors that if they treat them as features they will find in them a splendid box-office attraction.

Business Brisk in West

Andrew J. Cobe, president of the Ultra Pictures Corporation, returned Friday from a trip through the middle west. He reports that business is brisk with promises of immediate improvement. "The most impressive thing to me," he states, "was the interest manifested by the exhibitors in their demand for independent bookings of features and their growing distrust and dislike of programs.

"The exhibitors know that they are bound to get better pictures for their houses if they can judge the individual excellence of the picture than to take program offerings. The independent exchange man can see what he buys and the exhibitor has a far better chance of getting something good for his audience by keeping in touch with the independent exchange.

"Nothing more clearly proves this than the fact that the companies that put out program pictures themselves offer any particularly attractive picture which they may make, on a state right basis."

Norma Talmadge has begun work on her third Selznick-Picture, "Poppy," by Cynthia Stockley.

Changes in Film Cases

Important changes are being considered in the type of film cases by the Bureau of Explosives and the transportation committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has met to discuss the subject with Walter S. Topping, assistant chief inspector of the Bureau of Explosives. It is proposed to eliminate the web and leather straps now in general use on film cases and to substitute therefor an improved mechanical metal fastener or lock. The members of the transportation committee do not believe that this proposed change is practical and are endeavoring to work out a better solution of the problem with the Bureau of Explosives. Such a radical change, if put into effect, would incur an expense upon the distributors and exchanges of many thousands of dollars as the cases now in use would be practically worthless. At the meeting yesterday, plans were discussed in regard to using a combination label tag which is recommended by the Bureau of Explosives.

Consideration was also given to a plan suggested for the expediting of shipping films between New York City and points in New Jersey, with particular reference to Newark, Jersey City and Hoboken. The Hudson-Manhattan Railway Co. have notified the exchanges and exhibitors that they must not send films by messenger through the Hudson tube. Some of the ferries operating between Manhattan and Jersey points also refused to carry messengers with film cases. The transportation committee will endeavor to secure a ruling from the Department of Commerce to comply with the Interstate Commerce Commission regulations, permitting films to be carried on the ferries by messenger as there is no objection now to film cases being carried if contained in any type of vehicle. The distributors and exchanges contend that the ferry companies are discriminating and ask for a more reasonable ruling so that their messengers can go back and forth on the ferries without being interfered with.

Mary Plans Charity Fund

A letter received by Mary Pickford from Mrs. M. Koehler, Oakland, California, containing a check for $40 to be used by "her darling" in her rounds of charity has prompted the queen of the screen to plan a national charity fund minus the usual expenses involving luxurious office furnishings and high-salaried clerks.

Organize Film Artillery

Members of the motion picture industry are organizing with the idea of sending one regiment or more to the front in the event of war. The movement was started by Major O. J. Allenbaugh, general manager of the Film Renovating Company of America, and Robert Carson, who plays the part of Detective Rodman Sears in Metro's serial, "The Great Secret."

Among the first to put their signatures on enlistment blanks were officials and employees of the Metro-Quality studios. William Christy Cabanne, who has just finished directing "The Great Secret," said when he signed that he would be glad to serve the Government in any capacity.

Mr. Cabanne is an Annapolis man and has had considerable experience. In the event of war he will probably be recalled to the colors.

Among others at the Quality studios who signed the blanks were Robert J. Huntington, business manager for Mr. Cabanne; Will H. Stephens, technical director; Jack Siegel, of the Quality office force, who expects to be a bugler; Jack Prescott, actor; W. O. Kennard, property man; Charles Fang, Chinese actor; Robert Anderson, actor; Robert W. Farrell, actor; Stephen Seymour, Eugene A. Thurston, assistant director, and Frederick Herzog, actor.

President Smith Recovering

President Albert E. Smith of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., who was taken ill at Santa Barbara, California, while on a trip that he designated as a vacation, is reported to be out of danger. He expects to dispense with the services of physicians and nurses within a few days and continue his journey to the Hollywood Vitagraph studios, where he will attempt to speed up production. It is expected that Vitagraph will have important announcements to make regarding the output of the Hollywood studios very shortly.

Rally Industry to Country's Call

ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE ADVERTISERS TO RAISE FUNDS

A GREAT patriotic movement has been launched under the auspices of the Association of Motion Picture Advertisers for the purpose of raising funds among the producers, distributors, exhibitors and players—in the entire motion picture industry—with the intention of assisting the United States Government in this great national crisis. The vast extent of the American domain renders the problem of recruiting for the United States Army and Navy a most difficult one at best. With the insidious influences of the so-called pacifists to combat, the project becomes herculean in its proportions.

Advertisers Kindle Patriotism

Recognizing this fact and believing that it is the duty and privilege of every member of the motion picture industry to do his bit in this hour of great peril and trial, the motion picture advertisers have devoted many hours of ceaseless toil to the preparation of a vast advertising and publicity propaganda for the express purpose of kindling patriotic fervor to the highest possible point.

A tremendous amount of preliminary work has already been done and some of the most celebrated artists in the country have contributed their services gratis in the designing and preparation of recruiting posters and placards. The committee is seriously handicapped in the prosecution of this great patriotic movement, however, by a lack of funds. Several trade journals have donated free space to the running of an advertisement appealing to every corporation and individual, however remotely connected with the motion picture industry, to contribute at least something directly to this great cause.

This is the first time in its history that this tremendous industry of ours has been called upon to show its real mettle in rallying to the assistance of the Government. It is both an obligation and a glorious opportunity for showing what we are made of by contributing our share to this great cause.

Because of its nation wide scope, reaching as it does into the most remote hamlet in the country, the motion picture industry possesses an unsurpassed power for moulding public opinion, kindling patriotic zeal and touching to the latent fires of loyal devotion the electric spark of inspiration. There is no doubt that the American people are loyal to their Government, but many have not yet been aroused to action. It is for the purpose of inspiring these people by a gigantic wave of patriotic enthusiasm to enlist their services in behalf of the Government.

Films Powerful Aid to Government

Many individuals and societies are doing their utmost to further the cause of recruiting, but no individual and no society can reach every remote corner of this vast country. The motion picture industry, on the other hand, is the one far-reaching institution which can do this great work to the utmost advantage of the Government. As an individual you are going to need protection, whether at home or abroad—this great advertising and publicity campaign is designed to raise an Army and a Navy that will protect our homes from desecration at the hands of an enemy.

Remember that the motion picture industry is on trial in this crisis, just as every industry and every individual is on trial.

The iron, steel, copper and coal industries are all being called upon to develop their own resources to the last limit in the service of the country, just as every other industry in the country is doing everything in its power to provide munitions, and supplies of every description. The motion picture industry cannot provide materials of that sort, but it can render the greatest service of all by assisting in enlisting men to utilize these stores. The great cry at this time is for men! The picture industry can do more than any other agency to assist the Government in recruiting—provided you will contribute your share.

Whatever you can give will be more than appreciated. Make your checks payable to B. P. Schulberg, chairman of the finance committee, 485 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Alabama Theater Under Way

MONTGOMERY'S newest theater is underway, the contractors having begun work on the foundation. The theater, when completed, is promised to be one of the finest in Alabama or the entire South, being rivaled only by theaters in Houston, Texas. It will be known as the Empire, owned by the Empire Theater Company, of which Hoxie Farley is the manager.

The new theater will represent an expenditure of $50,000 when the curtain is drawn and the first picture projected for the public on June 1. Manager Farley says the first attraction will be the most popular woman star of the shadow stage.

WORK BY LOCAL MEN

The drawings for the new Empire were made by Architect Ausfeld, and all the work, as fast as possible, is being done by Montgomery people.

The spacious lobby will be finished in marble and decorative plaster, with an art-work ticket office in the center at the main entrance, in the rear of the lobby. A handsome marquise will extend entirely across the sidewalk. The tiling promises to test the artistic sense of the decorators.

TO SEAT 900 PERSONS

The main auditorium, the entire seating capacity of 900 persons being confined to one floor, will be finished in an artistic and attractive manner, the ceilings and side walls being of decorative designs. The seats will be wide apart and arranged for comfort, there being four roomy aisles at spaced distances. The ventilating system will be one of the principal features of the construction of the entire building.

The orchestra will be an enlarged one, under the direction of Frank Woodruff, the favorite violinist and orchestra leader of the old Empire Theater. The screen will be of the Minusa type, and as modern as can be made. The projecting room and offices together with filing room and other conveniences, will be located on an upper floor, but there will be no provisions made for seating the public other than on the first floor of the main auditorium.

Rest rooms for women will be luxuriously fitted up on one side of the main lobby, while similar provisions for the men will occupy the opposite side.

$125,000 House in Fresno

A $125,000 picture theater will be constructed in Fresno, California, by the Einstein Investment Company, according to an announcement recently made by Berton Einstein and Levy Bros. The plans are now being drawn and the contract bids will soon be in.

The theater will be leased by James Beatty and Theodore Keech, well-known theater men in California, who conduct the Liberty theater at San Jose. The seating capacity of the new theater will be two thousand, which will make it one of the largest houses outside of San Francisco and Los Angeles. There will be no stores in the building.

One of the innovations of the house will be a ladies' rest room, where there will be a nursery. Mothers can check their children with trained nurses and enjoy the performances unhampered. A pipe organ, equipped with all the latest attachments, will be installed and an artist will be brought to Fresno to preside at the keys.

The theater structure will be of steel frame and reinforced concrete walls and fire-proof throughout. It will have a frontage of seventy-five feet and a depth of one hundred and fifty feet.

This splendid form of program is used by the Alfred Hamburger theaters in Chicago. It is not a folder but one card, the front and back of which is shown here.

The illustration printed herewith shows the front and back sides of a card on which is printed the program of a week in March at the Grand Oak Theater in Chicago, which is one of the Alfred Hamburger houses. Similar programs are used in all of the Hamburger theaters. The program is about the size of a postal card. The picture of Alice Joyce and the decorative portion are printed in two colors. The Hamburger trademark appears in the upper corner of the program. The pictures of stars are chosen from among those in the films of the week's program and are used successively in different theaters of the Hamburger circuit as the feature goes the rounds. Several other decorative designs are used also, these being furnished by the printer who makes the programs. Motography has reproduced other program folders in the past which are supplied by the same printing firm to various theaters. The program was made by the Cahill-Igoe Company of Chicago.

Adventures of Prominent Chicago Man

By Ralph T. Kettering

Politics, pictures and penny arcades have played a great part in the business romance of another of Chicago's most notable men of the theatrical colony.

Politics came first in the life story of Peter J. Schaefer, for at the age of 21 he was elected a member of the State Board of Equalization. Being a resident of the old fourth ward of Chicago he became a power in politics, graduating from the cigar business which had been his means of livelihood for two years.

Peter J. Schaefer, prominent theater man of Chicago.

Printer's ink has also played an important part in his story for his first job was breaking type in a type foundry in Fifth avenue where he earned the large sum of $0.91 for one week's work. Again cold type proved a link in his life chain when the morning paper printed a full page story two years ago explaining that he had run the $0.91 into a million dollars in such a short time. Proving that advertising pays and that printer's ink is worth while, the day after the story was printed, burglars robbed his flat taking over $10,000 worth of valuables. They evidently read the papers.

From the same story he received 300 letters asking him to adopt children and over 500 letters asking for donations to charities and to borrow money.

Mr. Schaefer's entrance into the amusement business is an interesting one. William Selig and Peter J. Schaefer used to eat twenty-five cent table d'hote dinners in a basement restaurant at State and Van Buren streets in the old days. Schaefer by this time had entered the penny arcade business and was leaning in the direction of things theatrical. Vaudeville appealed to him greatly.

"Stay out of vaudeville business," said Selig to Schaefer, and no sooner had this advice been given than Schaefer made up his mind that he would enter the business. He purchased the Imperial Theater at State and Van Buren streets, which became the first ten cent vaudeville theater in Chicago. This was in 1901. It was a big success.

Selig has since become the president of the Selig Polyscope Company. In 1905 Peter J. Schaefer became interested in the White City and built there the figure eight which made a small sized fortune for him in one season. He began building riding devices in the various amusement parks of America.

To prove that he is still a powerful figure in politics, let it be said that a committee of leading citizens have just asked him to run for mayor of Chicago at the next election. He is still very optimistic regarding the amusement business. In forming a partnership with Aaron J. Jones and Adolph Linick, Mr. Schaefer has become a member of the biggest and strongest theatrical firm in the city of Chicago and from the very beginning this firm has been a tremendous financial success until at the present time Mr. Schaefer alone counts his fortune at over a million dollars. The first house built by Jones, Linick & Schaefer seated but 300. The new one they are contemplating on the North Side now, will seat 3,000 and Mr. Schaefer predicts that the next theaters to be erected in Chicago will seat in the neighborhood of 5,000. He also believes that the spoken drama and vaudeville is coming back strong and that while high class pictures will remain forever, that a combination of pictures and vaudeville will become a popular form of entertainment.

Mr. Schaefer is married and his wife is considered one of the most fashionable ladies of the South Shore where she occupies a prominent position in the inner circle of Chicago's exclusive society. And in spite of Mr. Schaefer's enormous fortune and great power in the theatrical world, he has never forgotten that he was once a poor boy. He has given his three brothers a wonderful start in life and has provided them with means upon which they may build fortunes as great as his. And his attitude toward his employees is not that of a superior being but as a fellow man.

Spends $15,000 on Texas Theater

More than $15,000 is being spent in renovations and additions to the equipment of the Liberty theater of Houston, Texas, which has just been placed under the management of Jesse Jacobs, manager of the Key. In the future Mr. Jacobs will be joint manager of the two photoplay houses.

A photoplayer, valued at $15,000, is being installed as well as a typhoon cooling system at a cost of $5,000, which will render it one of the coolest houses in the city.

Mr. Jacobs is very sanguine of the motion picture business in Houston and speaks in loudest praise of his opening bill at the Liberty under the new management. He says that he will exert every effort to make the Key and the Liberty the leading theaters at Houston. Mr. Jacobs has managed several other theaters in New York City, Norfolk, Virginia, Jacksonville. Florida, and other cities.

Rest for Patrons Eyes

A scientific lighting arrangement devised to rest the eyes of the audience has been introduced by Thomas D. Soriero of the Park Theater, Boston, Massachusetts. The leading optical authorities were called in to discuss a way to ease the eyes of the patrons while watching the pictures. Experiments were made and the problem was finally solved by two green lights placed on either side of the screen which are lighted while the picture is running, and proves a wonderful rest to the eyes, as their rays have the effect of absorbing injurious light movements coming from the screen.

It is certainly worthy of the exhibitors' attention to try this scheme. However a visit to an optician should be made before exhibitors attempt to experiment.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

MINNEAPOLIS exhibitors have charged that many of the schools and churches where films are shown are regular fire traps. The building inspector says this is untrue, but it has brought the subject to the front again. The public should know whether such auditoriums are properly equipped and maintained.

Al Jolson and Lew Dockstadter will probably be interested to know that the Ebony Film Corporation has opened offices in Milwaukee.

Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, theater men recently gave up an evening for the benefit of Battery C of that city which had just returned from service in the late lamented Mexican war.

The Pennsylvania Railroad is going directly to the public via the screen with its safety first campaign. On the Pittsburgh branch a theater has been engaged in each town where free matinee performances are given.

Commencing April 8 the Strand Theater, New York City, will show exclusively photo-dramatic adaptations of the famous O. Henry stories, the first picture of the series being "The Third Ingredient."

The New Jersey Prison Board has installed motion picture outfits in the Penitentiary and House of Correction. To maintain the idea of punishment they ought to see that no exhibition is given without illustrated songs.

The latest unofficial count on the number of applicants for places on the new film censorship board of Kansas resembles a census report. About fifty or sixty, including many clubwomen, have their applications in already.

Owners of three theaters in Rochester, N. Y., have secured an injunction restraining the Moving Picture Operators' Union from interfering with the operation of their theaters. Picketing seems to have been the overt act in question.

And the Louisville, Kentucky, Board of Censorship is now putting on a free exhibition of children's pictures every Saturday morning at one of the local theaters, at a 10c saving to enterprising parents—with the exhibitor apparently overlooked again.

Films showing the varied activities of the Minneapolis schools were recently shown to about three hundred business men. The moving pictures were resorted to in an endeavor to familiarize the taxpayers with the city's educational system.

There are now fifty-seven candidates for places on the motion picture censor board, whose applications will be considered by Governor Capper at Topeka, Kansas. The candidates are coming to Topeka in flocks, and letters and telegrams of indorsements come in bunches, while telephone calls take up a great deal of Governor Capper's time. There are some indications that film companies are taking too great an interest in the personnel of the new board. The new board will be named in a few days, and work will begin at Kansas City, Kansas. About one-half of the candidates come from Kansas City, and the majority are women.

Children's films are being shown by a Johnstown, Pennsylvania, church which charges an admission fee of five cents. "Suitable subjects" of the hand picked variety are announced.

O. P. Hall, lately connected with Fox and Paramount, has gone to Macon, Georgia, to assume active control of the management of the Palace, Princess and Macon. These three houses are owned by the Empire Amusement Company.

The Strand Theater, West Branch, Michigan, will open April 17, under the management of Ange Lorenzo. The house has a seating capacity of two hundred and is equipped throughout in an up-to-date manner. A Motiograph machine is to be used.

At the Old Mill Theater in Dallas, Texas, the Rev. L. W. Heaton will preach a short sermon each Sunday afternoon at 4:00. Dr. Heaton has been vigorous in his support of Sunday pictures and evidently believes in the value of this opportunity to reach the public.

A special film service has been established by the Denver post office. To take care of the parcel post film shipments an automobile has been purchased and it is said that distribution to local houses will be secured even more quickly than when messengers were employed by the exchanges.

In the little town of Humble, Texas, the Retail Merchants' Association have arranged with the Dixie Theater to give a free show under the auspices of the association every Thursday. Every effort will be made to arrange programs equal to those seen in the metropolitan houses.

Last week the Strand Theater, New York City, featured George Beban in "The Bond Between," some pictures of the Pendleton (Oregon) Round-Up, Victor Moore in his latest comedy entitled "His Military Figure," and an educational study showing the evolution of agricultural machinery.

Monroe, Michigan, is to have a new picture theater, costing in the neighborhood of $55,000. The theater will be 45x150 feet, two stories in height, of brick and steel construction, and will have a seating capacity of 1,000 people. The new house will be operated by J. R. Denniston, proprietor of the Family Theater in that city.

Alfred Hamburger, proprietor of a dozen or more Chicago motion picture theaters, was one of the first exhibitors to sign for the K. E. S. E. yearly service since that program put into effect the one feature a week policy. Manager Jenner of the Chicago offices obtained the contracts and the service includes all features and the "Musty Suffer" comedies and takes in all of the outlying theaters. Mr. Hamburger operates among other theaters, the 20th Century, Apollo, Grand Oak, Willard, Gaiety, Ziegfeld, Playhouse, Pine Grove and Albany Park.

A film history of Cincinnati is proposed by a well known advertising man. Pictorial records of events of interest, of prominent citizens, and of places that will be remembered by the present generation and which should be known by those who are now little Cincinnatians, he feels should be preserved by the municipality in the "Cincinnati Film History."

Twilight Sleep pictures were the subject of a strenuous protest from the Orleans Parish Medical Society of New Orleans. It was claimed that the pictures give the public the idea this is the latest scientific procedure and that such is not the case. The doctors said it could only be a source of gross misinformation and that it should be consigned to the outer darkness.

Thompson & Kizziar are building a $10,000 modern motion picture theater at Hobart, Okla., to replace the theater burned recently. The theater will have an ornamental brick front, floor slope to be excavated for the street level. A fully equipped stage, gallery, indirect lighting system and booth equipped for two machines. The theater will be opened about May 1st.

The number of moving picture theaters in the United States today is less than a year ago but the value of the property is much greater. Only an other tangible evidence of the worth-while growth of the industry—the passing of the cheap fly-by-night show of the early days which has been displayed by the house which represents substantial, well considered investment.

The management of the Strand Theater, New York City, has volunteered its services to the Navy Department for its recruiting campaign. Space in the program will be donated, and navy recruiting pictures will be flashed on the screen. This is the first time that advertising matter of any description has been shown at the theater in the three years of its existence.

J. D. Fulrath, whose opera house at Savannah, Georgia, was destroyed by fire on January 18, has received the plans for his new theater which will soon be under process of erection. The new building will be four stories high, with an eight-foot basement. On the main floor there will be rooms for offices on either side of the entrance. There will also be office rooms on the second and third floors.

The Rialto Theater, New York City, will celebrate its first anniversary during the week beginning April 22. Douglas Fairbanks' new picture, "In Again, Out Again," will be the feature of the bill, with Fatty Arbuckle in a new comedy as an added attraction. New scenery by Joseph Urban is being installed and Mr. Rothapfel says he will strive to present the most imposing program any motion picture house has ever offered.

One of the important business changes in Film circles in Kansas City last week, was the formation of the Standard Film Corporation with R. C. Cropper as president and general manager. P. L. Ryan was selected as sales and advertising manager, Martie Williams as manager of Des Moines branch, J. Erwin Dodson as manager of the St. Louis branch and W. B. Emrich special representative. They will handle the Art Dramas pictures and other high class productions and have the rights in Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas. Headquarters will be maintained at 1305 Walnut street, Kansas City, Mo. In addition to the above force, nine traveling representatives, who are thorough film men, will travel in the four states named.

Mrs. Lottie Taylor Henderson, owner of the Apollo Theater at Princeton, Illinois, has cancelled the lease under which the house was being operated, has taken possession of the place herself and is proceeding to operate it personally. It seems that various differences arose between owner and lessee and Mrs. Henderson decided that her best interests required her to run the theater herself.

Fred Hilton, well-known Mansfield, Ohio, theatrical man who has been managing the Sun Theater at Portsmouth, has just closed a deal whereby he has sold the Portsmouth playhouse to C. A. Frantz, a former Portsmouth man. Mr. Hilton will remain in charge of the Portsmouth Theater for a short time. Upon his departure from Portsmouth Mr. Hilton expects to return to Mansfield and he says he will endeavor to raise a few "spuds" and other vegetables in his back yard garden in Mansfield next summer.

Ashley Miller's "Plastiques," in which clay figures become animate, after the fashion of film cartoons, were exhibited at the Rialto, New York, last week, and will form part of the program there from time to time hereafter. The work is done with a bas relief background in front of which the little figures act their parts. The plastic quality of the clay permits of most ludicrous expressions and actions the development of which requires infinite patience. It requires five weeks to make a five hundred foot subject. The position of the figures is altered slightly after each exposure to the film, the effect of motion being secured when the entire film is run off at the usual speed. This week's subject at the Rialto shows Benjamin Franklin discovering electricity. Mr. Miller has been making these "Plastiques" for about a year, but this is the first time they have been shown in any of the larger motion picture theaters.

In spite of the Lenten season the large motion picture houses of San Jose, Cal., have projected their films before the usual well-filled houses. A fairy film, especially adapted for the entertainment of children, was shown on the screen at the Liberty Theater March 9 and 10, once each day, through the courtesy of Managers J. H. Beatty and George F. Sharp. Mrs. Albertine Crandall, a San Jose woman, wrote the scenario for the film, had it filmed in two reels at her own expense, made the costumes for the children—75 in all—who appeared in the production and wrote the accompanying music and song numbers incidental to the screening. "Why the Poppies Sleep" is the title of the film and it is a "really truly" fairy story. Miss Pauline Sain, a well-known Pacific Coast actress, whose home is in San Jose, appears in the role of the fairy queen, and the other parts are filled by Santa Clara Valley children. The production was filmed in and about Los Gatos, a foothill suburb of San Jose. It is a step in the widespread movement for films adapted especially for audiences of little folk and as such has received gratifying encouragement from local film fans.

The Danger of Compromising Censorship

WHEN the federal censorship agitation was active, there were some picture men who inclined toward its support. The motive that actuated them was a sincere conviction that one national censor would eliminate a number of state censors; the enemies of the free picture would be decreased; therefore the cause of the free picture would be advanced.

The same view influences some of the film men of a censor-ridden city to look with favor upon a state censorship bill. They imagine that censorship over a whole state will be spread out thinner; and they see incidentally a chance to visit retribution upon the local censors who have become obnoxious to them.

They are willing to try fighting fire with fire, forgetting that the new conflagration will be no more subject to their control than the old; that there is no assurance that it will extinguish the old; and that it is likely to be just as dangerous—or more so.

The only safe policy for film men to adopt toward censorship is "no quarter." There is no logic in dallying with the enemy. And an enemy censorship unquestionably is, of the worst sort. For it not only confiscates property without recompense and without due process of law, but it discourages the initiative of art and introduces doubt and fear to the operations of progress. It not only imposes the will of an arbitrary and egotistical minority upon a passive and non-resistant majority, but it creates and nourishes the arbitrariness and egotism that make its actions a byword to reason. It confers an extraordinary and intoxicating power upon persons of mediocre mentality and small capacity.

The industrial philosopher and the commercial pacifist are prone to idealize censorship. While admitting its stupendous faults, they persist in the theory that a censorship properly operated would be desirable.

There is no such thing as a censorship properly operated. The thing would be possible only to demi-gods, super-men, or a censor board composed of fifty-one per cent of the population of the United States. To a board of fifty million censors, the picture producers and presenters could bow with good grace. To a board of practical size not even the justices of the United States Supreme Court are morally eligible, because they are human and must have opinions that differ from the opinions of other humans.

We speak of "opinions" handed down by the courts; but they are not opinions—they are logical interpretations of definite, stereotyped laws.

There are no laws of censorship, except the laws of obscenity and immorality. Those laws, specific and well defined, need no censors to interpret them; the people have a ready defense against their violation in the common police power.

The function of censorship is not to declare illegal those things which, obviously and beyond peradventure of a doubt, transgress the law. The function of censorship is to condemn those things which are legal, and which therefore the law could not reach.

The interpretation of the statutory law requires only a knowledge of definite provisions written in books; yet we allow only men of exceptional qualifications and experience to attempt the task. The interpretation of the moral law, the law of propriety, is a task infinitely more difficult. It is based on no statutes nor regulations. Properly to execute its duties requires the wisdom of more than a Solomon—a degree of philosophy and human understanding that is not given to many mortals.

This task we delegate to a handful of persons of both sexes whose experience and mental training have, as likely as not, nothing to do with the subject. Their qualification is that they ostensibly represent the public, being of it. Nobody can fill that order. The public is a composite figure of infinite complexity, and no unit carries more than an infinitesimal proportion of its characteristics.

There is enough logic in the case against censorship, and particularly against the censors themselves, to make a serial out of our editorial pages. It is not our intention to write a brief (paradoxical term!) upon the subject. We wish merely to sound an alarm, if possible, in the ears of those sincere but misguided picture men who think a reasonable censorship is possible and attainable.

The only hope for the freedom of the picture is uncompromising opposition to all censors and censorships, backed up by an honest and consistent effort to make and show only pictures that keep not only within the law, but within the reasonable bounds of propriety. Of that condition the producer and the exhibitor are as good judges as the censor—and probably better.

Why Don't You Join?

THE exhibitor directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry are making a particularly aggressive and strenuous appeal for more members and more money. When we mention money we expect our readers will shy off and immediately put up their guards. That, at least, is the common attitude of the man who is asked to join a trade association.

It is a peculiar and somewhat discouraging fact that three things really necessary in the scheme of workaday life, and which every interested person will readily admit are necessary, are the hardest to sell. Those three things are life insurance, advertising and trade association membership.

And the most difficult of these is association membership—the hardest to sell, the most remunerative to its buyers, the least rewardful to its sellers—who spend their time and enthusiasm in its cause and get nothing.

It is a curious commentary on human nature that it spends its money freely upon things that are sold at a profit for frankly selfish and commercial reasons, and turns away from insignificant investments that return immediate benefits to the buyer and to no one else.

Apathy and indifference to the interrelations of human progress can wreck a nation or an industry. A motion picture theater owner, or ten thousand of them existing as separate units, can be legislated or taxed or censored absolutely out of business without one iota of a chance. Ten thousand exhibitors in a compact organization cannot be put out of business or even seriously affected by any probable combination of forces.

No legitimate industry has so many violently aggressive enemies as the picture industry. No business man standing alone is more helpless and feeble than the motion picture theater man. No trade organization has a stronger or more reasonable appeal for membership than the exhibitors' association. The very men who are not members have the greatest need for the co-operation of their fellows.

The association as it exists today is only a nucleus. It is up to the non-members to make it what they will—a failure or the strongest trade organization known to industry. The fact that present non-members may not approve its conduct has no significance whatever. It is up to them to continue it or change it or do what they will with it—it does not matter, so long as they do something. If they do not like its officers, they can elect new ones. If they do not like its by-laws, they can amend them. It seems to escape the minds of many that the members, not the officers, run an association.

The exhibitors' association needs members, and every theater man of any intelligence knows the exhibitors need an association. What is holding them apart is known only to the evil genius of indifference, apathy and sloth.

Big Vitagraph Advertising Campaign

PUBLICITY DEPARTMENT REORGANIZED TO HANDLE UNDERTAKING

WITH the appointment of Paul N. Lazarus and N. S. Stronge, who will respectively be in charge of the advertising and publicity divisions of Vitagraph-V-L-S-E, it became known that Vitagraph has had in process of development for some time past, one of the most comprehensive and intensive advertising and publicity campaigns inaugurated in any line of business.

This is now at the point of launching. This campaign comprehends not alone the use of extensive advertising space in newspapers and billboards in the interest of Vitagraph exhibitors throughout the country, but involves also a complete system of service in assisting exhibitors in the presentation and exploitation of Vitagraph subjects.

It is said that the plans for this effort have been developed along the most thorough and scientific lines, the whole undertaking having been tested from every angle, and its effectiveness proved beyond the shadow of a doubt before any phase of it was finally accepted as part of the general undertaking.

Powerful Publicity Staffs

With the assurance that their plans, despite their newness to the picture industry, are sound, commercially, and from the standpoint of the best merchandising experience and knowledge, Vitagraph-V-L-S-E then began the organization of a staff of publicity, advertising and merchandising experts who would insure the most efficient execution of these plans.

This staff, in its work, will be closely allied with Carney & Kerr, Inc., advertising agents who have specialized in the study of the needs of motion picture exhibitors and of the methods which would best satisfy those needs.

The staff itself, is constituted as follows:

E. Lanning Masters, advertising and publicity director; Paul N. Lazarus, manager advertising division; Nat S. Stronge, manager general publicity division; Gordon Laurence, editor, Vitagraph Exhibitor; Fred Schaefer, manager newspaper and magazine division; Frederick James Smith and Miss Adele W. Fletcher, special writers in the publicity and advertising department.

Messrs. Stronge and Smith are new additions to the Vitagraph forces. The former won recognition among exhibitors and in film circles generally, because of his connection with MOTOGRAPHY for a number of months. In January, 1917, Mr. Stronge became affiliated with Harry A. Sherman, as manager of the Chicago office of Sherman-Elliott.

Previous to his entry into the film industry, Mr. Stronge occupied important editorial positions on several foremost newspapers in New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia and was the general manager of the two English papers in Havana.

He has also had a well-rounded training in syndicate work, having organized and operated, for a long time, one of the most successful newspaper syndicates in the country.

He comes to the Vitagraph Company not only with a keen appreciation of the kind of publicity cooperation which makes for the best interest of exhibitors, but with a thorough knowledge of the practical selling side of the business.

With the Vitagraph Company, he will have direct supervision, as assistant to Mr. Masters, of all the forms of publicity, including the exhibitors' press sheets and other similar aids which the Vitagraph Company gets out.

Mr. Smith is well known in New York and in moving picture circles generally, by reason of his association with the Motion Picture Mail, his editorial contribution to which created a great deal of comment. As assistant editor of that publication, he made an exhaustive investigation of the type of moving picture publicity which meets with heartiest response from the public, and therefore, is of most value both to producer and exhibitor. In his new position, he will be given liberal opportunity to apply the knowledge thus gained.

Mr. Schaefer, who has been with Vitagraph for some time past, will continue as the studio representative of the Publicity Department, and in addition, be directly responsible for the special feature articles for newspapers and magazines.

Miss Fletcher, the other publicity writer of the organization, will assist Mr. Schaefer in this work, especially as it applies to the principal women stars of the company.

Mr. Lazarus, who is now made manager of the Advertising Division, has come very quickly to the front in moving picture circles, by reason of his unique handling of posters and other forms of display advertising, which, for several months past, have been executed by him.

He has had a most comprehensive training in the general advertising field, both with advertising agencies and with publications, among his latter affiliations being with Cosmopolitan, Good Housekeeping and the other Hearst periodicals, in the position of promotion manager.

Mr. Laurence, who recently was promoted from the Chicago office to the advertising department of the home office, is extremely well qualified to direct the editorial policy of Vitagraph-V-L-S-E's new house organ which is to be known as The Vitagraph Exhibitor, by reason of his past association with exhibitors, particularly in the development of their interests through individual advertising service.

New Exhibitors' Organ

The new house organ, which is described as "A service magazine to exhibitors," will appear semimonthly beginning with April 1st. It is a four-page newspaper brimming over with helpful suggestions and information having to do with the presentation of motion pictures and the operation of motion picture theaters. The publication will be sent to every exhibitor in the United States and Canada.

Another phase of the advertising service to exhibitors which Vitagraph has recently started, is the Exhibitor's Advertising and Publicity Plan Book, on each of the company's releases. This plan book provides the exhibitor with complete information regarding all advertising and publicity available on each Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature.

Reproductions of the posters, lobby display, with illustrations of the cuts and advertising electros, all are shown in this book. In addition there are three pages of press material, program suggestions, ideas for "stunts" and musical cue suggestions.

This manual makes it possible for an exhibitor not operating in an exchange center, to plan all of his advertising and publicity well in advance of the actual receipt of that advertising, and order such advertising intelligently. It will also be mailed to exhibitors throughout the country. This book is likewise handled by Mr. Laurence, who will be responsible in the future for most of the other forms of direct advertising issued by this company.

It is said that the numerous other activities planned to tie up the national advertising of the Vitagraph Company with the advertising efforts of the individual exhibitor, will be announced at the time that this campaign becomes actually operative, which is now scheduled early in August, the preliminary try-out in several large centers having only recently been started, and having considerable time yet to run.

This test campaign is for the purpose of demonstrating the thoroughness and correctness of the general plan. As soon as it is completed, the details of the plan for the entire country will be announced.

Change in Chicago Censorship

For some time Chicago theaters have been obliged to prevent children from attending the showing of certain films. These pictures from which children were barred were passed by the local board of censorship on what was known as a "pink slip."

It is very possible that hereafter there will be no such censorship division. Judge Joseph B. David of the superior court has handed down a decision holding that pictures that are improper for minors are also unfit for adults to see.

Judge David also held that the chief of police had no discretion in issuing pink permits.

The decision was handed down in the petition of the Epoch Producing Company for a writ of mandamus to compel the city to issue an unlimited permit for the "Birth of a Nation" film, which recently returned to Chicago. He granted the petition.

Judge David rendered his decision following vigorous arguments of Attorneys Charles J. Trainor and Frederick Reeve, representing the film interests.

"I believe the ordinance would require the chief of police to be an extremely clever psychologist," he said, "and this is not required of him. Unquestionably Chief Schuettler is the best police officer in the country, but he knows as much about film censorship as I do about the anatomy of a whale."

Town Itches for Theater

The following letter to MOTOGRAPHY from the Georgia and Southern Utilities Company of Eastman, Georgia, would seem to indicate a good place for a new, live exhibitor.

Three thousand inhabitants and no picture house—that is what exists in this little thrifty Southern city, which is so far from a film show that the natives often spend two or three dollars railroad fare to see pictures in the nearest city—Macon.

We are located on the Southern and also the Central railroad lines—have a good bunch of live merchants, and there are hundreds of nickels and dimes just itching to be shoved through the window of the ticket seller if it is located in front of a real picture house.

This town can and will support a good theater and if you can get this to the attention of a live one, he will find a very excellent opening here. The town is hungry for some form of entertainment—and is populated mostly by the "middle class," the really and truly kind that support a picture house.

We want you to get a picture show in Eastman, and do it quick. Just get a live wire to make a trip down here and look the town over, and he will thank you for calling it to his attention.—Georgia & Southern Utilities, C. R. Hodson, manager.

GRIFFITH TO PRODUCE IN MAY

Arrived Safely in London—Expected Back May 1—Initial Artcraft Subject to Be Staged In California

A cable from D. W. Griffith received at his New York offices announces his safe arrival in London. It is understood that his activities on the other side will keep him there about a month and that he is expected back in this country by May 1, when he will immediately commence work on his first subject to be released by Artcraft Pictures.

It is also learned that Mr. Griffith will undoubtedly stage his initial Artcraft release in California where his most famous spectacles were produced. Griffith was the first director to make the trip to California in order to stage a photoplay back in the old Biograph days when various film men laughed at the idea, but it did not take long for others to follow suit.

At the headquarters of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, Walter E. Greene, president of the big distributing organization, said: "We expect to see Mr. Griffith back in the United States in a month and are advised that his organization is preparing plans so that he may be able to start work on his first Artcraft picture early in May. At this time we are not at liberty to state just what the nature of this subject will be but we can say that it will be of a magnitude in keeping with his high standard of production."

Hazel Dawn in Selznick Picture

Herbert Brenon has returned from New Orleans, after completing the exterior scenes for his production of Louis Joseph Vance's "The Lone Wolf." In contrast to his last previous production, "The Eternal Sin," "The Lone Wolf" is a modern story of adventure with a romance that is absolutely unique.

The principal roles in this picture will be taken by Hazel Dawn and Bert Lytell. This will be Miss Dawn's first appearance in photoplays for more than a year, and as she is one of the most popular of the younger screen favorites, her return will be good news to a vast army of admirers. In "The Lone Wolf" she will be seen as a young woman, who, while in the pay of the police, pretends to be an accomplice of a coterie of powerful criminals. She is called upon to get evidence against another mysterious crook who has gained for himself the title of "The Lone Wolf" because he always works by himself in his preying upon people of wealth. Love complicates the situation but adds to its fascination. Mr. Lytell plays the part of the Wolf, who, later, develops lamb-like characteristics.

ANOTHER SERIAL WINNER

"The Railroad Raiders," Thrilling New Signal-Mutual Serial Featuring Helen Holmes as a "Pre-Proven Money Getter"

The Mutual calls "The Railroad Raiders," Helen Holmes photonovel in fifteen chapters, a "pre-proven product."

Significant statistical facts relating to Helen Holmes and her value to the theaters are offered from the Mutual's accounting department. The lease records and reports indicate that approximately $2,253,000 was paid to the theaters in admissions to see Helen Holmes in "The Girl and the Game," her first Signal-Mutual screen novel. The records on the bookings now in progress on "The Lass of the Lumberlands," second Holmes photonovel for Mutual, indicate that the theaters are enjoying a nearly equal success with this production.

"Demonstrated box office earning power like that is of very distinct significance to the exhibitor and of important meaning to the picture industry," observes President John R. Freuler of the Mutual. It is with such statistical evidence before us that the Mutual Film Corporation is now making its plans, accepting and rejecting film distribution propositions and charting the corporation's course. We are interested only in proven products, insofar as the photoplay product may be proven.

"I say this now in behalf of the coming Helen Holmes production, 'The Railroad Raiders,' now being made at the Signal studios under the direction of John P. McGowan, the man who has directed all of the big Holmes successes."

"We have done and are doing everything to insure success," said Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the Signal Film Corporation at Los Angeles the other day. "Art no longer has to be left entirely to chance.

"This is the prescription for the big Helen Holmes successes in serials: first, Helen Holmes, herself, the star of the chapter play type of production; second, John P. McGowan, the man who can find a real story and put it in pictures; third, the real story; and fourth, but extremely important, the story itself. We have added a fifth strengthening factor by retaining Mr. Frank Hamilton Spearman, the celebrated novelist, to write the syndicated story of 'The Railroad Raiders.'"

The story of "The Railroad Raiders" is of the very certain and successful type of railroad adventure fiction. Railway warehouses are seen demolished, box cars are tossed into heaps of blazing wreckage, automobiles are smashed with daring and abandon, engines collide, there are gang fights, fist fights, gun fights—all the kinds of fights there are.

The fifteen chapter titles are in the nature of an index to the swift action of the story: "Circumstantial Evidence," "A Double Steal," "Inside Treachery," "The Deal in Silks," "A Woman's Wit," "The Overland Disaster," "The Yellow Peril," "The Millionaire's Special," "The Fight for the Pass," "The Great Tunnel Disaster," "The Mystery of the Counterfeit Tickets," "Total Paralysis," "The Road Wreckers," "The Trap" and "Hearts and Trumps."

The cast chosen to support Miss Holmes is almost identical with that of "The Lass of the Lumberlands," including: William Buhler, Katherine Goodrich, Florence Holmes, John Hemphill, Thomas G. Lingham, Leo D. Maloney, Paul C. Hurst, the able villain; William Brunton, Will Chapman and Charles U. Wells.

According to the Mutual advance bookings and reservations at a period three weeks before release date had set a record for totals at a similar period in the history of recent photonovel productions.

FORUM TO RELEASE EDISON

Exchanges Established to Distribute New Conquest Program. High Class Pictures and Prompt Service Promised.

Within the next thirty days Forum Films, Inc., will have exchanges at all the important distributing points and the regular release of Edison made "Conquest Pictures" will begin. Kenneth Hodkinson, general manager of the Forum Films, says:

"Ever since the first announcement was made in the trade papers, relative to the formulation of Forum Films, Inc., to handle Edison Conquest Pictures in a national way," he says, "we have been receiving a great number of requests and inquiries, particularly from churches, schools, colleges, humane societies, women's clubs and organizations of a similar kind. Every theater exhibiting Edison Conquest Pictures will have a natural following through members of such clubs and leagues. "The class of pictures which we will release will not be of the milk and water type but live and vital stories interesting to the entire family.

"Within the course of thirty days we will have exchanges opened at all important distributing points throughout the country and we will then be in a position to book these films in all cities as well as the smallest communities. Our watch word will be service."

The first program of Forum Films, Inc., will include "The Half Back," Ralph Henry Barbour's story of school life and football; "Captains of Tomorrow," a West Point picture; "The Dinosaur and the Baboon," a new group of animated manikins; "The Sea Horse," a short study of a little known fish; "A Vanishing Race," a scenic taken on the Blackfoot Indian Reservation; and "Puss in Boots," a fairy tale told in silhouette.

Among early productions are Robert Louis Stevenson's "Kidnapped," Cyrus Townsend Brady's "Bob Dashaway, Treasure Hunter"; Anna Sewell's "Black Beauty"; and "Gallagher," by Richard Harding Davis.

In selecting subjects to be produced for Conquest Pictures, Mr. Edison and his associates are choosing dramatic stories of adventure, tales of an inspirational nature, wholesome comedy subjects, studies which may guide the youth in the selection of his vocation, and stories of travel and adventure in foreign lands.

Every program of five reels will contain drama, comedy, scenic, educational and quasi-scientific units. Each program will be locked to guard against the introduction of extraneous subjects of a different standard.

Fancy Swimming in "Kidnapped"

Zeena Keefe and Earle Metcalfe develop into amphibians in "Kidnapped," the fifteenth story of the Mutual series "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters."

The locale of the photodrama is the beach of a summer resort and the two actors do most of their acting in or on the water. Miss Keefe swims with the grace of a seal and is one of the few motion picture actresses who have mastered the Australian crawl, trugeon stroke, overhand, Dutch wiggle, water tread, wigwag and a few other "stunts.' She swims with her head under water two-thirds of the time. Mr. Metcalfe also proves that he is second cousin to a fish in this picture.

"She swims with the grace of a seal and has mastered all the Australian crawls and Dutch wiggles," says the earnest publicity man.

In "Kidnapped" Miss Keefe, as the girl reporter, is told to secure a story on the beaches. She impersonates a dashing widow and sojourns at a fashionable hotel. Earle Metcalfe is a young millionaire who accepts the position as paid escort. Later, being consumed with jealousy because of the attention the widow is receiving, he kidnaps her and places her on a houseboat. But he did not know what a swimmer Miss Keefe was. Many of the best swimming scenes come when the girl makes her escape from the houseboat and then, hearing that her abductor is in peril, returns to rescue him.

Music for Charlie's Antics

How would you like to write music cues for Charlie Chaplin comedies?

How would you like to plan a musical accompaniment for every variety of action of this quick change artist?

What kind of syncopation would you choose to accompany Charlie's famous shuffle?

What class of staccato would best punctuate his pie throwing?

All of which questions lead up to the fact that the Mutual Film Corporation will issue a musical cue sheet with each one of the Chaplin "Specials" similar to those which are made up for the Mutual Star Productions. This work will be done by Joseph O'Sullivan, who is responsible for all the Mutual cue sheets.

F. I. Frayne, manager of the Palace Theater, Schenectady, New York, shows all the first run of pictures and follows the program shown at the Strand, New York City. Mr. Frayne is using on his program, besides the latest feature releases, the "Mutual Tours Around the World," "Reel Life," Mutual's screen magazine, and also the Cub Comedies featuring George Ovey.

Goldwyn Leases New Studio

OTHER INTERESTING THINGS ABOUT BIG PRODUCER

GOLDWYN Pictures Corporation is enlarging its scale of operations so rapidly that its present studios at the Solax plant are inadequate and it has leased the great Universal Film Corporation studio and related plant in Fort Lee. This is one of the finest and most complete structures in the East.

Goldwyn at the present time is working two companies side by side in the Solax studio and by close crowding might operate a third company there, but the Goldwyn scheme calls for the operation of more producing units simultaneously; hence the taking over of the Universal equipment as a result of negotiations with Carl Laemmle and his associates.

Samuel Goldfish, Edgar and Archibald Selwyn and Arthur Hopkins are determined to make good the Goldwyn promise of twelve completed pictures by Stepember 1, which accounts for a more than doubling of the Goldwyn production capacities. In adopting this as the basic idea for its unique sales policy, the company is following that employed by automobile manufacturers, who hold annual exhibitions of new models for dealers and the public long in advance of the retail prices. These annual shows have vastly stimulated auto sales. This policy also permits exhibitors to know in advance exactly what they are buying. Through its lease of the Universal plant, Goldwyn comes into possession of a plant having the second largest stage in the world. The stage proper is 150 feet long by 85 feet in width. Six companies can be worked conveniently at the same time. The studio administration building, which is 130x160 feet in size, of irregular shape and two stories high, was designed by Ernest Flagg, who also designed the Singer building in New York. In the rear of the administration building and studio are the laboratories and film vaults. Facilities are at hand for all of the allied departments of motion picture production, and this plant has the largest carpenter shop equipment and property department east of the Mississippi river. In the main building are sixty-four dressing rooms for principals in addition to huge dressing rooms for supers and extras.

Porter Emerson Browne Signs Goldwyn Contract

Porter Emerson Browne, author, playwright and famous novelist, as well as the creator of the now famous "vampire" type of picture, has signed a three-year contract giving his exclusive screen services to Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. This contract is effective at once, and he will, on April 1, deliver his first manuscript to Goldwyn for production.

None of the Goldwyn players so far announced have been identified with "vampire" roles, but whether any of these first stars will try screen work of this kind or whether Goldwyn has other surprises to offer is not known.

Porter Emerson Browne is one of the best known of the younger American authors, and his dramatic and screen productions have carried to fame several women now among the highest stars of the stage or films. Theda Bara owes her worldwide vogue to the success she scored in her first picture work as the star of "A Fool There Was," Mr. Browne's dramatization of Kipling's "Vampire." Katherine Kaelred and Virginia Pearson both found advancement on the stage as stars in this production, and Robert Hilliard found in the leading male role the greatest part he has had.

Mr. Browne was born in Beverly, Mass., June 22, 1879, being the son of Joseph E. Browne, author of "Edgewood Folks," one of the great successes of Sol Smith Russell, and also a contributor to many journals under the non de plume of "Mose Skinner."

He was educated in the public schools at Beverly and Newton, Mass. After graduating from the Newton High School, he began a career on a newspaper, finally devoting all of his time to writing fiction. While thus engaged, he met Robert Hilliard, for whom he wrote "A Fool There Was." Following this, he wrote "The Spendthrift," in which Edmund Breese appeared.

The depth and beauty of Jane Cowl's features have made her a favorite on the stage in highly dramatic roles. She will continue her charm via Goldwyn photoplays.

Mae Marsh is said to possess the most pathetic face in the world — when she wishes. She appears in overalls in her second Goldwyn play.

Below is the piquant Madge Kennedy, the well-known comedienne, who is soon to begin comediennning for Goldwyn.

Mae Marsh in Boy's Garb Again

In her second Goldwyn picture Mae Marsh appears during many scenes dressed as a boy, which will recall the character she played in "The Wharf Rat." In the Goldwyn role, she plays the granddaughter of an old keeper of a bird store. While this picture may lack the whimsicality of James M. Barrie's creations, nevertheless in it Mae Marsh herself has the Barrie atmosphere that calls to mind Maude Adams in "Peter Pan."

Goldwyn has brought a number of well-known screen players into this production, besides Robert Harron, whose return reunited the most famous team of players in recent screen history.

William Furey, who plays the role of Mae Marsh's grandfather, is known to picture fans everywhere through his work in support of Theda Bara in "Destruction," Ethel Barrymore in "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie," as well as a similar role of a sympathetic old man in "Kick In." Before his entry into pictures he was a popular figure on the stage, especially in comic opera. On the musical stage he played in the Gilbert and Sullivan operas and in light opera with Lillian Russell and Pauline Hall.

Dion Titheradge, just finishing an all-season engagement with Laurette Taylor in "The Harp of Life," is another well-known player that Goldwyn was fortunate in signing in Miss Marsh's support. Others in the cast are Edward See, John Charles, Isabel Berwin, W. T. Carlton and Jack Grey.

In anticipation of the rapid completion of this picture Goldwyn has selected Miss Marsh's third production, which will be under way by the latter part of April.

Jane Cowl and Madge Kennedy to Begin Work

With four pictures finished, the Goldwyn Company, which is making history for rapidity of production, announces that the filming of plays starring Jane Cowl and Madge Kennedy will be begun at once.

Miss Kennedy's first screen appearance will be made in a famous comedy that enjoyed an all-season run on Broadway and played successful engagements throughout America. The scenario for her production has been made by Edgar Selwyn and Margaret Mayo, and in it they have put all of the skill and stagecraft that made Miss Mayo's "Twin Beds," "Polly of the Circus" and "Baby Mine," and Mr. Selwyn's "Nearly Married" such great financial successes.

Miss Kennedy is expected to bring with her into pictures several of the skilled men and women who have supported her on the stage in her four notable farce successes, players in most instances new to the pictures.

Miss Cowl is now reading several notable works that are at the disposal of Goldwyn and will make a decision in concert with her managers within a week.

Mary Garden, the last of the Goldwyn quintet thus far announced, will begin her work before the camera in July.

Arthur Hopkins Will Direct Maxine Elliott

Arthur Hopkins, who is one of the partners in the Goldwyn Corporation and from the beginning has occupied the position of chief of the Goldwyn producing staff, is to direct Maxine Elliott in her second picture. Mr. Hopkins has been devoting the major portion of his time to a painstaking study of producing problems of the screen in preparation for his debut as a director of pictures. His success as producer on the speaking stage lends added significance to his debut as director. His first production will be the most ambitious of the Goldwyn features. George Berthelon will assist Mr. Hopkins. Rene Guissart will be his cameraman.

Miss Elliott in this picture will be supported by a cast of able and popular players, which includes Marguerite Marsh, R. Leigh Denny, Donald Galleher, George Odell, Florence Ashbrooke and Helen Salinger.

TO MOVE FOX OFFICE

Plans Made for Elaborate Opening of Spacious New Quarters in New York City—Stars and Exhibitors to Be Present

Elaborate plans are being made by the Fox Film Corporation, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York City, for the formal opening of new quarters on the tenth floor to be occupied by the New York Exchange. Hundreds of exhibitors from all parts of the territory covered by the biggest of the twenty-two Fox exchanges are expected to be present when Jack Levy and his force of seventy-five take possession on Thursday, April 12.

Mr. Levy has been in charge of the New York branch since June, 1916. He and Winfield Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, are attending to the preparations for the festivities. Mr. Levy was formerly manager of the Philadelphia office.

Invitations for the coming event have been issued to every exhibitor served by the New York Exchange, but motion picture exhibitors, whether users of Fox program or not, will be cordially welcomed. The William Fox stars working in the Fort Lee, N. J., studios, who are not out on "locations," will make every effort to greet personally the men who show their pictures.

Just three years ago, in the days of William Fox's Box Office Attraction Company, the New York Exchange was established on the fifth floor of the Leavitt building in Forty-sixth street. As the Fox photoplays have forged to the front more room and more employes have been needed. The immediate results following the announcement by Mr. Fox of his super de luxe productions for 1917 were so gratifying in point of volume of new business, that it became imperative to give the New York Exchange even larger floor space. In addition to the regular releases, Mr. Levy's office handles the Foxfilm comedies which are released weekly independent of the Fox program.

The New York Exchange serves New York state up to Albany, Connecticut to the Connecticut River, and New Jersey as far as Trenton.

Small Town Sports in Mutual Film

"Reputation," the first vehicle chosen for Edna Goodrich under her contract with Mutual opens with scenes which will take you back to your childhood and the good times the boys and girls used to have together in the home town. The scenes show a small town in winter and all the winter sports indulged in by the young people. There are skating parties in which Miss Goodrich appears as the belle of the small town, and entering into the winter sports with her companions, the star submits to having her "face washed" and snow "put down her back."

"The Law of Compensation," by Wilson Mizner, will be the next contribution by Norma Talmadge to Selznick-Pictures, in which this popular young star will be seen in a unique double role.

New Earle Williams Play

Many attempts have been made by various producers to screen a play containing the atmosphere in the life of a newspaper reporter only to be scoffed at by the men who make their living through writing for newspapers. Greater Vitagraph is the latest of the larger companies to make the attempt in the five-part photoplay, "Apartment 29," which is scheduled for release on April 9.

In "Apartment 29" Earle Williams is cast in the role of a theatrical critic and special story writer. The possible false note in the story is that in the role of Stanley Ormsby, Williams apparently has an almost unlimited means, something the average newspaperman is without. But then scions of wealth sometimes enter newspaper work for the excitement obtained from it.

As Ormsby, the dramatic critic, Williams refuses to sanction a favorable criticism on a production that he considers everything but good. Then his troubles begin. His next assignment is to interview a singer. In attempting to cover the assignment he finds the woman he was to interview dead in front of "Apartment 29." Her husband is dead inside the apartment. Everything points to the reporter being the murderer. He becomes panic-stricken and appeals to a playwright in the same building to hide him during the search of the police. The playwright demands a bribe which Ormsby pays.

A girl friend of the playwright co-operates and Ormsby eludes the police on the first search. Another bribe is demanded for a continued refuge. Ormsby, refusing to pay further blackmail, flees with the girl, only to run into a den of thieves. Eventually the couple are rescued by the police who immediately lodge a charge of double murder against Ormsby.

Williams is ably supported by Ethel Gray Terry, Denton Vane and Billie Billings.

Rules for Good Director

John O'Brien, who has been engaged to direct Edna Goodrich in her productions for Mutual, has some comprehensive rules for the director which he has made up from his thorough experience in this line.

Mr. O'Brien believes:

Only thorough co-operation between star and director can bring the best results.

The stars do not make the directors neither do the directors make the stars, but neither one can be successful without the other.

The director shines through the reflected glory of the star.

The greatest star if poorly directed fails to score a triumph.

The director can get many valuable points from every star he directs.

The director should constantly absorb the technique of his players.

The screen director can attain in a year or two what it takes a stage director years to conquer.

Opportunities for better work and more striking effects are afforded by the screen. The stage hampers a director's originality by its limitations.

No matter how proficient a director may be, however, he is helpless if the star does not respond to his efforts.

A few of the vital spots in Vitagraph's "Apartment 29," which features Earle Williams.

ON MUTUAL SCHEDULE

Nance O'Neil Makes Mutual Debut on April 9—New Serials, New Comedies and Unusual Featurettes Appear.

Two five-reel features, a new Helen Holmes serial and a new brand of comedies are all listed on the schedule of the Mutual Film Corporation for April 9, as well as the usual quota of featurettes.

Nance O'Neil will make her first appearance under the Mutual Brand in "Mrs. Balfame," a five-reel adaptation of Gertrude of Gertrude Atherton's novel of the same name.

The name of Nance O'Neil is good for advertising. Play up the fact that she is a noted legitimate stage star and has only appeared in a few screen productions. The author of the production, Gertrude Atherton, also will be a good drawing card for the film. Call attention to the fact that "Mrs. Balfame" is the first of Mrs. Atherton's books which have come to the screen, and the admirers of her novels will be more than anxious to see the picturization. There is an excellent opportunity here for the theater manager to co-operate with the local book store or one of the department stores. Arrange with them to have a big window display of the novel with portraits of Nance O'Neil and stills from the play, also a card announcing that the photoplay is being shown at your theater.

William Russell in "High Play"

On April 9 will come also "High Play," a five-reel production featuring William Russell. There are three pertinent questions which men have to face in the unfolding of this story:

1. Would you be willing to sacrifice your fortune to pay the debts of a fellow business worker?
2. If you were led into a compromising position with a young woman and were there, witness to a murder, which would you do—let an innocent man suffer or reveal the real criminal and bring disgrace upon the woman?
3. If you had committeed a murder could you keep quiet and see an innocent man sent to the gallows?

These three questions can be used in your program and in advertising which you send out concerning the production. Francelia Billington plays opposite William Russell in this photo-drama.

Nance O'Neil and Frank Powell discussing the picturization of "Hedda Gabler," the star's second Powell-Mutual.

Helen Holmes in New Serial

The name of Helen Holmes acts like a magnet on the picture public. "The Railroad Raiders," the serial which is now being released, is a real railroad story. Make your drive at the public from the standpoint of fixing in their minds which night every week you are going to show this serial. The first night let your introduction of the serial be spectacular. Have a good lobby display with a strong atmosphere of the railroad and good display of stills showing some of the great risks run by the players in making the picture. Also be sure that the name of Helen Holmes is thoroughly impressed upon the public. This serial is in fifteen chapters of two reels each and will be released on Monday of each week starting April 9 with the first chapter, "Circumstantial Evidence."

New Comedy Release

Billie Rhodes is the featured player in the new brand of comedies, one of which will be released each week starting April 11, under the name of Strand Comedies. "My Hero" is the title of the first of these laugh provokers. In introducing these new comedies to your patrons it will be well to lay stress on the fact that they are clean, wholesome comedies, dealing with problems of every day life and are not of the slap-stick variety.

"Shorty Reduces Cost of Living"

The thirteenth story of "The Adventures of Shorty Hamilton" series deals with a present problem as the title, "Shorty Reduces the High Cost of Living," signifies.

As the story deals with a corner in potatoes it would be quite apropos to have a "vegetable matinee," and have the admission price for the performance one or two potatoes.

"The Mitzer Murder" is the fourth of the "Jimmie Dale Alias the Grey Seal" stories, and will be released on April 13.

Two Good Comedies

The Cub Comedy for the week featuring the inimitable George Ovey is "The Gypsy Prince," April 12. The Vogue contribution for April 14 is "Jolted Justice" in which Paddy McQuire plays the lead.

Mutual Tours

"Mutual Tours Around the World" No. 23, ready April 10, takes the audience on a trip through the parks and gardens of Paris, to Lisbon, capital of Portugal, and to Volendam, one of the quaintest towns of Holland.

Mutual Weekly will be issued as usual on Wednesday.

"Reel Life" No. 50, April 12, includes scenes of girls at the California school of Ruth St. Denis, "Making Wine in France" and "Indian Basketry," and an animated exposition of how a torpedo could be launched from an aeroplane.

Hearst-Pathe Aids Recruiting

The Hearst-Pathe News is aiding the government by running patriotic titles designed to promote recruiting in both army and navy. As this News Weekly has probably fifteen times the circulation of the largest newspaper in the United States, the aid thus given the government is of decided importance.

The Language of the Screen

BY DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS

I THINK it is rather absurd to try to look into the future of the motion picture industry. Because the future always moves along perfectly logically, but to the human mind, along unexpected lines. There's no telling what ramifications may flow from the picture craft.

Not long ago we thought that no subjects but those which lent themselves to nothing but the most vivid kind of pictorial exploitation, could be used for screen purposes. Now, we find as we develop the screen language, that we are bringing the high comedy into use, previously tabooed because of the importance of dialogue.

Screen Can Employ Stage Methods

In one of my recent pictures we have a scene where I sit at a table opposite another man for five minutes, and we did nothing but talk by gestures—the turning of a hand, the lifting of an eyebrow, the tense gaze, the act of half rising from a table in a threatening way, the clenching of a fist, the pointing to a door, or looking toward the window, and taking out a watch to denote expectancy.

In fact, we are employing more and more, the same gestures and grimaces practiced on the speaking stage, to accompany and emphasize spoken words. The kind of pantomime that the frequenter of the top gallery sees and understands, when he can't hear the voice.

In films, I think the day will come when they will eliminate spectacular effects and elaborate emotional acting, and instead will give the public stories that are human spectacles containing a laugh, a tear, a thrill—in fact, a page "from real life."

Tendency Toward Plays of Real Life

It seems that in film circles, at the present time, almost everyone is striving for elaboration. I think instead, it should be elimination. The simple things in life have proved to be great successes. This applies to all forms of art. For example, look at the success of "The Boomerang," produced last season by David Belasco. Its success is a favorable evidence of stage progress along elementary lines. To me, "The Boomerang" is the pinnacle of dramatic art—a splendid idea—admirably developed—and what was the result—a sensational New York hit.

I think soon the film profession will realize the advantages of eliminating big effects and extravagant screen acting. The players on the screen will act as they would in real life, and they are then bound to be more convincing to the audience. I think that the footage of pictures should not be sacrificed for uniform projection time. The length of a film play should be consistent with the development of the plot.

The film industry is in a somewhat serious condition. We must advance with the progress of the times. We must develop those authors who are now students in the profession—that sleep, eat and live films. They are the ones who, when visualizing a situation will discount its dialogue possibilities, and only see a situation from an absolutely screen perspective. Some day we will have a screen language. This is, of course, a matter of time. Look how many years it took the various forms of art to develop.

You know, if I were just starting in the theatrical profession, and could have the preference between the stage and screen, I would choose the latter. You can't do many stunts on the stage because you are so limited for space. But working outdoors, in the various film scenes, one can do most anything. Understand me correctly, I enjoy speaking stage work, and have a myriad of friends who are now engaged in plays. But somehow or other the cinema gets into your blood. I imagine if I should ever leave the screen it would have the same effect on me as a New Yorker away from home. That feeling of, "Oh, if I could only return for a day!"

Perhaps later I may return to the stage, providing I can find an exceptionally startling and original play. This is an age for specialties—the public is continually demanding something new.

Approves The Open Market

There are several advantages to the open market. For instance, if you are making program pictures, you are very often compelled to rush your story, neglect your sets and dramatic action because on a certain date, that particular film must be ready for general release.

On the other hand, if you are making pictures for the open market you take your time with your story, and in nine cases out of ten, your results are very encouraging. I should think that the producers in the profession would get together every so often and discuss the profession. In that manner our steps of advancement would be very rapid.

A more harmonious linking chain between exhibitors and producers would help matters greatly in the industry.

I am just as keen to know what the next five years in the profession will bring as are your readers. So let's all sit tight and wait developments.

New Triangle Leading Man

Jack Devereaux, who played the juvenile lead in "Her Father's Keeper," the first Triangle feature made at the new Yonkers studio, prior to the advent of Allan Dwan as supervising director of the plant, appears to have established himself firmly in the good graces of the famous creator of "Manhattan Madness" and "Fifty-Fifty," for he is being featured in the current production, and will also have prominent parts in forthcoming releases under Dwan's personal supervision.

Jack Devereaux, who is to be featured by Triangle under Dwan's supervision.

Born in County Claire, Ireland, about twenty-eight years ago, Devereaux came to this country with his parents as a lad, and received his education at Phillips Exeter Academy and Georgetown University. He is five feet, eleven inches tall, and by systematic athletics keeps himself trained down to 142 pounds, fighting trim.

After a brief and far from epoch-making career in business, Devereaux took the advice of William Courtenay, and joined the latter's stock company in Albany. After playing a variety of juvenile leads with William Courtenay and Thomas A. Wise, Devereaux entered the films and is said to show every promise of developing into a strong favorite.

Besides being an outdoor enthusiast, capable of playing a good game of golf or doing the trudgeon crawl at a professional clip, Devereaux writes fiction and verse with a perseverance that should land him among the creators of best-sellers some day. He is now hard at work on a scenario that Dwan has put the stamp of approval upon.

New State Rights Company

A new corporation, the Sherman Film Releasing Company, chartered under the laws of Massachusetts, and composed of some of the leading business and professional men of New England, has entered the moving picture field to purchase features on a state rights basis.

A. B. Fox of Newton, Massachusetts, a successful merchant, is president, and Alexander Rose, one of the leading attorneys of Boston, is treasurer. The latter is no novice as regards the film industry having acted in an advisory capacity in New England for some of the largest film companies in the United States.

The first feature acquired by the company is Wm. N. Selig's "The Crisis" now playing to crowded houses in St. Louis, Louisville and Pittsburgh. The purchase price is said to have been $50,000. It is the intention of these men to open up shortly in Boston at one of the leading theaters for an indefinite run exploiting the picture in an elaborate manner.

Harry Cohen, of the New York office of Sherman-Elliott, leaves to take up work in New England regarding "The Crisis" for the newly formed corporation.

Exhibitors Like New Serial

"Mystery of the Double Cross," Pathe's latest serial release, is being extensively booked for first-run showing by important exhibitors who never before have shown a serial. It is reported by Pathe that keen competition has developed as a result of trade showings held during the week of March 18 in all of Pathe's thirty exchange cities.

The managers of Pathe's eastern branches, at a meeting on Wednesday, March 21, with J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager, reported that leading exhibitors in their various territories were quick to appreciate the value of this new type of serial which is being booked and advertised as a feature attraction. Each succeeding serial since "The Iron Claw" has surpassed previous records and Pathe is confident that "Mystery of the Double Cross" will be its greatest serial success.

George Beban as Frenchman

In every production that George Beban has starred upon the screen the celebrated character actor has appeared in the role of an Italian, his "Pasquale," "The Italian" and "His Sweetheart" having proved him the greatest Italian character actor on the screen. In his forthcoming Pallas-Paramount picture, "The Bond Between," Mr. Beban breaks his long standing record—it will be remembered that he had been appearing on the stage as the Italian in "The Sign of the Rose" for several years before entering into the motion picture field—and plays the role of a French musician.

The story was written by Mr. Beban himself and work has just been begun on it under the direction of Donald Crisp, who has supervised Mr. Beban's most recent screen successes.

Submarine Features in Demand

Among the recent arrivals from abroad was R. E. Shanahan, European representative of the Williamson Brothers submarine photoplays. The first release, "The Williamson Submarine Expedition Picture," met with much success and Mr. Shanahan brought with him offers to purchase foreign rights for any future productions the Williamsons may release.

Herman F. Jans, president of the New Jersey Metro Film Service, has bought the New Jersey rights for "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea."

NEW TRIANGLES

Diverse Themes Mark Triangle Releases for April 15 and April 22—Harron, Desmond, Hart and Love Appear

Diverse themes and widely differing localities are featured in the Triangle program releases for April 15 and April 22.

Robert Harron and William Desmond are the stars of the pictures to be shown in first-run theaters during the week of April 15th.

Harron will appear in the Fine Arts "transcontinental" drama of politics and love, entitled, "An Old Fashioned Young Man," written by Frank E. Woods and directed by Lloyd Ingraham. William Desmond will be starred in a stirring Kay Bee war play of the Balkans, entitled, "Paddy O'Hara," written by J. G. Hawks and directed by Walter Edwards, under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

The plot of "An Old Fashioned Young Man" centers about the activities of a chivalrous youth who takes it upon himself to vindicate the honor of a woman running for the office of mayor of a large western city, who is the victim of trumped-up charges circulated by her unscrupulous opponents in the political arena. In searching out the evidence that will unmask the instigators of this conspiracy, Harron is called upon to travel across country from coast to coast and visit eight or ten of the principal cities between Los Angeles and New York.

As "Paddy O'Hara," William Desmond is shown in the role of a brilliant young Hibernian war correspondent for a London newspaper. Upon the outbreak of hostilities between two imaginary Balkan principalities, O'Hara is chosen by his editorial chiefs to secure authentic news from the front, his quick wit and undaunted courage being the qualifications that entitle him to the chance to risk life and limb. He not only secures one of the biggest "scoops" in modern journalism, but rescues the beautiful Princess Maryska, daughter of a mountain chieftan, and brings her home in triumph to share his Irish hearthstone.

Bessie Love and William S. Hart share honors as the stars of the Triangle feature releases for April 22. Miss Love will be seen in a Fine Arts comedy-drama, supported by George Stone and the Kiddies, entitled "Cheerful Givers," written by Mary H. O'Connor and directed by Paul Powell. William S. Hart will enact the star role in a forceful Kay Bee "thriller," entitled, "The Desert Man," written by Martin Brown and Lambert Hillyer and directed by Hart himself under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

As Judy, the daughter of an impecunious superintendent of an orphan asylum, Bessie Love has a part that gives her many opportunities to display her talents for finely shaded comedy and pathos. When the orphan asylum becomes bankrupt, a woman of wealth offers to take the superintendent's "eldest boy." As there is no eldest boy, Judy disguises herself to conform to the requirements, and goes to live with her benefactor. The lady has a handsome but weak-willed son, and Judy is enabled to save this lad from becoming a tool of his mother's unscrupulous social secretary.

In "The Desert Man" William S. Hart takes the part of a prospector who is frustrated in his search for gold and finally takes refuge in the partially deserted town of "Broken Hope." But he soon finds himself plunged into an exciting series of adventures when he meets Jenny, the pretty daughter of a dying miner, and tries to shield her from the blandishments of a rascally doctor whom he has brought to the settlement to care for the girl's father. The doctor pursuades Jenny to elope with him, and for a time it seems impossible for her to escape the depths that yawn for her. But in the end the Desert Man wins out by virtue of his mental resourcefulness and ability to handle a six-shooter with judicious dexterity.

EDISON TO PUBLISH PICTURES

"Release Date" Abandoned for "Published" Called Obsolete Term—Change Adopted to Give Worthy Pictures Longer Life

The adoption by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., of the word "published" as a successor to the term "released," is the subject of a statement by L. W. McChesney, manager of the Edison studios, regarding the reasons for the change.

Mr. McChesney says: "For some time past I have felt that the term 'released' was to unflexible and too circumscribed to signify the process to which it was applied and that the industry has outgrown the word. When the production of motion picture was commenced on any substantial scale the producing companies were limited in number and the pictures of temporary interest only. The development of the 'release' system and the use of the now obsolete word were natural. Every company was striving to please the public by giving prompt service rather than good pictures. Distributing companies emphasized to exhibitors the advantages of using first-run pictures on the very date of their 'release.'

Kenneth Harlan and Bessie Love in "Cheerful Givers"; the Dutch set for a coming Ince play, and Bill Hart in his newest drama, "The Desert Man."

"However, the featuring of the word 'released,' and the date that invariably accompanies it, tends to make exhibitors and public believe there is more merit in a picture that has just been placed on the market than in one that has been available for some time. The word 'published' does not convey this impression to the slightest degree.

"In making Conquest Pictures we are not going to use topical themes. We are not going to put out productions that will be any less interesting in Oshkosh a year from now than they are in New York today. Any exhibitor can start using Conquest Pictures at any time and can begin with any group of pictures that has been published. These pictures will be attractive for an indefinite period with absolutely no regard for the date of their 'release.'

"'Released' is an obsolete word and encouraging exhibitors to secure first-run pictures a relic of bygone days and methods."

Arizona Lunches George Siegmann

The Arizona Film Company of Chicago entertained thirty-five of its stockholders and other guests at a luncheon at the Hotel Sherman, March 29, in honor of George Siegmann, director of the big new feature which Arizona has produced, and news concerning which will shortly be given out through MOTOGRAPHY and the other channels. Mr. Siegmann was David W. Griffith's right hand man in the production of "Intolerance." He also played the negro lieutenant governor in "The Birth of a Nation." The luncheon was attended by the following distinguished Chicago citizens, members of the Arizona family, and representatives of the press:

Edw. F. Mandel, George J. Dehn, W. W. Lill, Prof. James Smith, Henry Bach, Gordon C. Thorne, Dr. Jeno, P. Brushingham, John P. Garner, Dr. Wm. H. Reid, the last three members of Mayor Thompson's cabinet, T. W. Beam, Stanley H. Twist, representative of the Exhibitor's Trade Review, Theodore Mead of the Motion Picture News, A. E. Curtis of MOTOGRAPHY, Bob Reel of the Chicago Evening American, Walter Howie, Chicago Examiner, A. L. Blunt, E. A. Schmidt, Richard A. Colby, M. L. Horner, Jr., Dr. C. C. Quale, Joe MacDonald, Leo Austrian, E. T. Evans, C. L. Packer, E. E. Dubbs, John J. Wade, H. E. Rice, Sr., Messrs. Swan, Burford and Whipple of the Crystal Photoplays Corporation, Hugh Comer Winter, Rev. Elisha A. Hoffman, Mr. VanDyke, assistant director to James Young of Essanay Company, Jimmy O'Shea, Mr. Siegmann's assistant director, George A. Siegmann himself, and Harry E. Rice, Jr., secretary of the Arizona Film Company.

Kolb and Dill Cause Uproar

J. W. Page, exhibitor at Sigourney, Iowa, reports: "I ran Kolb and Dill in 'A Peck o' Pickles' and it is the greatest comedy I have ever shown in my house. We packed them in and as they left the theater I was on the door and this is what I heard: 'It's great,' 'When will you have another?' and 'Mr. Page, you are to be congratulated on getting such service as this,' and many other such remarks which made me feel that the audience was better satisfied with this picture than any I had run for a long time. One continual uproar from start to finish.

"I have used three of the Mutual Star Productions and I wish to say that they are great. I have used service from five other feature companies and I find that the Mutual star productions, so far, have proved better features, with more drawing power than any service used from other companies."

New Erbograph Art Dramas Company

A second company of players, headed by Marion Swayne and directed by Joseph Levering, has been organized by Erbograph to produce features for the Art Dramas program, according to announcement made this week by Ludwig G. B. Erb, president of Erbograph.

Work has already been started by this new company on a play written especially for Miss Swayne by the Rev. Clarence J. Harris, the prominent scenario writer. In this story Miss Swayne, long one of the most popular screen stars, is given an opportunity to enact the sort of characterization which has made her such an admired player.

Photoplays are not, and ought never to be, imitators of the theater. They can never give the esthetic values of the theater; but no more can the theater give the esthetic values of the photoplay. With the rise of the motion pictures has come an entirely new independent art which must develop its own life conditions.

Luncheon and reception tendered George Siegmann, former Griffith right hand man, on March 29 by the Arizona Film Company of Chicago.

UNUSUAL FEATURE

"God's Man" Trade and Professional Pre-Release Showing at Rialto Theater—Presentation Supervised by S. L. Rothapfel

The trade and professional pre-release screening of the long and much heralded Frohman Amusement Corporation's nine-reel super-photoplay production of George Bronson Howard's phenomenal novel of New York's Broadway and night life, "God's Man," in which the eminent screen and stage artist, H. B. Warner, is starred, will take place on Wednesday, April 4, at 10 a. m.

Through the extreme courtesy of Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel, President William L. Sherrill for his organization has been enabled to secure the Rialto Theater with its full equipment for this trade showing.

Mr. Rothapfel, himself, has also agreed to lend his direct supervision to the presentation of "God's Man," and promises a departure in the presentation of motion pictures.

A special musical setting and compilation which has had also the personal attention of Mr. Rothapfel in its arrangement, will be rendered by the famous Rialto Theater under the leadership of Hugo Reisenfelder. The lattitudes in musical arrangement permitted by the unusual theme and length of "God's Man" is indeed exceptional and Mr. Rothapfel has as ever embraced the opportunities afforded to apply his most accomplished and phenomenal abilities in this particular direction.

President William L. Sherrill, of The Frohman Amusement Corporation in speaking of his latest production, has said:

I am fully convinced that our company has produced a motion picture which will take solid position as an epoch in motion picture manufacturing. Influenced in a small measure by the remarkable reception which has been accorded our previous super-feature "The Witching Hour," we became fully convinced of the utmost value of story and in following the teaching which we received, we sought most diligently and carefully before coming upon this book of Mr. Howard's "God's Man." That it is a tremendous story of moral teaching and vivid theme, is acclaimed by every one who has read it. Despite the practical absence of wild melodramatic thrills, which admittedly no longer dominate us the essential of motion picture success, I believe that in "God's Man," the public will find the motion picture production of the age, and of the newer style which is to make for permanency in super-productions, namely, a stirring story of dramatic value—a cast of excellence—an attention to finesse in every minute part and a play which will mean something to its viewers.

"Nevada" Studio Burns

Fire originating from crossed wires entirely destroyed the studio of the Nevada Motion Picture Corporation of Pasadena, California, on March 24. Almost the entire company was working on the stage at the time on one of the big sets for the 12-reel version of Herman Whitaker's novel, "The Planter," which the company is producing, with Tyrone Power as the star.

The loss is estimated at $25,000, including studio, sets, costumes, etc. It may, however, run higher if it is found impossible to duplicate some of the costumes and furnishings exactly as they were, necessitating retakes on some of the incidents. A great many of these costumes were purchased in Guatemala, while others were presented to Mr. Power by officials of the Guatemalan government.

Fortunately, no film was destroyed, as the laboratory is removed from the studio, but if the sets or costumes cannot be duplicated, considerable delay will no doubt be occasioned by the retakes. As soon as the fire became known, I. Bernstein, the owner of the new Bernstein studios in Los Angeles, called and offered the use of his studios, and his entire organization, agreeing to work night and day to duplicate the interior sets necessary to finish the picture. The offer was immediately accepted, and Mr. Bernstein worked his force all night that night in order to complete a big ball room set for himself, which was taken the following day, and Sunday night his entire organization was put to work on building interiors for the Power picture, with the result that by Thursday of the following week the two interiors were completed and ready for shooting for the company.

"Lasalida" New Producing Company

"Light of the Sun" is what the name of the new Lasalida Producing Company means in Spanish and who could better embody that phrase than Baby Marie Osborne? She is the newest veteran star to have a company all her own.

Lasalida Films, Inc., is the name of a new motion picture producing organization which has been formed to make feature photoplays with Baby Marie Osborne. Releasing contracts have been obtained and the company has already begun the picturization of its first subject.

The name of the company is derived from the Spanish, the word Lasalida meaning "light of the sun." W. A. S. Douglas is vice-president and general manager.

Lasalida Films, Inc., intends to produce eight pictures a year featuring Baby Marie Osborne and will also engage in the production of other features. Contracts have been entered into with Pathe to release the Baby Osborne subjects. The company has leased studio space from David Horsley and is now engaged in making the first picture, the working title of which is "When Baby Forgot."

Theaters Run Chicago Herald Play

Without the support of even one professional player, 125 Chicagoans—men, women, boys and girls—backed by the Chicago Herald, staged a two-reel photoplay, "The Sunshine Line," released on March 26. It was written by Luella O. Parsons, Herald photoplay critic, and produced by Charles Hayden of the Essanay studio.

Chicago exhibitors have taken keen interest in exploiting the amateur talent of "their town." Several downtown theaters booked it for the entire week of its release as a headliner. The Alcazar Theater bulletined the name of the boy star, Harry C. Moir, Jr., in great red letters across the lobby.

Out of the hundreds of entrants in the Herald contest, the 125 in the lead were awarded roles in this unique production. The picture is released through K. E. S. E. on its regular program and indications are that it will enjoy a long run in many prints, through the city and suburbs.

Charlie Ray in New Play

For the first time since he made his appearance in "The Honorable Algy," Charles Ray, the gifted young juvenile favorite, will be presented as the sole star of a Triangle-Kay Bee play, when he is offered by Thomas H. Ince in "The Pinch-Hitter," an original comedy-drama by C. Gardner Sullivan. The production has just been completed at the Ince studios and is scheduled for release April 29.

"The Pinch-Hitter" is a story of the campus, in which brown eyes and baseballs conspire to make happier the life of a spineless sluggard from the farm. From the opening scene it is rich in comedy situations, with occasional dramatic episodes to lend a touch of variety to the whole. Its introductory scenes are laid in a tiny boundary hamlet known as "Turkey Creek," and then remove to a more modern location, where there is situated the co-educational college in which the play is enacted.

Ray is seen as "Joel Parker," only son of "Obediah Parker," and referred to as "the bashfullest critter in the country, and sorta dummyfied." The part is of the type for which Ray long has yearned, though he is, perhaps, best known for his work in "weakling roles," and in his rendition of it, he is said to have achieved the greatest triumph of his career, since "The Coward," in which he made his initial Triangle appearance.

In Ray's support will be seen for the first time Sylvia Bremer, the new leading woman, as well as Joseph J. Dowling, Jerome Storm, Darrel Foss and Louis Durham. The production was directed by Victor L. Schertzinger, erstwhile Ince musical genius, and photographed by Paul Eagler, with art direction by Robert Brunton.

Frieder Announces First Production

Much interest attaches to recent announcements of future plans of the newly organized Frieder Film Corporation of Chicago and Lankershim, California. The new institution makes its initial bow with a five-part offering of Kate Douglas Wiggin's celebrated story "The Birds' Christmas Carol," work on which was completed recently at the Lankershim studios.

It would be difficult to find a more convincing indication of the progressive spirit back of the Frieder Film Corporation, or a better augury of its future, than the mere announcement that it had obtained film rights to the immortal Wiggin's classic. "The Birds' Christmas Carol" numbers its readers by the million and has ever been one of the most popular of the entire Houghton Mifflin line. The big eastern publishing house refused numerous offers before disposing of the film rights, owing to Miss Wiggin's determination that it be produced with the care and artistry that made her wonderful classic so extraordinarily popular.

The direction is under the sole management of Lule Warrenton, unquestionably one of the best known directors on the Pacific Coast and undoubtedly the best qualified by temperament and experience for the work. Mrs. Warrenton bears an enviable record. She is generally recognized as having no peer in the handling of child players.

Baltimore Motion Picture Ball

Plans for the annual moving picture ball which will be given by Baltimore exhibitors on April 28 have been completed. Famous stars of the screen are to be invited as guests and from the outlook the affair this year will be the most elaborate yet held.

Popular film players will be invited by popular vote of the theater-goers. The film men want to know which actors and actresses are most desired by the public and are hoping the patrons of picture houses will let their wishes be known at the box office.

Honesty in Film Business

Just a few short years ago, two young men from the West stepped into New York City with a big idea in their minds, a little capital in their pockets and an unlimited capacity for honest work. Their big idea was ridiculed, and their belief that only honest methods spelled permanent success was not a general opinion in the film business, at that time.

Their idea was that the motion picture business would not be confined to the production of one-reel films, and that eventually big, beautiful productions, now known as "features," would be necessary to supply the omnipotent "dear old public" with its demand. They stood ready to back up their belief with their cash and shortly afterward these two young men, A. and H. M. Warner, were known throughout the United States as having pushed their idea through to reality, in spite of the scoffs of experienced film manufacturers. Warner's Features soon demonstrated that the ideas of these men were founded upon a true knowledge and prescience of coming conditions.

The story of their following big organization is too well known to need repeating. They have unostentatiously gone ahead and have been doing big things in motion picture circles—the Warner Film Attractions of San Francisco, Warner Brothers of Los Angeles, The Standard Film Service of Detroit, Mich., the Lust and Warner Corporation of Washington, D. C. and Atlanta, Ga., the Standard Film Service of Cleveland, Ohio, The Dispatch Film Corporation of New York City, the Standard Film Service of Cincinnati, Ohio. These concerns handle the biggest feature attractions.

Exhibitor Likes Blue Ribbon

Richard A. Reilly, manager of the Halsted Theater, Each Orange, New Jersey, on March 22, showed his first Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature. It will not be his last by any means according to the letter he has written to Manager George Balsdon of the New York Exchange in which he says:

I wish to state that I have run your first show today, namely, "The Fathers of Men," featuring Robert Edeson, and I must admit your exchange "has the goods" and deserve the support of all exhibitors who want to gain friends and patrons. I am now a booster for Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Features and if the opportunity ever presents itself whereby I can do good to you or your exchange, I will gladly do so with pleasure.

Netter Buys Feature

Leon D. Netter of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, 1201 Liberty avenue, Pittsburgh, has purchased the Ohio rights to William N. Selig's latest production, "Beware of Strangers," featuring Thomas Santschi and an all star Selig cast.

The picture is an exposé of the methods employed by the members of the underworld, and the means resorted to by them to extort money from innocents.

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, has gone to Pittsburgh, Detroit and Chicago to complete a deal on the Hall Caine production, "The Deemster," for a group of Middle Western states.

The Man Inside the Booth

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

I have just a little problem I would like to have you solve for me: I have a Power's 6A motor drive which works in every way perfect with the exception of one thing and that is what I want to ask your advice on. Why is it that my picture does quite a little jumping up and down on some pictures and not on others? Some are perfectly steady and others do quite a lot of jumping on the screen. I have tightened and loosened the tension shoes but that does not stop the trouble at all.

Also kindly tell me (an operator with nine years' experience) how I could get in as a camera man with a film manufacturing concern?—Roy L. Pence, Aurora, Nebraska.

In answering your question as to the jumping of the picture, I would say that from the description that you have given me, the trouble you are having is caused by the films and not the machine. You do not state what age films you are running but I know from my own experience that a film, after being used for a length of time, will give way in the sprocket holes and will not be steady on the screen.

Most of this trouble is caused by operators not watching the sprockets on the machines and allowing the sprockets to wear and become undercut,—that is, the teeth get hooked on the points and when the film is run over it will cut the sprocket holes in the film. I have had new film that had never been on a machine before act the same way. Films that are not perforated absolutely perfect or that the stock is green will cause this trouble.

I screened a feature film for a firm several weeks ago and the first reel went through without a quiver on the screen. The second reel started jumping after the first fifty feet had been run off and it jumped all through the reel and finally got so bad that I took it off the machine before it had run all the way through. The next three reels went through all O. K. I examined this second reel and found that the trouble was in the perforation of the sprocket holes. The film was returned to the firm who made it and they sent a new reel back. This reel went through without a bit of trouble.

I have noticed when working as an operator that certain makes of film gave more or less trouble while other makes never gave me any trouble. If your machine is in good shape and some of your films go through all right then I am satisfied that the trouble is in the films and not your machine. The first time that you have trouble with a film on your machine, take it and run it on another machine and see if it does not jump just the same on one as on the other.

In regards to the position as cameraman, the only advice that I can give you would be this: Take up the matter with the different firms by mail and explain your experience to them and possibly you might be lucky enough to get some kind of a job with them that in time would give you a chance to be a cameraman.

I do not want to discourage you but I must be frank with you and tell you right now that if you do get any kind of a job with them you can consider yourself very lucky. At the present time there are about ten men for every job as camera man that is open. The producing companies are always on the lookout for first class men but that business is like operating—good operators are never hunting a job; on the other hand the jobs are hunting them.

Hunting a Film Destroyer

For the last week the editor of this department has been on quite a little trip at the request of a film exchange of Indianapolis and the object of this trip was to try and locate the machine and operator that was destroying film. This firm, like all the rest of the exchanges throughout the country, is having no end of trouble with its film and this trouble is caused by careless operators. I do not mean that all of the film troubles are caused by careless operators, for the exchanges are just as guilty as the operators.

In the last ten days I have inspected fifty-one machines and have found all but five in first-class shape. The one big trouble I find is the oil on the machines. It looks like the average operator thinks that he has to give the machine a bath every time he oils it.

Oil is one of the many things that go to ruin a film and an operator who allows his machine to get in a condition where it throws oil on a film from title to tail piece should be made to pay the damage that is done. If these operators that think that they have to have their machines swimming in oil to make them run, would only use a little common sense and put one drop of oil in each oil hole every time they oil the machine they would be doing the exchanges and the exhibitors and the operators that are trying to produce results on the screen, and last but not least the general public who pay their money to see a picture, a favor that would never be forgotten.

A man can be judged nine times out of ten by the condition of his machines and booth. I stood in a certain booth the other day and after calling the "operator's" attention to the oil on the apron and lower sprocket and explaining to him the damage that oil did to a film, I watched him run at least fifty feet of film out of frame and the chances are he would have run the rest of the reel out of frame if the audience had not made enough noise to attract his attention to the screen. He framed the picture but made no effort to mark the miss frame in the reel so that he could take it out when he rewound the reel.

I asked him if he cut out the bad frames and he said no, the film exchange was not paying him a salary to inspect their films. Now, as I said before, I know that the film exchanges do send out some films in awful condition and I do not blame an operator who gets film in that condition for feeling sore about it, but when an operator is so lazy and indifferent and has no respect for the craft that he is following as to sit in a booth all day long and frame a picture every time he runs it through the machine rather than spend one minute and cut out the bad frame and by so doing that save himself any more trouble and save all the operators that use the picture after him the same trouble, then that man should have a job on the streets with a pick and shovel.

I am glad to say that I found only this one operator out of some thirty that took this attitude on my suggestions. I also ran across one manager who said, "I have a first-class operator and he knows all about the business and I would not let anyone go into his booth and tell him anything."

I finally convinced him that I was not there to tell his operator anything but that I would either have to see the machines or he would have to be responsible for any damage done to the films while in his care. I found the machines in good running order but swimming in oil. Oil was in the bottom of the lower magazine and enough of it in there to oil the whole machine for a month. Still this same manager thinks that he has a perfect operator and he (the manager) never fails to kick if his films do not come to him in the best of shape. One of the greatest damages being done to film today is the one shown in the cut below.

Would You Cut Holes in Your Carpet?

The holes shown in the film reproduced here were made by the operator who has two machines to handle and thinks that he has to have a private mark as a warning when to light his lamp on the second machine. Then he has to have another punch mark to let him know when to start the second machine. This marking of films is causing the exchanges no end of trouble. Every operator (I am careless in handling the word operator, for no regular, honest-to-goodness operator, would do such a thing) seems to think that he must have his own personal mark.

I have found films that have been punched for over a hundred feet from the end right up to the last foot in the reel and I have found no less than six different punch marks in this one film. You can imagine how this film will appear on the screen. It is impossible to cut out the punch marks as this would ruin the finish of the picture, so the managers who pay out their money trying to please the patrons of their houses have to stand by and see this kind of stuff go on the screen.

The exchanges have written to both managers and operators requesting them to please stop this practice, but it is still going on and by all means should be stopped at once. I do not believe that the operators ever consider what they are doing when he picks up a punch and commences to punch holes in a film. He would not think of taking off his hat and punching it full of holes nor would he go to his home and cut holes in the carpets, but he does not hesitate to ruin a film that costs many times more than his hat.

If this same fellow would throw a brick through a window he would be arrested on the spot for the destruction of property and be fined and the chances are, sent to jail, and in my estimation he is just as guilty when he takes a punch and cuts up a film with it, and should get the same treatment as the hoodlum that throws the brick.

The time has come when the exchanges, exhibitors and operators must work to each other's interest or all three of them will suffer in the end. I have had exchange managers say to me, "Why, we don't deal with the operator, we deal with the manager," and those same managers today will tell you that although they get their money from the manager of the theater, they have to depend on the man in the booth to produce results with their films or they don't get much from the manager.

Now is the time for every operator to appoint himself a committee of one to take care of the films intrusted in his care. Now is the time for every manager to see that his operator is taking care of the films while they are in the operators' care, and last but not least, now is the time for the exchange man to wake up and see that his films are sent out in a condition fit to use and not sent out with the idea that the operator will put them in shape.

Some Clean Cut Operators

While on the road last week I visited Jeffersonville and New Albany, Indiana, and Louisville, Kentucky. While in Louisville I had the pleasure of meeting several of Local No. 163 operators and among them was their business agent, Brother E. W. Clay, who tells me that all the boys are working and that everyone is happy. Brother Harry Conlon (considered the best looking man at the Seattle convention) is still carrying the smile that refuses to come off. The I. A. certainly should be proud of Local No. 163 for of all the different men that I have come in contact with I have never met a set of more genteel, clean cut men than I did at Louisville. Every operator that I talked to seemed to have but one idea, and that was to improve the projection of his picture. And the results are that the operators of Louisville are in the front ranks of the operators of the country.

Clara K. Young in "Easiest Way"

The Selznick-Pictures production of Eugene Walter's "The Easiest Way," with Clara Kimball Young as the star, has been completed, and was viewed by Lewis J. Selznick and the various executives of the corporation. It was the unanimous verdict that Director Albert Capellani had created a masterpiece, and more than maintained the Selznick-Pictures standard throughout, in photography and unique effects, no less than in the vigor of his story-telling. Miss Young has never looked more beautiful than in the numerous closeups.

"The Easiest Way" tells directly the same story as Mr. Walter told in his original play, as produced by David Belasco, adding, of course, many details which could not be staged. It follows the career of Laura Murdock, the actress, from the death of her dissipated husband, through the difficulties that encounter her as she tries to make her way in the world alone. Her acceptance of the influence of the wealthy broker, Brockton, is shown, with its inevitable result in her acceptance of his attentions as payment. Her love for Madison, a western newspaper writer, follows, and her fight to escape from the entanglement with Brockton. Unable to succeed unassisted, she returns to Brocton and when Madison comes to claim her her entanglement results in both men spurning her. She thereupon, in desperation, flings herself into the vortex of life on the Great White Way.

At this point the original play closed. In the picture version the story has been carried to its logical conclusion, the incidents having been furnished by Mr. Walter himself, as his version of the eventful fate of Laura Murdock. Nauseated by her surroundings she tries to drown herself. In a dying condition she is taken to a hospital and Madison is notified. He arrives in time to learn the truth about her struggle against tremendous odds, and as he tells her that he forgives her, she dies in his arms.

Warren Explains New Production

Edward Warren, who has just completed the state right feature, "The Warfare of the Flesh," featuring Sheldon Lewis, Marie Shotwell, Walter Hampden and Charlotte Ives, was asked at a meeting of state right buyers and big exhibitors to explain the significance of the title so that it may be properly advertised in house organs, daily papers, and other local business getting mediums.

Edward Warren, state rights producer.

Said Mr. Warren:

"The Warfare of the Flesh" has spiritual significance. It does not mean a battle nor a struggle of flesh in the material sense. It means the eternal conflict our spirit and soul wages against the desires of the flesh. In our story we have two dramatic forces. Those of good and those of evil. The warfare is between these two forces. They use as pawns the men and women as they have come down the ages since Adam and Eve. Thus warfare and flesh are really general terms and not specific. Psychologically, the specific application of warfare and its relation to the flesh is more internal than external. As the warfare relates to the individual it is really the internal conflict between mind and matter.

Thus we develop this theme by first showing the Warfare of the Flesh in the beginning when the first transgressors were expelled from Heaven for their wrongdoing. We see the fallen angels in Hell and on Earth intent on spreading the scourge of evil. We see Satan and Sin in the Garden of Eden and Sin tempts Eve, who is not strong enough to engage in a warfare with the desires of the flesh and win. We then pass on to a later civilization and see the Magdalene about to be stoned because she was vanquished in the warfare of mind with matter. The Good Samaritan comes to her rescue and the machinations of Satan and Sin are thus frustrated in a conflict with Good. Then there is a quick transition to the present era and again we see Satan and Sin casting their ominous shadows over the affairs of mankind and accelerating evil, in the guise of a lady and gentleman of the leisure class. They temporarily befog the vision of weak men and women thrown into the maelstrom of life where the Warfare of the Flesh is perpetual. In the stress of circumstances our heroine is about to give up her fight with matter but the eternal spirit of good again comes to the relief of the distressed and the unfortunate. Thus Satan and Sin lose out in a clash with the forces of Good. But the conflict is ever-lasting and virtue is proven and truly won by a conflict with malignant forces that invade the planet Earth.

Mutual Releases Patriotic Feature

With the nation stirred to greater patriotic ardor than at any time since Dewey captured Manila Bay and the government facing one of the great crises of American history, the Mutual Film Corporation will release on April 12 a five-reel special, "A Daughter of the War."

Never since the time that real motion pictures came into existence has there been such an outburst of patriotic feeling and never since the motion picture became an institution of public entertainment and edification has there been such a demand from the general public for patriotic photoplays. It was to meet this demand that the Mutual Film Corporation secured "A Daughter of the War."

"A Daughter of the War" carries the message of 1776. It shows splendid scenes from the war of the Revolution. Its scenes are along the banks of the historic Hudson, again under guard against foreign foe.

May Ward plays the leading role. She is the object of the affections of a Hessian officer and a Colonial lieutenant, and the cause of a spectacular duel between the two which ends in a thrilling leap from a high rock in which the Hessian meets death.

The strong, patriotic theme makes the picture splendid for family as well as children's programs.

NEW FAIRBANKS-ARTCRAFT

"A Regular Guy" to Follow "In Again—Out Again." New Picture Will be Staged in East and West

Starting a picture in the east and completing it in the west is somewhat of a novelty in screenland and this is what Douglas Fairbanks will do in connection with the production of his next Artcraft picture, "A Regular Guy." The scenario of "A Regular Guy" deals with a New Yorker who goes west and presents a satirical subject including a number of thrills which, however, is secondary to a vein of melodramatic humor, the basis of the story. In this picture "Doug" hopes to bulldog a steer, ride a bucking broncho and perform a series of other stunts which he has been practicing for some time past.

Immediately following the completion of "In Again—Out Again" now being finished at the Gauntier studio in New York, Mr. Fairbanks will take a short vacation in Atlantic City and will then return to New York to secure the metropolitan scenes for "A Regular Guy." The script of the new play is now receiving its final preparation for screening at the hands of Anita Loos. The author of the original scenario is a mystery and Business Manager John Fairbanks is still holding a check made out to "cash" for the careless sender of the script minus the author's name and address.

In accordance with the Fairbanks policy the western scenes for " A Regular Guy" will be taken in Wyoming in order to obtain the proper background for the picture, and a special car on the New York Central has already been chartered to carry the players and the working staff. Among those who will make the trip are John Emerson, who will direct the picture; Anita Loos, her mother; Bennie Zeidman, "Doug's" personal publicity representative, cameraman; Victor Fleming, his assistant; Glen Mac Williams, Billy Shay, assembling editor; John Fairbanks, business manager; his assistant, Florence E. Gribbon, Jack Scott, Eric von Stroheim, Robert Nichols, James Hogan, his wife; "Doug's secretary, Mathilde Kanes, and "Buddy," the Fairbank's valet.

Griffith Arrives in England

Acording to cable advices received at his New York offices D. W. Griffith, the American producer, who sailed for England recently on the Adriatic, has landed at Liverpool. Mr. Griffith will remain in Europe for several weeks and is booked to take some motion pictures on the western battle fronts before he returns to this country.

New National Association Members

The membership committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has inaugurated a new campaign for securing members with good results as shown by the following report issued last week from the National Association Headquarters in the Times Building. Among the companies which have filed applications for membership during the past week are: Benjamin Chapin, Ridgefield Park, N. J., as Producer Class B, to be represented by Miss Lucille Chapin; E. I. S. Motion Picture Corp., Producer Class C, to be presented by Dixon Boardman, president; Sanger Picture Plays Corporation, Producer Class A; to be represented by Eugene Sanger.

Scores of individuals have been quick to respond to the appeal of the membership committee, with a result that nearly 100 applications were received during the past week including some of the most prominent executives identified with film industry. Among them are the following: Jesse L. Lasky, Adolph Zukor, Arthur S. Friend, Whitman Bennett and Emil E. Shauer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp.; Hiram Abrams, president Paramount Pictures Corp.; J. Robert Rubin, attorney for Metro Pictures Corp. and the Exhibitors' League. R. W. Franco, general manager of the Triangle Distributing Corp., has filed his application for membership and it is expected that many other officials of the Triangle will follow the good example set by their new general manager. The Acme Lithographing Company, L. P. Weber, vice-president, joined Supply & Equipment Division No. 3, and will be followed by other lithographing companies.

Weird Effects in "Devil's Assistant"

In "The Devil's Assistant," fourth of the Margarita Fischer series of Mutual-Pollard Star Productions, there are some very spectacular and weird effects produced in the scenes which depict the hallucinations of the disordered mind of the drug victim.

Margarita Fischer, as the "dope fiend," imagines herself pursued by a pair of eyes which stare at her from all places. They look at her from the mirror, appear in the ceiling, peer from the clothes closet and glare through the window. She also sees shadowy figures of imps and malignant spirits hovering over her, and in one instance a tiger pursues her and passes through the doors from one room to another as she seeks to evade him.

The Devil's Assistant" is a preachment against the drug evil and pictures the horrors of a drug victim so vividly that it cannot fail to drive home a lesson, Miss Fischer's role is one which runs the gamut of human emotions and requires the most delicate and subtle handling. She is seen first as a gay, light-hearted girl, then as the insiduous drug begins slowly to fasten its deadening cluthes upon her she changes to the hard, unfeeling woman filled with violence and bitterness, haunted by the most horrible torture which the brain could suffer. Then the reaction changes her again to a mature woman with a mind as simple as a child and no more force of personality than an imbecile. Miss Fischer threw herself so heartily into these emotional roles that she was completely exhausted when the production was completed.

Sunday Pictures for Connecticut

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry states that the Martin Local Option bill, permitting Sunday sports and motion pictures in Connecticut on Sunday, by referendum, in towns over ten thousand, was passed by the Senate, 19 to 16. This bill went through the house by a vote of 137 to 89 and will permit picture theaters to be open between two and ten o'clock on Sunday afternoon and evenings.

The amendment added to the bill in the House allowing the town of Milford to be included within the act, was passed by the Senate yesterday.

The bill now goes to Governor Marcus H. Holcomb for his signature and it is understood the governor will sign the measure promptly. This bill has been advocated by the Connecticut Liberal Sunday Committee of which Hon. M. J. Quinn, former senator, is chairman. The hotel and restaurant interests throughout the state have been active in their support of the measure.

Announcement of the passage of the Martin bill by the Connecticut Legislature was received with much enthusiasm at the offices of the National Association where it is believed that the action of the Connecticut law makers will have a beneficial effect on securing a favorable report on one of the Sunday bills now pending before the Codes Committee at Albany.

F. H. Vogt, formerly salesman at the New York Mutual Exchange, has been promoted to the position of manager of the Newark, N. J., branch of the Mutual Film Corporation.

Follies Girl with Ince

Thomas H. Ince has engaged Olive Thomas, the popular young star of the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic and featured beauty of a late edition of the Follies, to create important roles in forthcoming Kay-Bee productions. Miss Thomas is now in California, and has already been assigned the lead in one of the first plays that Ince will do under his new arrangement with Triangle.

Olive Thomas, late of Ziegfeld Midnight Revels, who is to do leads in forthcoming Triangle productions.

Born in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, about twenty years ago, Olive Thomas became a reigning favorite on Broadway from the night—or morning—that the Ziegfeld Frolic opened, about two years ago, and with the exception of one season when she played the January girl in the 1916 premiere of the Follies, she has been the bright particular star of the revels that have attracted thousands to the top of the New Amsterdam theater.

A brunette of the vivacious type, Miss Thomas has grey eyes and golden brown hair that screens unusually well. Despite all of the attention of which she has been the center, she is said to be as simple and charming in manner as though she had never known success. All of the former members of her company have sent her telegrams of congratulation upon her affiliation with Ince, which is a mark of popularity few Broadway beauties can match.

Miss Thomas made her screen debut a few months ago with Irene Fenwick in the Paramount production of "A Girl Like That," in which she created an excellent impression. Ince will cast her in roles that will give full play to her sunny and whimsical personality.

Friars Cheer Cohan Picture

Three hundred members of the Friars Club accompanied by as many friends gathered at the club house last Monday afternoon in honor of the motion picture debut of their abbott, George M. Cohan in "Broadway Jones" at the Strand Theater, New York. After a luncheon tendered by the Strand Theater management the Friars formed ranks and headed by George S. Dougherty's Police Band and the Strand ushers marched down Sixth avenue, west to Times Square and up Broadway to the theater.

At the lobby of the Strand a battery of cameras greeted the parade as it filed into the theater. Following an elaborate overture, the Cohan-Artcraft picture was thrown upon the screen and when George M. was introduced as a motion picture star the entire orchestra rose to its feet waved hundreds of flags and cheered the popular actor-author-producer, in spite of the fact that George himself was not present, having been called to Boston for the presentation of a performance of a new play. Laugh after laugh was accorded the new screen star as the story progressed and upon its conclusion another enthusiastic demonstration occurred.

Strand Books O. Henry Series

The popularity of General Film Company's widely heralded series of two-reel pictures based on the O. Henry short stories was attested last week when the Strand Theater of New York contracted for the entire series and will show one of these features weekly starting with the first release next week. The Strand management will feature the O. Henry pictures equally with their regular feature each week and the title will appear in electric lights across the front of the theater. Manager Edel intends to conduct a special advertising campaign on this series as he is convinced that it is the best drawing series of short subjects ever placed on the market.

The first picture to be shown by the Strand will be "The Third Ingredient," based on what is probably the most widely read story ever written by O. Henry. Following "The Third Ingredient," the subjects in their regular order are "Friends in San Rosario," "The Marionettes," "Past One at Rooney's," "The Gifts of the Magi," "The Green Door," "Strictly Business," "The Guilty Party" and "A Service of Love."

Sequel to "Skinner's Dress Suit"

"Skinner's Bubble," a sequel to "Skinner's Dress Suit," will be released April 23. Bryant Washburn will again be seen in a delightful comedy role in the sequel. Hazel Daly, the "Honey" of the first production, is occupying the same position in the second. All the rest of the original "Skinner" company is being utilized in the cast. The forthcoming comedy is declared to abound in that same natural, life-like humor which has made "Skinner's Dress Suit" one of the biggest screen hits of the year.

"Skinner's Bubble" is simply another chapter in the laughable life of the Skinners—himself and Honey. Following so closely upon the sensational success of "Skinner's Dress Suit," the sequel is practically assured of a big welcome from exhibitors and photoplay patrons.

FILM USED BY U. S.

Government Calls Vitagraph's "Womanhood" Defense Aid and Selects It to Increase Enlistments In Army and Navy.

"Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," Greater Vitagraph's eight part preparedness and national security picture, made under the direction of Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, following a suggestion by former President Roosevelt, has been selected by government officials as the means to increase enlistments in all branches of the service—the army, navy and marine corps.

Commander Kenneth M. Bennett, head of the Naval Publicity Bureau, with headquarters at 318 West 39th Street, New York City, has charge of the details as to the best method of utilizing the picture for the good of the country. He is in constant conference with his superiors at Washington and expects to make an official announcement very shortly.

While nothing has been decided finally the plan calls for governmental co-operation with exhibitors throughout the country who book "Womanhood." The first suggestion by the government is that a recruiting officer and a medical examiner be stationed at every theater in the larger cities during the entire run of "Womanhood." Lobby displays will be utilized to announce that a temporary recruiting office has been established and the work will be carried on just exactly as if the theater branch was a regular, permanently established recruiting office for the service. Slides announcing that a recruiting officer is in attendance will be thrown upon the screen. It also is likely that the recruiting officer will make a short address before each performance.

Further plans of the Navy Department contemplate evening parades during the entire run of "Womanhood" in all of the larger cities of the country.

The plan calls for the paraders to consist of members of the National Guard, headed by a drum and fife corps which will play martial music during a short parade throughout the city.

Facts Concerning License Quiz

The misquoting of a person's words and the distortion of his true attitude has often caused unfortunate misrepresentation. MOTOGRAPHY is glad to set at rights the misconstruction of Ralph O. Proctor's stand in the recent license investigation in Chicago.

The Chicago News, in its report of the proceedings of a meeting held March 21, by the special committee appointed by the city council to discuss the proposed raise of license for picture theaters and exchanges in the city, attributed the following statement to Mr. Proctor, manager of the Chicago Art Dramas office:

> It is no longer the film exchanges or the "movie" proprietors who are making the money out of the moving picture business. The big money in the film business now is being made by the producers, and the stock of the big producing concerns is away above par.

Mr. Proctor takes exception to this statement and gives in his own words his testimony in the proceedings of the meeting as follows:

> A council committee on licenses met to hear testimony as to why the licenses on moving picture theaters should not be increased pro rata as to seating capacity, from $300 to $1,000, and the license on film exchanges from $25 to $200 per year each.
> The aldermen had evidently been provided with a great deal of misinformation relative to the profits in the film industry. In fact, at the beginning of their meetng they were confident that fortunes were made weekly and that the exhibitors, film exchanges and the manufacturers were shining marks for taxation.
> I was questioned at length by the committee and explained to them that the present losses in the film business started at the box-office and affected every branch of the business—the exhibitor, the exchange and the manufacturer; that the losses were increasing rather than decreasing, and that it was only the profits made prior to the last two years and the immense amount of new capital invested by Wall Street which enabled the business to exist at present, and for the past two years.

Seventeen Taxes on Exhibitors

> I explained further that the exhibitor in Chicago is subjected to no less than seventeen special and distinct taxations, namely: The canopy tax, electrical inspection, county tax, city license, state tax, government tax, health inspection, boiler inspection, operators' license, building inspection, etc., etc.
> The committee then claimed that they had information to the effect that exchanges charged as high as $100 per day for one subject. I told them that this was quite true, that we all remembered this individual case, and were still talking about it; that the price obtained for pictures taken from carefully compiled statistics was between $11.50 and $12.50 per day, and that this embraces all accounts, from the first run man down to the commercial.
> They had also been informed that the cost of film service was greater in percentage than the other costs in running a theater. I endeavored to enlighten them on this subject by showing them that the average cost of film service did not exceed 25 per cent of the cost of operation. Mr. Hoppe took exception to this, claiming that 33⅓ per cent was closer to the facts; but I told them I believed the first figures will be borne out in nine cases out of ten.
> I explained that the passing of an ordinance increasing the license of film exchanges would eliminate 50 per cent of the exchanges now doing business, as they are not financially equipped to stand the additional taxation. These are what are known as one-man exchanges and the increased taxation, if taken from the small revenue which they now receive, would make them absolutely unprofitable, and put them out of business. The committee said that this was not their object.
> Furthermore, I stated that Chicago would have been, without the question of a doubt, the center of the motion picture industry in America if unjust taxation, reform agitation, etc., had not caused the manufacturers to locate elsewhere, and that they are now located on both coasts.
> I have gone to some length to explain my side of the case because the article in question has done me considerable harm.
> I believe it should be called to the attention of the manufacturers, exchanges and exhibitors that their interests lie in defeating unjust legislation, and that it can only be accomplished by concerted effort. I know that this has been brought to their attention time and time again, but when you stop to consider that there are 90 exchanges in the city and that only two exchange managers were on the ground, 500 exhibitors in the city and only one exhibitor on the ground, and numerous manufacturers without any representation at all, it seems time they awoke to the necessity of protecting their own investments.

Vote Sunday Pictures Down

The village of Oak Park, Illinois, is not to enjoy Sunday pictures in spite of the valiant efforts of film men. The question was placed upon the village ballot at the recent election and the whole population voted upon the issue. Eleventh hour electioneering by three hundred women workers, members of the various clubs, was responsible for the defeat of the measure.

The vote on the proposition stood as follows: for open theaters on Sunday, men 2,058, women 710; against, men, 2,332, women 2,486.

M. H. Hoffman has resigned from the Bluebird organization, his resignation to take effect immediately. Former Assistant E. H. Goldstine will succeed him. Mr. Hoffman will take the first rest he has enjoyed in five years. He is considering several attractive film offers, but later on may decide to go into business for himself.

APRIL BLOSSOMS

Unusual Art Dramas Plays Bloom Forth—Four Releases, Starring Four Charming Leading Women, Promised Exhibitors.

Naomi Childers, Anna Q. Nilsson, Jean Sothern and Alma Hanlon are the Art Drama stars who will be seen by exhibitors and fans during the month of April. The four stars will appear in releases remarkable for their variety of theme. These will be released on the one-a-week plan, following the usual Art Drama custom.

"The Inevitable," an Erbograph production, which stars Anna Q. Nilsson, is the first of the month's features. This is released on April 5. It is a stirring story of intrigue and love, in which a girl sets out to wreck a man's life, and discovers, almost too late, that she is in love with him. A murder mystery, some clever detective work on the part of the principal character, and quantities of human interest make this one of the most appealing and interesting productions of the month.

Second of the month's releases, and equal to "The Inevitable" in suspense and novelty of plot, is "The Great Bradley Mystery," a unique play written by Edward Ellis. This was adapted from the stage play, which had a great run in New York several seasons ago. Alma Hanlon stars in this production, with Edward Earle in support.

From the Van Dyke studios comes "One Woman's Ordeal," a problem play of domestic life. Jean Sothern plays the lead, while Walter Miller, known for his splendid work in previous Art Dramas, is the heavy. Arthur Housman also has an important role. The story was written and directed by Will S. Davis.

"One Woman's Ordeal" will be released on April 19.

The first picture starring Naomi Childers, whose acquisition by the U. S. Amusement Corporation was announced last week, will be "The Auction of Virtue." This is from the pen of Joseph Poland, the celebrated novelist and writer, whose photoplay "The Cloud," a recent Art Drama, won such unqualified praise from the critics.

"The Auction of Virtue" is a dramatic narrative telling a startling story, and pointing a keen moral in an unobtrusive way. In it Miss Childers has a role full of emotional possibilities. The story was written especially for the star, who has won renown in motion pictures through her work with Vitagraph and other companies.

Herbert Blache directed the production, which is to be released on April 26.

Those who have seen the pictures for release in April are loud in proclaiming that these four are by far the best yet released by this young but flourishing organization.

Four Two-Reel General Series

With the recent announcement of the Kalem Company that the popular "Ham" Comedies featuring "Ham" and "Bud" in the persons of Lloyd V. Hamilton and Bud Duncan are to be two-reelers, the General Film Company will have for regular weekly distribution a quartette of two-reel series which offer to the exhibitor a wide range of subjects and sustained quality in this popular length of subject. The "Ham" Comedies are thoroughly established and their extension to two-reel length will be welcomed eagerly by the millions who laugh at the antics of the popular long and short comedians.

"The American Girl," featuring Marin Sais, is the second of the group of two-reel series but in popularity it is not second to any subject being shown in picture theaters today. Miss Marin Sais is the star. The third in the General's group is the widely heralded O. Henry series which promises to be the most popular group ever released for the screen. The Strand Theater of New York leads the bookings and will show one of these features each week during the run of the series. The fourth series is the Selig cycle of two-reel dramas which are thoroughly established and have been a feature of General Film Service for some time.

Sunshine Comedies Released

With a punch that is characteristic of its whole organization, and more especially its general manager, K. M. Scoville, the Sunshine Film Corporation of Chicago has arranged the launching of its first one-reel comedy for April 7 on the regular program of the American Standard Motion Picture corporation of Chicago.

Unlike many of the newer comedy producing concerns, the "Sunny Films" aggregation has produced real comedy; slap-stick with a bang. The first release, "Some Baby," deals with the marriage situation in a different way and once seen will long be remembered. The second release is entitled, "A Forceful Romance," and well maintains the standard set by its predecessor. The release date is set for April twenty-first. Both comedies, written by Mildred Considine, are possessed of unusually good plots.

During the months of April and May there will be two "Sunny Films" single-reel comedies a month, after which releases will be made one-a-week. If the Sunshine Film Corporation continues to make films as good as its first two releases a permanency in the motion picture field for this organization is assured.

High Spots in "Jimmie Dale" series "Jimmie Dale Alias the Grey Seal," released April 5.

These scenes show:

A young man threatened with a crime of which he is not guilty, but of which circumstantial evidence could be made to prove him guilty.

A mother pleading for the life of her son and offering her all to save him from disgrace.

Counterfeiters secretly gaining possession of a government plate.

Jimmie Dale trapping the leader of the counterfeit gang, destroying the plate, and leaving his grey seal insignia.

The Crime Club torturing a young chauffeur to death for aiding in the escape of their captive.

"The Whip" Scores Success

"The Whip," reproduced as a motion picture from the greatest success ever recorded in the history of spoken melodrama, appears to have registered an even greater triumph upon the screen. The picture version was shown to the New York public for the first time at the Park Theater on Sunday, March 25th, and the receipts for the day are reported to have been in excess of $2,200.

The large audience room—one of the most capacious in the city—has since been packed, day and evening, and the applause and cheering have indicated an entirely extraordinary enthusiasm on the part of the spectators.

This same spirit is reflected in the criticisms of the New York newspapers, which commend the immense photoplay without reserve, as shown by the following extracts:

All the thrilling incidents of the play are retained and additional episodes even more thrilling are offered.—New York World.

Two record successes have already been credited to the great melodrama "The Whip" and yesterday afternoon it began what will surely be a third . . . All the great scenes are reproduced with telling effect and in many cases are more thrilling than when they were given on the stage . . . The scene of the railroad accident is no pasteboard thing; it is the actual smash of one train into another, a wild thundering rush and then the blazing wrecks on the trackside.—New York American.

It is more plausible in its new than in its original form because the ubiquitous camera has photographed numberless episodes that could not be placed upon the stage . . . Most thrilling of all is the collision of the express train with the car in which the Whip was being transported . . . A real railroad and train were rented and there was no doubt about the reality of the crash.—Times.

One of the most gripping things that ever has been shown upon the screen is the race between the motor car and the Saratoga Express, which is rushing on with certain death for the Whip. . . . Add to this perfection of staging and telling, an excellent cast, and you have a few of the reasons why "The Whip" is one of the best photodramas produced this season.—Tribune.

Probably one of the best train wrecks to be used in a motion picture play. It was staged recently at Greenwood, Md., and a complete train equipment was destroyed in the rear end collision. The train at full speed crashes into a car, which is lifted clear of the tracks, the boiler of the engine explodes and the train tumbles over an embankment and takes fire. The Saratoga race course in the height of the season is also shown and the races are exciting.—Sun.

The scenes of the race course are not the old English ones but were photographed at Saratoga Springs and one sporting group was caught at the Long Branch Horse Show in New Jersey.—Herald.

A thriller out-thrilled, best describes the screen version of "The Whip." . . . The great advantage of the camera over the limited area of a stage was probably never more pronounced than in the screening of this highly pleasing tale.—Mail.

The screen version is bigger and more exciting than was the stage presentation.—Globe.

The photography is as good as has been seen in any motion picture ever exhibited. The scenes at Saratoga are particularly effective. No better pictures could have been made of two handicap races on the historic track at the Spa.—Evening Sun.

"The Whip" was retold with even greater force as a motion picture full of thrills.—Evening Telegram.

One of the most sensational melodramatic photoplay pictures that has ever been produced.—Evening Journal.

Mary Pickford Crosses Continent

Mary Pickford has arrived in New York from California accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, and her personal representative, Edward Hemmer. When a two weeks' lay-off was found necessary at the Pickford studio in California, "Little Mary" received the news with joy and immediately prepared to spend ten of the fourteen days in travel in order to consult with her New York dressmakers on the matter of her spring wardrobe. Not even her husband, Owen Moore, knew of the unexpected visit. Miss Pickford will return to her studios in California after a few days in New York, when she will resume her activities on the next Artcraft release.

Wilfred Lucas, who has completed the Triangle Fine Arts production, "Hands Up!" has gone to New York where he will work with Alan Dwan.

First Paramount Arbuckle Comedy

The first Paramount Arbuckle comedy, a two-reeler, in which Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle will make his debut under the banner of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, will be released on April 23. The comedy, which Mr. Arbuckle himself asserts is the most hilarious piece of screen work he has ever accomplished, has been christened "The Butcher Boy," and the production will be finished within a few days.

"Fatty" Arbuckle's first Paramount is a mincing comedy.

Despite the fact that the first comedy is still in course of production, Paramount has already signed contracts for over 200 showings during the first week of the picture. In New York City alone there will be over thirty-five showings simultaneously, including the Rialto, the Marcus Loew theaters, the Fox theaters, and many others, and in every big city in the United States Arbuckle will be bringing forth laughs from thousands upon thousands of motion picture fans who are anxiously awaiting this first comedy to be issued through Paramount.

The Arbuckle two-reel comedies will be released by Paramount to all exhibitors without interfering with the exclusiveness of the franchise clauses in their program distribution. This will give others than Paramount exhibitors the opportunity of booking these features and adding to the drawing power of their program for that week. Extensive preparations have been made for these comedies by Paramount, and it is believed that before the release date there will be contracts signed in over 300 theaters during the first week of its life. This is the record that is being set by Paramount, and with more than three weeks more to go, and with a large corps of salesmen on the road who have not as yet reported, it is likely that the goal of 300, never before attained by any distributing concern in the industry, will be reached.

"Her Temptation," April 16

Gladys Brockwell, the girl of a thousand expressions, is the star of "Her Temptation," a William Fox production which will be released for the week of April 16. Richard Stanton was in charge of the direction, J. Dev. Jennings of the photography. The script was written by Norris Shannon.

Miss Brockwell is supported in the picture by a cast of known merit. Chief among the company are Bertram Grassby, Ralph Lewis, Beatrice Burnham, James Cruze and Carrie Clarke Ward. The story has a psychic theme of unusual interest.

Southern Trip for Anita Stewart

Anita Stewart and the cast of her latest picture under production, a James Oliver Curwood story, has left New York for New Orleans. This is to be a particularly elegant Vitagraph production and with the usual Vitagraph attention to details, distance was permitted to place no obstacle in the way of filming outdoor scenes to conform with the spirit of the story.

In the party were Miss Stewart, Director Wilfrid North, and these members of the cost: Rudolph Cameron, Eulalie Jensen, Julia Swayne Gordon and Wm. Dunn. It was necessary to go South for outdoor atmosphere for the reason that the time of the story is laid in summer with everything in leaf. The working title of the picture is "Rebellion," but there is no war theme in it, it being a modern society comedy drama with Miss Stewart in a highly appealing and sympathetic role amid complications caused by the cross purposes of others. Several picturesque locations near New Orleans have been picked for the work. Studio Manager A. Victor Smith in charge of the transportation of the party made extensive arrangements for their comfort en route and at New Orleans.

"Even As You and I"

Universal's "Even as You and I," which is designated as "a drama of souls at bay," was the photoplay feature of the Rialto Theater, New York, last week.

AMERICAN WAR FILMS

Newly Organized Concern in New York to Make and Distribute Independently News Weekly of War Activities

Up to the minute news of the "American war" will be given through the medium of the screen by the Cinema War News Syndicate, which has just been organized in New York.

This syndicate will make and distribute a weekly news film which will present in pictorial form all of the activities of the government in preparation for war and will follow the various channels of action all through the conflicts which now appear inevitable. The new film concern will conduct along sound business lines the policies it has laid down for itself in the new enterprise.

The officers and managers of the new corporation are Frederick W. Brooker, president; Robert R. Reynolds, chief of staff and correspondents; C. Edgar Burton, sales manager; J. F. Natteford, publicity director. President Brooker is an established New York manufacturer.

Captain Reynolds was formerly in command of a troop of United States cavalry and is a newspaper man and a correspondent of many years' experience. During the Mexican trouble of the past few years, he gained a great deal of experience in the field of war news. Under his direction cameramen will be stationed at all points of contact with the chief news of the day, and where activities are the most important. All films will be taken and edited under Captain Reynold's direction.

One unusual feature of the new syndicate is that it will release its films independently, being the first and only independent weekly offered to exhibitors, besides being the only film newspaper devoted exclusively to American war news.

Chaplin in "The Cure"

Charles Spencer Chaplin's next Mutual comedy, "The Cure," scheduled for release on April 16, affords the $670,000-a-year star more really side-splitting opportunities than did any one of the prior Chaplin releases, according to expert opinion.

"The Cure" is a hospital resort, dedicated to the elimination of human ills and perversities, populated, as such resorts usually are, by human freaks bent on physical regeneration and mental relaxation. This crowd furnishes a comedy caste never before equaled even in the vivid imaginings of the screen comedy king. It is a tribute to the genius of the world famous actor that he has succeeded in making the action of the play excruciatingly comic without permitting a trace of vulgarity to appear in it anywhere.

The fun really becomes riotous when Chaplin's trunkload of tanglefoot is discovered by the resort proprietor and ordered destroyed, the halfwit attendant given the order dumping it into the medicinal well from which every patient in the place is supposed to drink five pints a day.

Of course pretty Edna Purviance, in the role of a dashing widow, is one of the patients, taking a cure for "nerves," and equally of course Charlie has his eye on the young woman before he is out of the bus.

In the natural sequence of events Edna discovers that in some inexplicable manner the well has been vitalized over night, and, feeling so much better herself after the matutinal pint, she doubles the dose and rallies every one of the male and female patients to participate in the newly virtuous waters.

Chaplin and Edna continue to sample the contents of the well until life, even at "The Cure" assumes a roseate hue—a thing worth having and worthy of being made the most of pronto. There and then they proceed to make the most of it.

Eric Campbell, the 6 ft. 4 inch giant of the screen, withal a merry mastodon, becomes cumbrously frolicsome with the fair Edna and thus slips automatically into his accustomed role of taking punishment from the active Chaplin, who is all over his quarry at once like a flea on a woolly dog. From that moment until the play ends Campbell chases Chaplin hard but vainly, gnashing his huge molars in frantic rage and fanning the air with tremendous fists.

Monte Carlo in Murdock Picture

John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, and Del Henderson, director at the Empire All-Star studios at Glendale, L. I., stood in a set on the stage of "Outcast" while they talked over the Ann Murdock star production.

The world-famous gambling palace of Monte Carlo and the Hotel Savoy, London, are reproduced in elaborate settings in "Outcast," the Empire-Mutual star production which is now in progress at the Empire studios, Glendale, L. I.

The capabilities of the technical staff under the direction of the able Frank Beresford were taxed to arrange the elaborate settings which Director Del Henderson required for the latest Ann Murdock photoplay.

When President John R. Freuler of Mutual paid his first visit to the studios of his newest producing company not long ago he was ushered in upon a 112-foot setting representing Monte Carlo and had a chat with Ann Murdock in the midst of scores of actors who were rehearsing the scene.

In the Hotel Savoy scene, which is even more elaborate than the Monte Carlo setting, Miss Murdock is surrounded by more than a hundred actors.

Lois Weber has nearly finished her Universal production, "Is A Woman A Person?" in which she and Phillips Smalley play the leads.

"Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation"

Greater Vitagraph Preparedness Spectacle in Five Reels. Released April 9. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THE dominant cry of this drama-spectacle is "America, Awake!" All the energy of the producers has been concentrated on bringing out the necessity for this quick awakening to the country's need of full and efficient preparedness for the sake of discouraging aggression and maintaining the honor and dignity of our country. The spirit of patriotism within the heart of every true American is fanned into a brilliant flame of enthusiasm for his flag and the righteous principles for which it stands through the stirring scenes which pass before his vision in this all-patriotic picture.

The picture is essentially a spectacle. There are stirring battles on the water, on land and in the air, all of these reaching a high sensational effect. The story brings home with smashing force the horrors which may be blindly invited through insufficient military protection. At the present stage of the world's advancement it is evident that we can no more do without military protection than we can do without police to keep away marauders from our individual homes.

It is not improbable to think that an inadequately protected country may be invaded after the manner of this picture, but the success with which the enemy is able to subdue this country will seem exaggerated to many, as will the ease with which downtrodden America, aided by wonderful inventions, expels the invaders later. But, inasmuch as the picture more than fulfills its mission of being a dynamic object lesson this may be overlooked for the added novelty it creates. Tense situations, tender love interest, thrills, impressive scenes—all are provided for by the story, which serves adequately as the means to the desired end. The strong situations are made all the more powerful by the excellent work of the stars, Harry Morey and Alice Joyce, and the sincere, effective work of the unusual cast, including Peggy Hyland, Joseph Kilgour, Naomi Childers, Walter McGrail and James Morrison.

A huge amount of credit is due J. Stuart Blackton and his assistant in direction, William P. S. Earle, for the great realism both of their spectacular and story-interest scenes, while Mr. Blackton and Cyrus Townsend Brady, who collaborated on the story, are to be complimented on the success with which their story has accomplished its chief end—the arousing of all Americans to the immediate consideration of a momentous issue.

The military advisor of the authors, Capt. Geo. W. Johnston, C. A. C. N. Y., may have been responsible for some very effective diagrams concerning army posts, munition centers, etc. These bring out some enlightening facts. Some of the photography in the picture is worthy of a place in an art exhibition.

The picture is one which should do enormous business for the exhibitor. It is something that will set people thinking and thinking hard. At the Broadway Theater, New York (not the opening night), the audience was deeply stirred and applauded repeatedly.

Mary Ward, an American girl, while abroad, is made love to by Count Dario, son of Marshal Prince Dario, de facto ruler of Ruritania, a country where militarism is uppermost. Being short of money in the treasury, this country regards America as a rich and easy prize. Without any formal declaration of war the Ruritanians swoop down on America, annihilate the Atlantic fleet, together with thousands of untrained soldiers and capture New York, with considerable territory around it. Paul Strong, the virile, public-spirited man with whom Mary has fallen in love, is appointed Director of Energies. Count Dario meets Mary again and the latter sees a chance to be of use for her country by taking advantage of Dario's love. In this duty she shows forth all the glory of her womanhood, as does another woman, who, acting as a modern Joan of Arc, inspires men to enlist by the thousands. The latter is shot in public by "the barbarians" for stirring up so much enthusiasm in the country. After many months of secret preparation on the part of the American people, Strong confronts Marshal Prince Dario and orders him to withdraw his countrymen from our soil. The Prince only scorns him, however, and orders him, together with Mary, whose operations have been discovered, to be shot. How Strong springs a surprise on the Prince, revealing that the Americans have him in their clutches, and that if he insists on the execution he and his own chiefs must die also, and how the American forces immediately descend upon the invaders and drive them from our shores, remains in the balance of the story.

"Apartment 29"

Five-Part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Released April 9. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS picture is quite novel in plot and development. It tells how a dramatic critic is shown through practical demonstration where he is wrong about the play he so harshly condemns as being improbable, foolish, etc. He has criticized the star as not acting after the manner of normal human beings, but in the test the theatrical company puts him to he proves to be even more silly than the star—and admits it after the ruse is finally disclosed to him. The picture makes very acceptable entertainment and will be especially welcome to the habitual photoplay "fans," since its plot is not in the least stereotyped. The interest holds from start to finish and there is very little waste action. Earle Williams is seen at his best as the critic, and he is surrounded with an able cast, Ethel Gray Terry and Denton Vane having the more conspicuous parts. The picture has been given good production and the director made use of many little opportunities for audience appeal. Edward Montagne is the author of the piece; Paul Scardon directed. The picture is up to the standard of the better class program releases.

"Apartment 29" is novel in plot and development.

Stanley Ormsby, after seeing a new play and refusing to have mercy in his write-up, even after being nicely dined by the author, Davis, begins a long line of adventures. A message from his editor sends him to interview an actress. While passing Apartment 29, his attention is called to a woman who has apparently poisoned herself. Entering the apartment he discovers that her husband has been shot. On sending for help Ormsby is unable to prove his reason for being there and is about to be taken into custody when he makes a wild dash for freedom, seeking refuge in the rooms of the playwright, who is living below. Davis accepts a bribe to keep him concealed. At last the supposed wife of the author, unable to bear the strain, tells Ormsby that she is not married to Davis and that she is guilty of the murder. Ormsby and the girl escape together, meeting with some exciting adventures, finally being recaptured. Then the critic learns that he has been duped by a band of actors under the supervision of Davis and it dawns on him that what he said was impossible had been shown to him to be possible. Chagrined, Ormsby rewrites his review.

"Her Official Fathers"

Five-Reel Triangle-Fine Arts Released April 8. Reviewed by George W. Graves

FOR five reels of brisk, light entertainment one need not look farther than "Her Official Fathers," a comedy-drama written by Hugh S. Miller, scenarioized by Roy Somerville and directed by Joseph Henabery and Elmer Clifton. The story has an excellent humorous punch, with clever situations brought out the better through the dainty irresistibleness of Dorothy Gish. She is seen at her positive best in the role of Janice, the wide-awake "chip off the old block" giving it all the bright enthusiasm needed. In fact, the actress seems to be all vivacity. Her close-ups are handled, too, with extreme finesse.

The deceased banker's daughter's intrigue against the two vice-presidents who are trying separately to get control of the bank through her, one endeavoring to marry his son to her and the other entering the matrimonial lists himself, culminates in a number of situations which will be appreciated by any audience. Janice accepts both proposals and arranges things so that both men will come to the house simultaneously, with ministers in tow. After the two indignant bride-grooms have had a more or less strained session, Janice blows in in a riding habit, takes her time about preparing to see her visitors, and finally confronts them with a decided surprise. The latter consists of a letter left her by her shrewd father who has read the future with the accuracy of an astronomer calculating the time of an eclipse. She gathers her visitors into a little circle and proceeds to slyly read the letter, which contains a stinging indictment of both the vice-presidents. However it may sound in words this scene is the signal for some laughs.

The man Janice does marry, after she has explained to the disappointed wooers the hopelessness of their position, is none other than the unassuming clerk in the bank who has long nursed what to him was a love without hope. He has overheard the plot against Janice but been forcefully detained from getting to her. This entails a deal of wild auto riding, in which Janice rescues her lover—prior to her breezing in to the session with the plotting bankers.

Frank Bennett gives one of his best characterizations as Steven, the reticent clerk, and Sam De Grasse and Fred Warren make the rival bankers a source of amusement to the spectator.

The whole picture is a tribute to the efficient work of the author, directors, scenario man and cast. It is one of the best pieces of light comedy entertainment that has come along of late. The exhibitor who knows his patrons like these cheerful, human and amusing stories can count on "Her Official Fathers" to provide them an evening of satisfied recreation.

"The Bottle Imp"

Lasky-Paramount Drama in Five Parts Released March 26. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS is an adaptation, made by Charles Maigne, of Robert Louis Stevenson's story. It lends itself admirably to screen interpretation and in its actual finished state on the celluloid becomes one of the most novel, refreshing, and entertaining photoplays released in the past month. The story is essentially simple. Its dramatic construction is clear, building gradually up to a climax of excellent power. The story is legendary, therefore the element of material conviction is put out of the way at the start and we soar into the unhampered realms of the "Once upon a time" tale. The director, Marshall Neilan, took his company to Hawaii for the staging of the play and as a result unparalleled atmosphere was secured. A novel feature of the picture is that most of the players are either Japs or Hawaiians, Sessue Hayakawa having the leading role. The latter's work in this will boost him yet higher in the regard of the fans. This actor's work is always sincere and interesting.

"The Bottle Imp" is deeply engrossing all the way through, with a generous sprinkling of comedy of the right kind. It is a film of rare pictorial beauty, unique directorial conception and first-rate acting. It should prove an attraction for most any class of house and be exceptionally presentable to children. The strong cast in support of Sessue Hayakawa includes the following players: Lehua Waipahu, H. Komshi, George Kuwa, Guy Oliver and James Neill.

Lopaka, a poor Hawaiian fisherman, is in love with Kokua, a maiden of royal blood, but he is repudiated by the father, who is insulted at the daring of Lopaka to look up to his daughter. The stubborn father tells the equally stubborn lover, however, that when he brings two feather cloaks he can have the girl. Lopaka sets out for the mountain whereon dwells the bird from whose wings the cloaks are made. He encounters a dying priest who sells him a wonderful wishing bottle which will obtain for him anything he desires. Inside of the bottle is the confined spirit of Komo, a god of volcanoes. Lopaka is warned that whoever dies with the bottle in his possession will be consigned to hell and that every respective owner must sell it for less than he bought it.

After being made rich, thus enabling him to ask for the hand of his sweetheart, Lopaka sells the bottle. To his great distress, however, he soon discovers that leprosy has taken its hold upon him. For the sake of Kokua he buys back the bottle for one penny. Later Kokua, to save him from damnation, buys the bottle from him through a friend, with French centimes. However, a drunken sailor with a still smaller coin finally insists on buying the bottle, affirming that he is bound for the regions below anyway, and so the lovers are left in happiness.

He is ably assisted by Alice McChestney, U. K. Haupt and a number of other skilled players who together put entertainment value into a story not very clearly set forth. The attempt of a would-

A number of interesting types are introduced and the story is presented in a light, semi-humorous fashion, with a surprise ending. But the disconnected, rather indistinct course of the unconvincing story causes the release to fall below the high standard set by previous "Black Cats."

The Story: Don Paxton (Webster Campbell), told by editors that his stories lack reality, disguises himself as a "tough," and invades the underworld. There he is mistaken by a band of crooks for one of their number. He enters into the game and learns to know the thieves well. One of them is a girl with whom Don falls in love. Later the gang is captured. Then it is revealed that the girl is really a detective. Don rewrites his story, sells it and introduces the heroine to the editor as his wife.

"Susan's Gentleman"

Violet Mersereau in an Entertaining Five-Reel Bluebird Photoplay. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE principal elements of popular appeal have been incorporated in this pleasing "Bluebird." There is a well liked star playing a fitting and appealing role. There is an interestingly complicated story, with some out of the ordinary features and combining heart interest and humor. The plot is easily followed; the settings are pretty and well photographed, except some of the exterior scenes which are too dark.

Supporting Miss Mersereau are Sidney Mason, who is a satisfactory hero, Maud Cooling, in an adventuress role, Bradley Barker whose acting in the role handsome groom who elopes with Nancy is very good, James O'Neill and William O'Neill. A story by Kate Jordan supplied the plot. Edwin Stevens directed the play. The outline of the story reveals its romantic character. Miss Mersereau's work is entirely satisfactory. The picture is one which can safely be advertised well, for its appeal to the average patron is sure. It is especially well suited for the neighborhood house, and will please women and children.

The Story: Nancy Croyden, daughter of an English nobleman, returns to her home accompanied by a young widow, Ora Tourette, whom she had met in Paris. Ora learns that Sir Bevis Neville, who had formerly loved her, is a suitor for Nancy's hand. Ora is madly jealous and, when she learns that Nancy is infatuated with a good-looking groom, she encourages the affair, which ends in an elopement.

After a lapse of many years, the story is continued in New York and we are introduced to Susan Flynn, Nancy's daughter. Nancy has died, and the girl's father has become a drunkard. Susan, however, manages to dominate her father and get some fun out of life.

Years have not lessened Ora's hatred of Neville, and at last she manages to implicate Tom Neville, the nephew of Sir Bevis, in a murder. Circumstantial evidence is so strong that the youth decides to leave the country, and escapes to America. There he becomes a "boarder" in Susan's home. He is discovered by detectives and taken back to England, where he is convicted of the crime. Later Susan's father dies, after writing a letter to the child's English relatives. Susan's grandfather sends for her and she goes to England. There she learns of the fate of her "boarder." Inspired by a novel she has read, she plots to use her remarkable resemblence to her dead mother to trick Ora into a confession of the falsehood which condemned Neville. The plot works, and Neville is freed. Later he marries Susan.

"The Spirit of Romance"

Five-Reel Pallas-Paramount Released March 22. Reviewed by Geo. W. Graves

"THE SPIRIT OF ROMANCE" is a play that affords pleasurable entertainment chiefly by reason of the delightful work of the star. The story is not unusual and the acting is held at a general poor standard because of the direction. Elaborate, showy production is a feature of the picture, and this, held within the bounds of taste, has given many a picture a luster of "class" which has served in effect to keep faults in the background. Vivian Martin's work in this play would captivate any audience, young or old, and there is every reason to believe that this star enjoys great popularity with the fans. In the support, Herbert Standing, H. F. Crane and George Fisher give good performances.

Some good conclusions in morals are to be drawn from the story. The way the grouchy old millionaire, supposed to be dead, watches from a secret peep-hole in the wall his adopted

Besides this, the millionaire sees himself as others see him, an experience from which no one can emerge unchanged.

In "The Spirit of Romance" we have the work of the star and the general wholesome spirit of the play offsetting an imponderable plot picturized with perceptible "padding." It can be safely prophesied, however, that people in general will feel satisfied with the picture, although Vivian Martin has had better opportunities before.

teresting variation from the usual gray pictures. We do not believe patrons would wish all their pictures colored, but an occasional one pleases. The picture, a costume drama, is especially well suited for coloring.

The plot is simple but interesting, and the acting is good. The role of Annabelle Lee, the heroine, is far removed from Pearl White's usual work, but her admirers will be interested in her appearance under new circumstances. She is well supported by Hal Ford, as the villain, Warner Richmond, and Fuller Mellish, as his grandfather. The direction of the picture is good. There is a certain quaint flavor to the offering which sets it apart from the usual type of play.

The Story: Annabelle Lee, home from a young ladies' school, falls in love with Warner Richmond, a polished scoundrel. They are married, but Richmond insists that this be kept a secret during the lifetime of his grandfather, whose heir he is. When the old man dies, Richmond has become infatuated with an opera singer and, after destroying the record of his marriage to Annabelle, he weds the singer.

Annabelle is heart-broken, but later marries a young doctor who has always loved her. Richmond and the singer are not happy together and finally separate, after Richmond's inheritance has been exhausted. Richmond, his health shattered, returns to his old home. The young doctor is called to attend him, and learns by accident of Annabelle's previous marriage. Annabelle, her secret revealed, plans to commit suicide. But Richmond is killed in a fire when, in delirium, he overturns a lamp, and the doctor overcomes his jealousy and forgives Annabelle.

"The Law That Failed"

Five-Reel Art-Dramas Photodrama Produced by Apollo. Reviewed by George W. Graves

A FORCEFULLY dramatic story in this picture has been built up around a weakness in the law which makes it compulsory for a man logically found guilty of murder to be released because there is no material evidence of the victim's death—that is, his body cannot be found, although it is proven to the court's satisfaction that he has been assassinated. The story, by Louis Reeves Harrison, is one of the best that Art-Dramas have availed themselves of for production. Had more time been spent on its production and more attention paid to detail, the result would have been much more convincing than it is as it now stands, although it is fine detective drama now. Some of the action was not given a clear exposition, a discrepancy which could easily have been avoided, and the subtitles, using "ze," and like words denoting a French speaker (not at all true to life) are not convincing, although they were probably intended for popular appeal. To make matters all the more inconsistent, the speaker was intended to be a Spaniard. A scene where storm effects are needed is handled decidedly amateurishly by having someone outside the window throw handfuls of material across the window opening, this jerky spectacle supposed to represent snow. The audience notices things like this now-a-days.

A forcefully dramatic story—"The Law That Failed."

"The Law That Failed" has the elements of mystery and suspense. It is a play that tends to excite interest on the part of the spectator. We would call it a better than the average program feature in entertainment value.

Complete Record of Current Films

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc.). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the italic letter S meaning a split reel.

Circumstantial Evidence—Chapter One of Railroad Raiders series—Signal Film Corp.—April 9.—Featuring Helen Holmes. Receiving many complaints of thefts along the road, Homer Frost makes a tour of inspection and catches the agent at Garden City in the act of stealing cases of canned goods. Steve Arnold, the agent, is arrested, but escapes, and catches a freight headed for Deer's Head. David Holmes, assisted by his daughter, Helen Holmes, is station agent at Deer's Head. He receives a telegram saying seventeen thousand dollars will be sent on No. 7. As Steve Arnold loiters around the station at Deer's Head a gust of wind blows the telegram out of the office window and it lands at his feet and he picks it up. Thrown off the top of a train where he is stealing a ride out of Deer's Head, Arnold lands near a party of confidence men and becomes leader of the gang. The reading of the telegram coupled with the discovery that one of the gang closely resembles Holmes leads to their seizing Holmes and holding him in the back room while Masters dons his uniform. Even Helen did not notice the deception and receiving the money from the train handed it to her supposed father. Immediately the gang escape with the money. Word is sent of the theft and Frost arrives to investigate. Holmes is accused of the theft and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment, although there was only circumstantial evidence to prove his guilt. Morton Webb assures Holmes that he will look after Helen.

Her Hero—(One Reel)—Strand Comedy—April 11.—Featuring Billie Rhodes. Jack is going to call on Billie, with whom he is very much in love. He wears his chum's suit and leaves his wallet in his other clothes. In a hired car, he takes Billie and her sister to a Country Club, where he discovers his loss. A thief snatches Billie's purse, and after a long chase Jack gets the purse back. In desperation he takes out a bill intending to put it back later. They go in for tea and Jack pays the waiter with the "borrowed" bill, when Billie looking in her purse exclaims that the thief stole a counterfeit bill she had been carrying. Jack, terrorstricken, rushes the girls out and the waiter and house detective pursue them. Jack's car breaks down, and running back to see if he is followed, the detective siezes him and takes him back to the club. The girls go on home, Billie paying for the car. Jack's chum finds the wallet and brings it to him at the club. Jack does not know how to explain matters but decides to muss himself up and tell Billie he fought a hand of ruffians to recover her note. He comes in limping. Billie believes the story and accepts Jack on the spot.

The Gypsy Prince—Cub Comedy—(One Reel)—April 12.—Featuring George Ovey. Jerry appropriates a wallet left beneath some bushes by two footpads. The money has been stolen and the police, seeing Jerry with the money arrest him. By a ruse he escapes with it and rides off on one of the cop's horses. Arriving at the camp of some gypsies Jerry is soon smitten with the daughter of the chief, who is known as "Little Sister." Hank also loves her and wants to make way with Jerry. The Chief will not allow this, coveting the horse that Jerry rides and hoping to trade his daughter Ophelia for it. Jerry thinks he will get "Little Sister" by the trade and agrees, but wilts when Ophelia is brought on the scene. He jumps on his horse and rides away, followed by Hank and the two have a fight on the edge of the cliff. Jerry throws Hank over the cliff, only to be surprised by the other gypsies, who send him crashing over the precipice. Little Sister rushes to the rescue and throws him a rope. As Jerry reaches the top Hank follows the climb. Little Sister attempts to make love to Jerry but he has bad enough of gypsies and rides away to the police station where he returns both horse and money, to the delight of the astonished cops.

The Mitzer Murder—Fourth Episode of Jimmie Dale series—(Two Reels)—April 13.—Featuring E. K. Lincoln. Jimmie Dale, millionaire clubman, through the influence of his friend, Carruthers, acts as cub reporter in the Mitzer murder mystery. The dead man was found with a Grey Seal on his forehead and then Capt. Clayton, a police officer, fastens the blame on a well-known crook. He attempts to collect the reward of $25,000 and claims that the murderer, Stace Morse, an illiterate dope, is the Grey Seal. As a matter of honor, Jimmie determines to prove that the Grey Seal is not implicated, which he does by discovering Clayton's finger print on the enlarged picture of the Grey Seal taken on the Man's head. He makes Clayton confess that he stole the Grey Seal from the police collection and pasted it upon the dead man to help him collect the reward by claiming that the murderer was the Grey Seal. In the meantime, the Woman in Black, leader of the Crime Club, traps Marie La Salle to a hotel room and they have a fierce battle, which ends favorably for Marie, who is rescued by Jimmie Dale.

Jolted Justice—(Two Reels)—Vogue—April 14.—A flirty judge and his wife, the president of the Purity League, are sojurning at a popular beach resort. While his wife is attending a meeting of the League the judge visits the tents of the diving girls and Hula Hula dancers. The Purity League decides to arrest all the girls for wearing one piece bathing suits. They are brought before the judge who gives them a suspended sentence and a wink. While trying to get under the tent to watch the Hula Hula girls the judge loses his trousers and has to don a Hula Hula skirt to hide his nakedness. The League arrests the Hula Hula girls and the judge hurries to court where his skirt is hidden behind the desk but he stands up as the prisoners are brought in and his Hula Hula skirt is seen, he is disgraced by the Purity League and taken home to answer by his wife.

WAKE UP!
Motion Picture Industry

AN APPEAL FOR UNITY

To All Who Have the Welfare of the Motion Picture Industry at Heart

We the undersigned Exhibitor Directors in the National Association of Motion Picture Industry, representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the United States, call attention to the following facts that need your immediate consideration and co-operation.

What You Have

The National Association of Motion Picture Industry, located at Times Square Bldg., New York City, is in existence for the sole purpose of harmonizing, uplifting and assisting the whole Industry, and especially to protect the Industry from unjust attacks of all kinds and adverse legislation in every City and State.

What Many of You Don't Make Use of

The National Association is not accomplishing all the objects and good for which it is instituted because of the simple reason that a great many exhibitors, producers, manufacturers, distributors, players, supply and equipment companies, have as yet not become members and take little or no interest in the work being accomplished by the National Association.

Here Is How We Feel About It

The National Association can and is doing a great work in protecting the Industry but the immediate needs are far in excess of the available remedies.

We believe the lack of interest exists because the majority of the Industry do not appreciate or understand the dire necessity of having a United Industry.

We have faith that there are enough men and women of broad minds, foresight, and full handed, in this Industry who will respond to this appeal. Therefore, we take this means of asking you to affiliate with the National Association of Motion Picture Industry. From the greater star to the office boy in the studio; from the smallest exhibitor to the largest; and especially every producer and distributor, we ask you one and all to make it your duty to become a member of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry at once..

To find out who are interested in a greater Industry we suggest that you please fill out the following and send today, in care of this Journal.

Exhibitor Directors N. A. M. P. I., Care Motography, Chicago, Ill.

I am interested in assisting in every manner I can in furthering the work of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry, to the end that our Industry shall be better protected, uplifted, and united.

Chicago News

HARRY L. LEONHARDT, western Fox representative, is at the Pacific coast putting general pep into the various Foxy branches.

C. B. Price, local McClure's representative, has gone to New York on a business trip.

Three companies are now hard at work at the Selig studios. Other than two dramatic companies, star comedians are engaged in the production of "slap-stick" fun.

Edgar Hopp, son of Joseph Hopp, president of the Chicago branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, has opened offices in the Masonic Temple building, room 509, and will engage in the motion picture accessories and supply trade. The firm name of the business will be E. Hopp & Company. He represents the American Standard Motion Picture Machine Company. The Chicago office is to be made a factory branch. The firm will handle the American Standard machines, machine parts, spot lights and other supplies made under the Standard trademark. Mr. Hopp has a large acquaintance among theater men of the city. He is a licensed operator and a member of the operators' union. He extends an invitation to the exhibitors of the city to visit him at the Masonic Temple building.

NED HOLMES "ENGAGED"

Aaron J. Jones, president of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, announces the engagement of Ned Holmes as general manager for the exploitation of Geraldine Farrar in "Joan, the Woman" in Illinois and Indiana. Mr. Holmes has by this time joined the staff. He is favorably known as the man who put over the big campaigns for "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" and "Treasure Island" in Chicago and was the exploiter of Captain Scott's South Pole Expedition. He will work in conjunction with Ralph Kettering in booking and generally supervising the exploit of "Joan the Woman" in the cities outside of Chicago.

The K. E. S. E. headquarters are now settled in the Chapin-Gore building on West Adams street, the removal from New York having been accomplished last week.

Citizen soldiers are preparing themselves for the call of their country by attending the performance of "Joan the Woman" at the Colonial. Aaron Jones, president of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, has opened the doors of the Randolph street house to all men wearing the khaki. The deeds of the immortal Joan of Arc, as impersonated by Geraldine Farrar, holds an inspiration for every modern man.

The Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Inc., have added another special feature film to their state rights purchases, this week, by a deal with Sol Lesser, of San Francisco, for the Illinois, Indiana and southern Wisconsin territory on "The Ne'er Do Well," Selig's famous picturization of the popular novel by Rex Beach.

Moderate trading and small changes in prices marked trading in film stocks this week.

Biograph Company: There has been rather urgent demand for this stock, and the bid price has advanced from $12 to $15 per share. There is very little stock obtainable around current quotations and the market seems likely to sell considerably higher.

Filmcraft Corporation: This company has secured the motion picture rights to poems and stories of Walt Mason.

Greater Vitagraph Company: There has been some inquiry for stock of this company, but no trading has been reported. The company is getting out several elaborate re-issues of former successes.

Mutual Film Corporation: Lack of definite information as to when dividends may be resumed on the common and preferred stock, and lack of figures showing earnings of the company, have induced a number of stockholders to put stock on the market and prices have declined to about the lowest figures in the history of the company, sales of common having been made as low as 20, and preferred at 30. People inside the company are advising their friends to buy stock at the present level.

Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company: This company is now doing quite an extensive business in producing films for advertising purposes, and is supplying same to many of the large industrial corporations.

Triangle Film Corporation: Although sales of this company's stock have recently been made as low as $1.50 per share, the business of the company appears to be growing, as several of the subsidiary companies have made extensive additions to their plants, especially at Culver City and Hollywood, California.

This decision means that we have declined one million dollars in cash from men ready to pay in advance for regional franchises or become our zone partners.

No middleman will step in between Goldwyn's owners and the Goldwyn exhibitors. No outside agents or third parties can do for the theatre-owners what Goldwyn itself can do.

The right kind of parents never send their children to institutions or farm them out to strangers. Goldwyn wishes to follow its productions into your house and aid you in their presentation. This important decision is made because we have tremendous confidence in our productions, our stars, our authors and our future achievements.

Extensive Picture Tax Proposed

EXHIBITORS, PRODUCERS AND OPERATORS HIT BY NEW YORK STATE PLAN

IN spite of the fact that the Wheeler committee, appointed for the purpose by the New York legislature, made a complete investigation of the picture industry, and reported that the business should not at this time be subjected to any additional taxation, there is to be, or has been by the time you read this account, introduced in the New York state legislature a bill which provides for sweeping taxation on several branches of the industry.

According to reports the proposed measure will tax not only the manufacturer but the smallest exhibitor as well and every operator in the state. It is expected that more than $150,000 annually will be turned into the state treasury through the means of this special taxation.

All Positive Film to Be Taxed

A graduating scale of taxation has been arranged for all positive prints, and a sliding scale of license fees for exhibitors owning theaters ranging in capacity above 2,000.

Unless the bill is killed altogether or greatly modified, disastrous effects will result to the industry in New York. Film men are actively engaged in mustering forces against the proposed measure.

The bill proposes a commissioner with wide powers, to be appointed by the governor and senate, for a term of five years, the duty of this office being to regulate the trade with regard to the quality of pictures, and to see to its taxation. The tax levied is extremely heavy, and embraces every branch of the industry. Producers must pay a license fee of $200, distributors $300, and exhibitors from $5 to $200, according to the seating capacity of their houses. Operators of projection machines are also subject to examination and a tax of $2.

While in a general way the regulation follows certain lines advocated by prominent members of the industry before the Wheeler committee, nothing so drastic was expected. The tax, in particular, it is felt, is ruinous. Led by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, a vigorous attack upon the bill in its entirety will be made, the impression being general that no compromise is possible under the circumstances. The executive committee of the National Association has already directed that a telegram be sent to Assemblyman Wheeler, saying that the proposed bill is so unjust and unfair that the organization is unalterably opposed to it.

Main Clauses of the Bill

The important clauses of the bill follow:

Sec. 213. Motion Picture Department: Commissioner. A State department is hereby created to be known as the motion picture department. The head of such department shall be the commissioner of motion pictures. He shall be appointed for a term of five years. He shall receive an annual salary of (undesignated) dollars. A commissioner may after notice and an opportunity to be heard be removed by the governor for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or misconduct in office.

Sec. 219. Subordinates. The commissioner may appoint such deputies, inspectors and other assistants as may be needed, fix their compensation within the amounts appropriated therefor, and prescribe their powers and duties.

All Branches to Be Licenced

Section 219-d. Producers, Distributors, Exhibitors and Operators to be Licensed. Except as otherwise provided in this article, after September 1, 1917, no person, firm or corporation shall engage in the business of producing, distributing or exhibiting motion pictures in this state, and no person shall operate a machine for projecting motion pictures, unless licensed as provided in this article. A separate exhibitors' license shall be obtained for each place of exhibition. This section shall not be deemed to require any person to obtain an operator's license for operating a miniature motion picture apparatus, so-called, which uses only an enclosed incandescent electric film and approved acetate of cellulose or slow-burning films and is of such construction that films ordinarily used on full sized commercial picture apparatus cannot be used therewith.

Sec. 219-f. Application for License of Operator: Examinations. Application for a license to operate a machine for projecting motion pictures shall be filed with the commissioner and shall state the full name and address of the applicant, and such other matters as the commissioner shall require; and shall be accompanied with a photograph of the applicant taken within thirty days prior to the filing of the application. Before such a license is granted the applicant shall pass such examination as the commissioner shall require. No such license shall be issued to any person under 18 years of age. The commissioner may refuse to issue or renew an operator's license if he deem the applicant not qualified to receive such license and the refusal of the commissioner may be reviewed by a writ of certiorari. The commission in his discretion may renew an operator's license without a re-examination.

The License Fees

The following annual fees shall be paid for licenses issued under this article:

1. By an applicant for a producer's license, $200.
2. By an applicant for a distributor's license, $300.
3. By an applicant for an exhibitor's license, $5, if the place of exhibition has a seating capacity of 300 or less; $10 if the place of exhibition has a seating capacity of more than 300, and not more than 600; $25 if the place of exhibition has a seating capacity of more than 600 and not more than 1,000; $50 if the place of exhibition has a seating capacity of more than 1,000 and not more than 1,500; $100 if the place of exhibition has a seating capacity of more than 1,500 and not more than 2,000; $200 if the place of exhibition has a seating capacity of more than 2,000.
4. By an applicant for an operator's license, $2.00.

Sec. 219-i. Issuance and Exhibition of License. Upon the filing of an application for a producer's, distributor's or exhibitor's license, accompanied with a receipt from the state treasurer showing the payment of the proper fee, the commissioner shall issue such license. Upon the passing of a satisfactory examination by an applicant for an operator's license and the payment of such license fee, if the commissioner shall deem the applicant a qualified and responsible person, he shall issue such license. The form of a license issued under this article shall be prescribed by the commissioner. Each producer's or distributor's license shall be kept displayed at all times at the principal office of the producer or distributor within the state. Each exhibitor's license shall be kept conspicuously displayed at all times in the place of exhibition near the entrance.

Licenses May Be Revoked

Sec. 219-l. Revocation or Suspension of License. The commissioner may revoke or suspend the license of any producer or distributor who shall have produced or distributed the positive of three or more motion pictures, the exhibition of which shall have been lawfully prohibited by the commissioner. The commissioner may revoke or suspend the license of any exhibitor who shall exhibit any motion picture the exhibition of which shall have been so prohibited. The commissioner may revoke or suspend the license of an operator found by him to be incompetent or to have been guilty of misconduct in his occupation or employment as an operator. The commissioner may also revoke the license of any producer, distributor, exhibitor or operator who shall violate the rule of the commissioner or be convicted of a violation of any provision of this article.

Sec. 219-m. License Tax on Positive Prints. No motion picture, the negative of which is produced after July 1, 1917, shall be exhibited, nor any film or positive therefor sold, leased or distributed unless the tax imposed by this section shall have been paid. A tax is hereby imposed upon every positive of a motion picture to be sold, leased, distributed, or exhibited within the state, based upon the cost per foot of producing the negative, as follows:

The commissioner shall thereupon compute the tax on such positive and for such purpose may require additional proof as to the cost of producing the negative. Such tax shall be paid into the state treasury and a receipt issued therefor. Upon the presentation of such receipt the commissioner shall assign to such positive a serial number, and indicate on the positive in such manner as he may determine the payment of such tax.

Exemptions

Sec. 219-n. Exemptions. The provisions of this article requiring an exhibitor's license shall not apply to the exhibition of motion pictures, with or without charge for admission, conducted under the direct management of educational or religious institutions, or held or given in conjunction with and incidental to banquets, receptions, exhibitions or dances, nor a motion picture exhibition without charge for admission, given or held not more than once a week in private residences or in bona fide, social, scientific, political and athletic clubs. Every such exhibition, however, shall be subject to the inspection of the commissioner or a person duly authorized by him. The provisions of this article imposing a tax upon the positives of motion pictures shall not apply to the positives of motion pictures exhibited only in accordance with the provisions of this section, which are of a historical, educational, scientific or religious character.

Censorship of Pictures

Sec. 219-q. Suppression of Improper Pictures. Whenever the commissioner shall determine that a motion picture exhibited, or about to be exhibited in this state is improper, impure, immoral, lewd, obscene, indecent or unpatriotic, or tends to demoralize the young, he may, by order, prohibit the exhibition of any such picture, after a date specified in the order. A copy of such order and a notice that the exhibition of such motion picture in violation of the order, will subject the exhibitor to a revocation of his license, shall be made or delivered to each licensed motion picture exhibitor in this state.

Sec. 219-r. Offenses. A person or corporation who

1. Sells or leases or offers for sale a positive print upon which a tax is imposed under this article, or exhibits a motion picture therewith, unless such tax shall have been paid; or

3. Causes the publication or posting of advertising matter of an immoral, obscene, impure or indecent character relating to the exhibition of a motion picture; or

4. Alters or intentionally mutilates any film or positive print of a motion picture; or

5. Exhibits a motion picture without the consent of the distributor; or

6. Produces a negative by photographing a positive and printing positives from such negative without the consent of the owner; or

Is guilty of a misdemeanor.

A director, officer, agent or employe of a corporation who does or concurs in doing or authorizes the doing of any act in violation of this section shall be liable to prosecution and conviction for such violation. The conviction of a corporation of a violation of this section shall not relieve a director or officer, agent or employe thereof from prosecution under this section.

Sec. 2. This act shall take effect immediately.

Lasky Produces Hawaiian Legends

After the success scored by Lehua Waipahu, the clever Hawaiian actress who is seen in support of Sessue Hayakawa in the Lasky-Paramount adaptation of Robert Louis Stevenson's "The Bottle Imp," the Lasky Company engaged Miss Waipahu to prepare for them a series of photodramatic scenarios founded on the wonderful legends and folk stories of the Hawaiian Islands.

Notice to Indiana Exhibitors

The meeting will be a strictly business meeting and a closed session for exhibitors only. Very important matters will be taken up and it is requested that all exhibitors in the state shall be present.

This meeting will take the place of the regular quarterly meeting which would come in May but has been called earlier on account of urgent matters that need attention.—Frank Rembusch, State President; Ray Andrews, State Secretary.

Triangle Makes Important Announcement

ALLOWS EXHIBITORS CHOICE OF PROGRAM OR OPEN BOOKING

TRIANGLE is about to put into effect a new service which will combine the best features of the program system together with the advantages that attend open market booking. This is one of the most radical steps that have ever been taken by any of the large film organizations, and it is expected will do much to clear up the present unsatisfactory conditions obtaining in the picture market.

R. W. France, general manager of the Triangle Distributing Corporation of New York, has issued the following statement relative to this new distributing plan.

General Manager France's Statement

"I have just received a letter from W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, which is at present in Los Angeles, in which he has outlined in detail the new plan which has been adopted in order to afford to our exhibitors a more flexible booking schedule than has ever been offered before under the program system.

"We have realized that the greatest problem confronting the exhibitor for some time past has been whether to use program service or to go into the open market for his features. We have seen this problem growing more acute from day to day.

"While we are firmly convinced as to the soundness of the program method of distribution and thoroughly believe that this method will inevitably survive all others, we nevertheless realize that the present chaotic and unsettled conditions (brought about principally by sky rocket promotion tactics and irresponsible and destructive management), make it necessary for us to inaugurate some modification of the program idea. We have endeavored to formulate a plan which will enable our exhibitors to book productions of the more pretentious type without being forced to relinquish their valuable program contracts. Briefly, our new plan is as follows:

The New Plan

"Beginning on or about the first Sunday in June and continuing thereafter on or about the first of every month we shall issue a special production in place of the regular program release scheduled for that date. These special productions we shall confine to one a month unless we find that conditions call for an increase in this number. In that case we contemplate issuing as many as may be needed to keep Triangle exhibitors where they rightfully belong, at the head of the procession. These special productions can be roughly classed as:

"1. Productions featuring the biggest and best stars obtainable, regardless of cost. We have no intention of trying to corner the star market as we realize the futility of any such attempt in view of the fact that each week sees some new star leaping into prominence. We will have available at all times stars of great popularity and drawing power.

"2. Unusual productions by such master-directors as Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, Allan Dwan and others. These productions will be of the quality of "Civilization," "Mickey," "Peggy," etc.

"3. Productions having extraordinary drawing power because of special publicity or advertising or,—productions containing exceptional features which make them box office attractions of unusual merit. All of these special features, which will probably be known as Super-Triangles, will contain some or all of the foregoing qualities. They will be super-productions in the truest sense. They are being secured primarily for the benefit of our Triangle exhibitors and, in order that they may obtain every possible advantage and profit from them, we have arranged to submit three options to our exhibitors one of which is the privilege of absolute rejection, which thus provides them with a free period in which to book special productions obtained elsewhere should they so desire. The preceding statement will give some idea of the broadness of the policy we are adopting."

Exhibitor's Options

"The Triangle exhibitor may avail himself of any one of three options:

"1. He can book the special picture. A schedule of prices is being arranged which will little more than cover our costs. Our plan does not include any idea of making large profits on these productions but rather to allow our exhibitors to book them at a price which will enable them to make a profit, and this is practically assured to them as they will not have to pay for some program release which must lie on the shelf.

"2. In the event of his rejecting the special production the exhibitor may re-book any Triangle subject which he has already shown at a fifty per cent reduction from the price he originally paid for this subject.

"3. In case the exhibitor does not care to book the special production or re-book a Triangle program feature, he is free to go into the open market. He will be under no rental charge to us for the period on his program which is left open through our release of the special production.

"The purpose of this plan, we are frank to say, is to supply to our exhibitors a type of production which we cannot afford to give them for the moderate sum paid for our regular program service. We will say, however, that we look forward to a time when we will be able to furnish these special productions at program rates and when that time comes (which will be just as soon as our volume of business is great enough to make it possible), this policy will be put into immediate execution. I do not mean to convey any impression, however, that we will lower our standard of program production. We are proud to believe that Triangle is the best program on the market and we mean to keep it so. The recent changes in the arrangements of our producing company guarantee to the exhibitor that the Triangle program will maintain uniformly the high standard which the names of Ince, Sennett and Dwan assure to our entire product.

Advantage to Exhibitor

"The special advantage accruing to Triangle exhibitors under our new plan lies in the fact that they can secure productions of the highest value obtainable without being compelled to pay two rentals, as has heretofore been necessary. Thus they are enjoying all the benefits of the program method of booking and at the same time are being offered an opportunity to book in the open market should they so desire. I might say, however, that having in mind our plans for special Triangle productions I am not inclined to believe that very many of our exhibitors will pass over these features.

"I wish that I might quote Mr. Hodkinson's entire letter but I realize that this is not possible and so I shall only quote one or two sentences:

Just now we are concerned with doing things which will stabilize and bring permanency to the business of producing, renting and exhibiting motion pictures, regardless of any immediate profit to us.

Destructive methods will sometimes win at first and may even return a certain amount of easy money but in the last analysis it isn't the money-mad promotor and get-rich-quick investor who achieve the greater success, but the saner, more careful man who moves conservatively but constructively forward to permanent prosperity.

"It is principles such as these which are dictating the future policy of Triangle. We are out with the avowed intention of giving exhibitors what they want and to give it to them at as low a price as is consistent with the high class production for which the Triangle plays are noted.

"The unsettled conditions which obtain at present in the film industry cannot long endure. Nevertheless they must be met in order that we may win through to eventual prosperity. The wholesale exploiting of exhibitors must run its course and just as certainly must have an end. I wish to go on record as having said that when another year's history of this industry has been written the majority of exhibitors will look back and realize that the fight which the Triangle distributing and producing organizations are now planning will have been largely responsible in restoring the motion picture industry to a normal and healthful condition."

New Names on Board of Review

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures is adding to the membership of its national advisory committee the names of a number of men and women in different parts of the country who are closely in touch with the exhibition of motion pictures in their communities from a disinterested point of view. Among those who have recently been elected are:

G. R. Radley, president of the citizens' commission on motion pictures of Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Walter W. Nicholson, commissioner of public safety of Syracuse, New York; D. Hiden Ramsey, commissioner of public safety of Asheville, North Carolina; Sergeant Richard Gamble of the police department of Providence who is charged with the regulation of motion pictures in that city; Mrs. Margaret D. Conway who has charge of the supervision of the exhibition of motion pictures in Denver, Colorado, and D. G. Johnson, commissioner of public safety, Colorado Springs, Colorado.

In this adding to the membership of its National Advisory Committee, the National Board of Review is seeking to add to its avenues of information regarding enlightened public sentiment in the several communities. The chief function of the national advisory committee is that of answering from time to time the questionnaires bearing upon different phases of motion pictures.

The national advisory committee includes the names of many persons well known in different parts of the country extending from Massachusetts to California. Among those who may be mentioned are:

W. A. Percy of Atlanta, Ga.; John M. Casey, who has charge of the regulation of motion pictures in Boston; Rev. Dr. D. Parkes Cadman of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Dean Shailer Mathews of Chicago; Miss Charlotte Rumbold of Cleveland, Ohio; Dan C. Beard of Flushing, N. Y.; Miss Mary Gray Peck of Geneva, N. Y., member of the motion picture survey committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; Dr. Albert Shiels, superintendent of schools of Los Angeles, Calif.; Charles Stelzle of Maplewood, N. J., the well-known Labor Forum leader; Mrs. Charles W. Cartwright, chairman of the motion picture survey committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and Robbins Gilman of Minneapolis, Minn.; Anson Phelps Stokes, secretary of Yale University, New Haven, Conn.; M. Straus, Talcott Williams, director of the School of Journalism, Columbia University, and Rabbi Stephen S. Wise.

Sharpshooting at Censorship

MR. EXHIBITOR:—If your theater is in a neighborhood where the censorship evil threatens, you can do much to offset the unjust agitation if you make a poster from the following terse remarks by Mary Gray Peck, of the Motion Picture Committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs. Ask your local newspaper to reprint it. Show it on your screen.

"Moving pictures are going to save our civilization from the destruction which has successively overwhelmed every civilization of the past.

"They provide what every previous civilization has lacked—namely, a means of relief, happiness and mental inspiration for the people at the bottom.

"As long as a ticket stays around the price of a drink, the saloon has to reckon with the first rival that ever has been able to compete with it and beat it.

"Unless these unwise, ill-considered, and unjustified attacks of legislative bodies cease, motion pictures will be placed beyond the reach of the people of small means." —Mary Gray Peck.

Exhibitors Fight Infantile Paralysis

The executive board of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northtwest, together with forty exhibitors of the Twin Cities, have voted to assist the Minnesota State Board of Health and the Minneapolis anti-tuberculosis committee in their campaign for sanitation.

Slides will be run at all theaters in an effort to educate the public regarding the necessity and methods of preventing the spread of disease. Health officials consider that this education through the theaters will be quite as effective as through the press. Special attention will be given to instruction regarding infantile paralysis, for the doctors are fearful of a return of the epidemic this summer.

Facts about the communicable diseases from typhoid to meningitis—their prevalence in Minnesota, method of spread, effects and the like will be presented with views of actual conditions in homes and schools conducive to contagion.

Exhibitors Defeat Censorship

The legislative committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Corporation of the Northwest has done some unusually effective work in defeating the censorship bills which were introduced in a recent session of the state legislature.

One of these bills was introduced by Senator Hammer and called itself "An act to provide for the regulation and licensing of motion picture theaters, films, machines and operators thereof, advertisers and advertisements thereof, regulating the conduct of such entertainments and prescribe the punishment for violation of same." The license requirements were made detailed and expensive to theaters and the exhibitors of the Northwest are to be congratulated in having killed the measure.

John Jasper, for the past year manager of the Horsley studios, has resigned, leaving March 31.

National Association Meets

INDUSTRY'S OFFICIAL ORGANIZATION OPPOSES PROPOSED TAX BILL

AT the last meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, consideration was given to a draft of the proposed bill to be introduced in the legislature at Albany carrying out the recommendations of the joint legislative committee appointed last January to investigate the motion picture industry. It was decided that the proposed motion picture license and tax bill was so unjust and unfair that the National Association is opposed to it.

The Executive Committee recommended the appointment of a legal and legislative committee to be composed of attorneys representing the companies which are members of the National Association. Upon the return to the city of President William A. Brady, a committee of about fifteen attorneys will be appointed to serve in this capacity and in the future all legal and legislative matters will be referred to this committee.

Ask for Fifteen-Cent Piece

One of the first acts of this new committee will be the preparation of a bill to be introduced in Congress, providing for the coinage of a fifteen-cent piece, this subject having been favorably acted upon at the recent meeting of the directors. Upon advice of the director of the mint it will be necessary to secure an act of Congress authorizing the coinage of this new denominational coin.

The campaign inaugurated by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in the interest of preparedness was highly commended by the executive committee through a resolution adopted unanimously and a copy of which is to be forwarded to Arthur James, president of the Advertisers' Association. The executive committee went on record as desirous of co-operating to the fullest extent with the Advertisers' Association in the furthering and developing of this campaign, which, it is contended, will be of tremendous benefit to the administration at Washington at this particular moment.

New Members for Association

The following companies were unanimously elected to membership at yesterday's meeting: Goldwyn Pictures Corp., represented by Samuel Goldfish, Producer Class A; Sanger Picture Plays Corp., represented by Eugene Sanger, Producer Class A; E. I. S. Motion Picture Corp., represented by Dixon Boardman, Producer Class C; Charters Feature Films, represented by Lucille Chapin, Producer Class B; Argus Laboratories, represented by Frank T. Elliott, Producer Class C, and Acme Lithographing Co., represented by L. P. Weber, Supply and Equipment Class No. 3.

There are now thirty-one producing companies and ten distributing companies affiliated with the National Association. In addition to these the following individuals were elected to membership in General Division, Class 5: J. Robert Rubin, R. W. France, Jesse L. Lasky, Whitman Bennett, Emil E. Shauer, Roswell Dague, Thos. S. Barrett, Wm. E. Allen, Hiram Abrams, C. C. Burr, Charles R. Moyers, J. Albert Thorny, Wm. W. Hines, Lloyd Robinson, James Steele, Arthur S. Friend, James Gilloon, Hector Turnbull, Maurice O'Hare, W. S. Butterfield and E. C. Beatty.

In the absence of President William A. Brady, who was out of town, and Chairman Walter W. Irwin, who was unable to be present, William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corp., presided at the meeting, which was attended by J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Films; P. A. Powers, Universal Film Mfg. Co.; Arthur James, Metro Pictures Corp.; Samuel H. Trigger, Exhibitors' League of America; Louis F. Blumenthal, Auditorium Theater, Jersey City; Louis L. Levine, Regent Theater, Brooklyn; Judge A. P. Tugwell of Los Angeles, a director of the association; Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary, and William N. Seabury.

Considerable routine business was transacted, including authorization to arrange for a lease for another year of rooms 805 and 806 in the Times building, now occupied as offices by the National Association.

BROOKLYN EXHIBITORS ELECT

William Brandt Becomes President—Advance Deposits and Other Subjects Discussed—Music Question to Come Before Chicago Convention

The exhibitors of Brooklyn, New York, have held their annual election and the following officers will hold office for the coming year: President, William Brandt; first vice-president, Rudolph Sanders; second vice-president, H. Clark Mooney; treasurer, Robert Israel; financial secretary, William Bland; recording secretary, Samuel Lesselbaum; sergeant-at-arms, Adolph Stockheimer; Board of Directors, John Manheimer, Otto Lederer, J. Schaeffer, M. W. Lane, William Hollender, Henry Haring, Charles Craniders. The big meeting was held at the Triangle Theater.

The Brooklyn League has a very healthy treasury, there being a balance of $1,500 and no debts. The league passed a resolution condemning the use of their screens for the purpose of giving publicity to individuals who are exploiting any particular propaganda or social movement, such as birth control. This will eliminate any possible objections on the part of patrons that the theaters are taking sides on publicly discussed questions.

Several other questions of extreme importance to the entire industry were taken up and acted upon. The question of being assessed by the Authors' Society for the use of copyrighted music was fully discussed and it was decided in view of its national importance to defer action until the matter could be placed before the national convention at Chicago in July. The following resolution was unanimously passed:

A committee was appointed to devise a plan whereby the organization could act as security, where the exchanges request an advance deposit and the zeal of this committee was evidenced by the fact that in spite of the lateness of the hour, it immediately convened and organized.

A banquet will be tendered shortly to the outgoing and incoming officers. Judge Tugwell of Los Angeles acted in the capacity of teller during the election and was given a rising vote of thanks. Sam Trigger, the venerable president of the New York Local, spoke on the Sunday question and clearly outlined the necessity of concerted action.

The meeting adjourned in the wee sma' hours of the morning.

Advertisers Campaign Grows

The campaign of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, on behalf of the army and navy enlistment, and the rousing of patriotism throughout the country through the medium of the screen, has reached such a point that E. Lanning Masters, the secretary of the association, has presented it to the members of the National Consul of Defense at Washington. This report was made to the members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at their last regular weekly meeting in New York. The various adjuncts to the campaign, such as film leaders and trailers, slides, posters, newspaper advertisements and stories were collected and sent by special delivery to Washington for this purpose after having been approved by the members in executive session.

Further than this, it was decided to elect one member of the Association to be in constant touch with the Vigilantes, an association of writers and artists which is working along the same lines, and with which the association has been in constant touch from the start. A closer association is not only desired by the Vigilantes, but by the A. M. P. A. as well, and Charles Moyer, of Paramount, was elected to represent the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in this respect. Mr. Moyer was invested with power in order that any decision requiring immediate action might not be delayed. As it is at present, the Vigilantes and the A. M. P. A. are working in the greatest harmony, and the field which each has chosen is being harmoniously covered by both.

A vote of thanks was given to the entire trade press for the wonderful co-operation and support which they gave to the National Duty Committee last week. Many of the papers far exceeded the amount of space which the A. M. P. A. asked, and the spirit of patriotism shown augers well for the elements of the industry in which support is now to be sought.

Convention Prizes Offered

Ludwig Schindler, manager of the big coming exposition and convention at Chicago in July, is working with his sleeves rolled up and backing this up with grim determination. His first two weeks' work were crowned with splendid success, and over four thousand dollars worth of space reservations were made.

Schindler wants to interest every exhibitor in the U. S. in the success of this exposition, and is arranging a contest whereby the exhibitors will have to put on their thinking caps. He is offering three prizes of $50, $35 and $25 respectively for the best ideas or suggestions to make this exposition as attractive and unique as possible to the industry and public, and urges everybody to get busy at once. If you have anything on your mind send it in now to Manager Ludwig Schindler, 1413 Masonic Temple, Chicago, or in care of MOTOGRAPHY.

Exhibitor Lauds "Railroad Raiders"

M. Loewenstein, manager of the Majestic Theater, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, wired:

Just witnessed review first three chapters "Railroad Raiders" and in my opinion you have another wonderful box office winner coming at just the time when exhibitors will need stimulus for summer prosperity. This serial is another testimonial to the ability of your wonderful Helen Holmes and her capable support. It abounds in thrills, action and punch, and in real photography. I recently finished "A Lass of the Lumberlands" and found it left me a substantial increase in business that has been maintained since, without further aid of a serial to keep them coming. Expect another increase to result from showing "Railroad Raiders."

COUPLE OF WEIGHTY MATTERS

LAST week we intercepted an American institution in its path toward glory. Like the proverbial cave man, only different, we and the president of the Intercollegiate club lay in wait in one of the first floor mohagany caves of the Blackstone Hotel, Chicago. We had to wait for some time, but then, it was a weighty matter. Like all institutions, this one had to be uplifted. When it was and had been turned loose by the elevator we pounced upon it and robbed it of some of its five hundred thousand dollar time. The institution was looking very chic and fine and had its mother and Manager Ed. Hemmer with it. Every institution has a mother, you know, even if the mother's a man sometimes.

The institution's name is Mary Pickford. She was slipping back to Califilmia after a four days' between-pictures shopping tour in Manhattan. We discussed some very weighty matters and got two of them settled. One was this:

Contrary to some rumors that have seen type, Mary will not retire in another year or so. She will simply retire from picture making by schedule and will work only in special productions, as the muse moves.

The other weighty matter was this: Mary still has trouble keeping her hair pins in.

Operators should thank their stars that they never have to make any rewinds of the windups of the her and hero at the end of every love film.

HOW FAIRBANKS WOULD RUN 'EM

Douglas Fairbanks was in Chicago last week and we said to him, "Fairbanks, have you got any ideas on exhibiting? How would you run a string of theaters if you had them?"

And right back came the answer: "Into the ground!"

Here is a startling specimen of "cinema English" from Egypt. It appeared on a handbill issued by the Mustapha Camp Cinema, Alexandria. We extract the following items:

"Dr. Brown's Revenge"—a moving drama, highly performed, and suggested by a masterpiece of the best writers.

"Bunny Buys a Harem"—an ABSOLUTELY LAUPHING picture, highly comical, and performed by the best Vitagraph's artists—500 yards.

"The Winning Number"—funny, comical, amusing, cheering, e.t.c.

"Pleasure and Pain"—Pathétical drama moving of the life—2 large parts, 1,000 yards.

The copy below occupies a whole page on the register of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, written by a certain Mr. Delmas on his departure from New York upon the request of the management.

"Vulgar of manner, overfed,
Over-dressed and under-bred,
Heartless, Godless, Hell's delight,
Rude by day and loud by night,
Bedwarfed the man and large the brute,
Ruled by Jew and prostitute;
Purple robed and pauper clad,
Rotten! Raving, money-mad,
A squirming herd in money's mesh,
A wilderness of human flesh:
Crazed by avarice, lust and rum,
New York, thy name, 'Delirium'."

Better begin right now to think up excuses to give your wife as to why you should come to the big M. P. E. L. Convention in Chicago in July—that is if she's not a business woman. It she is, you won't need any excuses; she'll make you come.

Exhibitor Strong for Motography

One of the live exhibitors who came into Chicago on business during the past week was B. H. Cooper, who presides over the Park Theater in the college town of Champaign, Illinois.

"Do you know one of the reasons why I like Motography?" he said. "It's on account of those pages telling what business the different films did for various exhibitors. By golly, I read those—every one of them—and they help a deuce of a lot in making bookings."

ST. LOUIS EXHIBITORS MEET

Theater Managers and Exhibitors of St. Louis Hold Regular Meeting—Thirty Members Present

At a recent meeting of the Theater Managers and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of St. Louis, there were thirty active members present. Robert Taylor of the Red Feather department of the Universal Film Company and Lew Bent, manager of the Mid West Photo Plays Company, were elected to membership.

The legislative committee reports that the "Lighting Bill" has been ordered filed by the board of aldermen, and President Mogler reports that all censorship bills at Jefferson City are dead, and even the taxation measure has been eliminated.

Col. Rumsey stated in an address that he and Mr. Connett believe that if motion pictures continue as they are today there is no need for censorship. Mr. Connett does not believe in Sunday closing of picture theaters.

Mr. Scouros of the Pageant Theater filed a complaint against the musicians' union, which is making a demand on his company to pay for the services of an organist.

A motion was made, seconded and carried that the association purchase three photos of the last luncheon, one to be framed and hung at the club quarters, one to be mailed to Mayor Kiel and one to be mailed to Rabbi Harrison with the compliments of the association.

A motion was carried to permit ladies to attend the next luncheon of the association.

In the future the grievance committee will present to the association through their chairman a substitute for the deposit system now in force by several exchanges, in order to provide a method which will be thoroughly satisfactory to both exhibitors and producers.

Recruits Obtained by Film

The United States government has decided to use films as the means to increase enlistments in the three branches of the service—the army, navy and marine corps.

The third part of "Uncle Sam At Work," a series of pictures recently released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company which show the different departments of the United States government in operation, has been selected by the navy as the film to arouse patriotism that will increase enlistments to a point where every vessel in the navy will have a full complement of men.

In its desire to aid in arousing patriotic impulses the Universal Company obtained this series, representing government activities, at considerable expense.

Enid Bennett, the charming little Australian who is appearing in Ince Triangle plays. Her next one is to be "Happiness," by C. Gardner Sullivan, the scenario machine gun who never runs out of ammunition.

The various reels were taken under the personal supervision of a prominent authority on political and social economy. He was allowed free access to the various departments of the government, and in the taking of the pictures received the active co-operation of Secretary Daniels of the Navy, Secretary Baker of War, Secretary McAdoo of the Treasury and other officers of the government.

The third feature of "Uncle Sam at Work" depicts a day with our bluejackets. Sailors are shown in their various forms of drill and in the duties that are expected of them aboard a man-of-war. Among these are the loading and firing of guns, signalling to distant ships, and stripping decks for action and releasing torpedos. Life aboard submarines and torpedo boats is represented including the particular work cut out for the firemen, stokers, bakers and other men below decks who help so mightily in the efficiency of our navy.

"The Crisis" Rights to Be Sold

The remaining territory of the United States for "The Crisis" is to be sold. Harry A. Sherman and his associates decided on this step after acquiring the world rights to two new features which will demand their undivided attention in their exploitation.

Mr. Sherman, in the quickest and most spectacular campaign in the history of filmdom, sold the greater part of the country last fall, reserving for himself only the territory he controls for "The Birth of a Nation," together with the New England states, Illinois, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. A few days ago, he disposed likewise of the New England territory, and is now offering everything else for sale.

The territory remaining is to be sold in six blocks. The first consists of Illinois alone. The second includes Wisconsin, Minnesota and the two Dakotas. The three southwestern states, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Texas constitute the third group. North of these are combined Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas. Finally, there are two western divisions, the first including Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and Wyoming, and the second Oregon, Washington, Montana and Idaho.

"The Crisis" has been thoroughly tested by Mr. Sherman and the various state rights buyers who have already acquired territory, and has more than met expectations. Mr. Sherman himself staged it in his Lyric Theater, Minneapolis, where it ran for four weeks to more business than was ever accorded a feature film in that city, with the single exception of "The Birth of a Nation." Similar hits were scored afterward in St. Louis, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Louisville, Indianapolis and a number of other cities. A short time ago, it opened in New York, with every prospect of a long and prosperous run.

"The Crisis" is founded on Winston Churchill's novel of the same name and is brimful of patriotic appeal, making it peculiarly timely at this new crisis in American history. It is from the studios of William N. Selig and is generally considered Selig's masterpiece. An intensely human Lincoln, played by Sam Drane, is perhaps the most remarkable bit of historical characterization in the history of screen art.

P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, left Universal City for New York last week. "Goodbye, boys and girls," he said good naturedly to a crowd of Universalites who had gathered to see him off, adding, "good luck to you all."

Mr. Powers told Vice-president Davis that his stay had been all too short and that he planned to repeat his visit to the Universal's bee hive of activity early in the summer.

Town Itches for Theater

The following letter to MOTOGRAPHY from the Georgia and Southern Utilities Company of Eastman, Georgia, would seem to indicate a good place for a new, live exhibitor.

Three thousand inhabitants and no picture house—that is what exists in this little thrifty Southern city, which is so far from a film show that the natives often spend two or three dollars railroad fare to see pictures in the nearest city—Macon.

We are located on the Southern and also the Central railroad lines—have a good bunch of live merchants, and there are hundreds of nickels and dimes just itching to be shoved through the window of the ticket seller if it is located in front of a real picture house.

This town can and will support a good theater and if you can get this to the attention of a live one, he will find a very excellent opening here. The town is hungry for some form of entertainment—and is populated mostly by the "middle class," the really and truly kind that support a picture house.

We want you to get a picture show in Eastman, and do it quick. Just get a live wire to make a trip down here and look the town over, and he will thank you for calling it to his attention.—Georgia & Southern Utilities, C. R. Hodson, manager.

What Theater Men Are Doing

If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum Motography, Chicago.

Presenting Geraldine Farrar Picture

PATRIOTIC appeal is the keynote in the presentation of "Joan the Woman," the stirring De Mille production, at the Colonial Theater, Chicago. The timeliness of the subject, just when the United States has taken its place in the world conflict, allied with the country for which Joan died, is impressed upon the minds of the audience in every way. While the lobby decorations recall medieval France, and the program girls wear costumes suggested by Joan's armor, in the theater the boxes are draped with the American flag, and the national colors form the basis of the decorations.

An effective introduction is given the picture when Miss Grace Hickox, a professional entertainer, reads the prologue of the play. After the curtain is raised and the house lights dimmed, one beam of light shoots across the darkened stage, and in this half-light, Miss Hickox recites the verse of the prologue, ending it with a plea to the audience to consider Joan's patriotism when they are called on to serve their country.

Norman E. Field, manager of the theater, had hoped to have Geraldine Farrar, star of the production, present at the opening night, but her contract with the Metropolitan Opera Company prevented this. In her place, Miss Jennie Dufau, of the Chicago opera company, sang "The Star Spangled Banner" during the intermission.

Chicago is receiving "Joan" very enthusiastically.

New $30,000 Theater

Contracts have been awarded for the erection of the new Strand moving picture house to be erected in Allentown, Pennsylvania, by O. H. Gernert, Miss Emma Gernert and Dr. Ben H. Stuckert. The contract price is said to be $30,000, and the building is to be ready for business August 15.

The theater will be two stories high, but the foundations will be built of sufficient strength to permit the building of other stories upon it when extensions are required. Plans have been prepared for the theater and call for the very latest conveniences.

A twenty-foot wide lobby will lead into the theater. The box office will be at the side. There will be a foyer, with retiring rooms for men and women on either side. In the foyer will be two drinking fountains. The interior will be a spacious auditorium with seating capacity for 800 people, with plenty of room between the rows of seats. There will be an orchestra pit.

Two Simplex machines of the latest type will be used.

The theater will be beautifully decorated in harmony with the building. There are to be nine exits. Heating and ventilating systems will be installed of the newest type and the lighting will be by the indirect system. When completed the theater will vie in beauty, comfort and convenience with any in the state.

Theater Girls Aid Uncle Sam

One of the most successful film publicity stunts ever "pulled" in Chicago was executed last week by the firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, which operates several picture houses. The stunt was arranged in cooperation with Captain F. R. Kenney, chief recruiting officer of the United States army.

Each of the seven Chicago papers devoted news-column space to pictures and stories of the patriotic tour.

The four Colonial Theater lobby girls, the Misses Helen Ketchum, Frances Burton, Elizabeth Walters and Gertrude Jacobs, dressed in duplicates of the armor worn by Geraldine Farrar as Joan of Arc in the filming of "Joan the Woman," which is running at the Colonial Theater, toured the loop in a flag-bedecked motor in company with detailed officers of the recruiting service. They stopped on the important corners and with the military escort distributed enlistment literature and urged Young America to join the colors.

Lobby girls of the Colonial Theater, Chicago, aiding recruiting officers on the street.

Enthusiasm ran high, crowds were thick and enlistments came fast and furious. In front of the city hall, thanks to the courtesy of the police department, Miss Jacobs mounted a steed belonging to the traffic squad and encircled the square. It was an expression of the spirit which led the immortal Maid on to Orleans.

A Knockout Theater Ad

Advertising—like the poor—is always with us. Many a good theater man has puzzled his brains dry in the effort to concoct the right kind of publicity for his house.

In the accompanying illustration is given an idea of what a very strong and effective theater ad looked like. The creator, S. Barret McCormick, had an original idea and worked it out in splendid fashion. We have no doubt that everyone, practically, who looked at that page in the Indianapolis Sunday Star read the letter to "Little Mary," written on the theater's good looking letter head.

Mr. Barret certainly deserves a great deal of credit for his taste and ingenuity. There is only one criticism, of course, of using this sort of advertising all the time, and that is that it is expensive in that a good deal of space is used to "tell the story." However, a flyer such as this pays well for a house that can afford it.

Following are the contents of the letter reproduced in the advertisement:

I have seen your every picture, from those days when we knew you only as "Little Mary," when your only claim to fame was the worship of millions of devotees who bowed before your uncrowned throne.

With each cycle of the sun play, I have watched your every triumph and with each new achievement have said, "Here, surely is the pinnacle of her art."

Just now the last scene of "A POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL" has faded from the screen. Smiles, tears and laughter have mingled in a strange melody of life. Mellowed with understanding, you have peeped into the heart of the poor little rich girl and with the subtle alchemy of your art have drawn the dross from Life and let the golden stream of Love flow on.

There is pride for the tear you drew for the little girl who lived in the golden house and longed for the unknown land of mud pies—each smile, each laugh are jewels embedded in a crown of work well done.

I hope every child and every mother and every father can see you in this play and be swayed by your supreme art.

"Little Mary," in "A POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL," you have bequeathed an Idyl to the screen.

Here is one of the strongest and most attractive theater newspaper advertisements we have ever seen. It was prepared by S. Barret McCormick for his house, the Circle of Indianapolis, and dominated the advertising in the Sunday Star on the day it ran.

Patriotic Wave Aided by Exhibitor

The great, all-empowering wave of patriotism which is sweeping over the city, the state and the nation will be given additional impetus by Stanley V. Mastbaum, the directing head of the Stanley Company, which owns, controls or directs a score of vaudeville and motion picture theaters in Philadelphia and many throughout the state.

In order to encourage and enthuse anything that will aid in bringing home to the people that it is their patriotic duty to participate in any demonstration that will aid in the preparedness of the United States in general, and Philadelphia and Pennsylvania particularly, Mr. Mastbaum has tendered to Mayor Smith the use of the Stanley Theater for Sunday afternoon for any patriotic gathering that the mayor may desire to have meet and consider problems of home defense or emergency aid, enlisting, Red Cross or any other detail that can be better worked out in a meeting of a large number of citizens such as the capacity of the Stanley Theater would permit.

Mr. Mastbaum makes it plain that there will be absolutely no charge for the use of the theater, and its attaches who may be necessary, the lighting, etc., organist or other employes, and he considers this but a small contribution of his end towards bringing out all the latent patriotism there is. Any authorized body of citizens, therefore, who are working with the end in view of serving the welfare of the city and its citizens, may, upon application to Mayor Smith, have the use of the Stanley Theater on Sunday afternoon for the purpose of inspiring the citizens to the fulfillment of their patriotic duty. Mr. Mastbaum's letter to Mayor Smith follows:

Hon. Thomas B. Smith, Philadelphia. Dear Sir: As one of the list of contributions that I intend to make to the cause of patriotism which is in full sweep all over this city, state and nation, I would offer to you or through you to any organized body or group of citizens who may desire to hold a mass meeting for the purpose of arranging details for home and nation defense, the use of the Stanley Theater on Market street west of Sixteenth for Sunday afternoon coming next. The theater is placed at your disposal without any charge whatsoever and all the necessary employes will be on duty without charge. It is possible that you or some of the energetic men or women you have appointed on your committees may find that the Stanley Theater will be available and I will be glad to have it open for them on this or any other Sunday afternoon which you might select.

With best wishes for the success of your wise and patriotic course in this crisis and assuring you that I am at your service in this as in all other matters that pertain to the welfare of our beloved city, I am, Yours very truly, Stanley V. Mastbaum.

"The Great Bradley Mystery"

"The Great Bradley Mystery," the Apollo Art Drama which is to be released April 12, is an adaptation of the stage play by Edward Ellis, the renowned actor-author. The play in its spoken form was entitled "Suicide," and it enjoyed a considerable run on Broadway. Mr. Ellis is known to fame as the author of "Any Night," the play which, when presented by Holbrook Blinn at the Princess Theater, was largely responsible for the comment these productions caused.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

THE exhibitors of the state of Georgia plan a big convention in Macon for April 18. They will at that time form a permanent organization for the Georgia Exhibitors' League.

The Bedford Amusement Company has been formed at Bedford, Virginia, and will engage in the picture business. G. W. Layman is the incorporator.

All of the theaters of Lewiston, Maine, have combined into the Union Theater Company, with a capital of $200,000, all paid in. The combine will run several motion picture and vaudeville houses.

During a four days' showing of Triangle's "Little Brother," the Almo Theater of Louisville, Kentucky, admitted all children under sixteen years of age, free, if accompanied by their parents. This free admission was allowed only up to six o'clock in the evening.

A motion picture entertainment was given recently at the City Club of Baltimore, under the auspices of the Maryland League for National Defense. The program included two reels of scenes in Western Michigan and a five-reel story, "Price of Silence."

During the month of April the following plays will be presented at the Strand Theater, New York: Kathlyn Williams and Theodore Roberts in "The Cost of Hatred," Marguerite Clark in "The Valentine Girl" and Pauline Frederick in "Sleeping Fires."

Dr. J. L. Fort of Chicago, speaking at the district efficiency convention of the First Methodist church in Fremont, Nebraska, declared that nearly twice as much is spent in America for seeing "the movies" as is contributed to the church for all purposes.

Actors and actresses who appeared in Minneapolis last week will give a midnight vaudeville show Tuesday for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest and friends of members. Every theater was represented.

The Matz Theater Company of Bluefield, West Virginia, has been incorporated with an authorized capital of $50,000. The incorporators are Samuel Matz, Harry M. Matz, H. B. Lee, H. M. Turner and J. Frank Maynard. The incorporation will operate several motion picture houses.

The Mississippi League of Motion Picture Exhibitors will hold its annual convention in Jackson on March 28 and 29. President Will Eisenberg of Greenville has sent out notice calling the members to meet at the Edwards House in this city on these two days.

There will be an important gathering of the film men in Chicago on May 8 and 9, when there will be a national convention of the F. I. L. M. clubs of the United States. This movement was started by the central club of Chicago, and the object will be to form a national organization to bring into closer co-operation all of the clubs of the country. Every producer is invited to have a representative present at the convention. The personnel of the clubs is composed of exchange men.

Censorship by the police department of Detroit, Michigan, which has again been ordered by Commissioner Couzens, after having been abolished several years ago when the National Board of Review was established, is not such an arduous task, according to Lieut. John Hayes, head of the clean-up squad.

Another company has been organized to attempt the production of films in natural colors. The new concern is called the Natural Colored Picture Company of Whitestone, Long Island, and its capital is $850,000. W. F. Fox of Whitestone is the man behind the project.

A motion-picture car is to be put in service by the Canadian Government railways, to demonstrate the principles of "safety first" in their application to modern railroading. Built under the authority of the Minister of Railways, the car is now well on the way to completion at the Moncton shops.

The Michigan Theaters' Association, whose offices were in the Peter Smith Bldg., Detroit, has been dissolved. Its original purpose was co-operative booking. Several productions had been booked for members of the organization, but there was a lack of proper co-operation and the disorganization followed.

The Merced Theater Corporation was organized at Fresno, California, with capital stock at $25,000 for the purpose of erecting a modern theater to have a stage 50 by 70 feet. C. H. Douglas, manager of the Elite Theater, is heading the movement, and states that half the stock is subscribed already.

Incorporation papers have been filed by the Birmingham Amusement Company of Birmingham, Alabama, composed principally of New York stockholders. The company declares its purposes to be operation of amusement houses, theaters, etc., and it is supposed that it will open a moving picture theater in Birmingham.

The Regent Theater, on Sheridan Road, Chicago, gave a benefit performance on April 13, for the "Infant Welfare" fund of the Rogers Park Woman's clubs. June Caprice in "A Modern Cinderella" and "The Collie Market," one of the Paula Blackton country life stories, were shown. The prices were ten and fifteen cents.

In a picture house of Boston heretofore, as the uniformed ushers escorted patrons to their seats, they verbally admonished them to "watch your step," particularly those selecting the balconies. Now the ushers carry a tin box, not unlike a knapsack, strapped between the shoulderblades. Inside the box are batteries and lamps much the same as in pocket flashlights. Lettering is cut out to read "Watch Your Step," and as the usher passes down the aisle in advance of the patron, he presses a button and the words are illuminated, so that no word is spoken. This helps eliminate unnecessary noise.

J. S. Hebrew, Philadelphia manager of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., reports to the main office that during the week ended March 17, his branch booked 134 theaters in Philadelphia for an average run of a little less than two days each. As there are approximately 185 motion picture theaters Vitagraph Blue Ribbon features were shown in the majority of them.

Representatives of the Protestant churches of Rockford, Illinois, have met at Rockford Center to inaugurate a campaign to close the picture houses entirely on Sunday. Rev. H. M. Bannen and Rev. S. H. Wirsching made addresses expressing confidence that this object could be accomplished at the approaching election, when a referendum vote on the question is to be taken.

A new theater is to be erected at the corner of South Third and Chestnut streets, North Yakima, Washington, by Frederick Mercy, the theatrical man of Yakima Valley. The new house, which will cost $100,000, will have a seating capacity of 1,800. The stage is to be 40 feet in depth and about 100 feet from wall to wall. The new house will be strictly modern in every respect, and will be ready for occupancy about September 15.

The Florida League of Motion Picture Exhibitors has been organized at a meeting held at Tampa. C. D. Cooley of Tampa was elected president, R. A. McIntosh of Orlando, vice-president, and A. H. La Belle of Tampa, secretary and treasurer. Annual dues were fixed at $6.00, with an initiation fee of $5.00. Delegates to the Chicago Convention were elected and resolutions passed favoring affiliation with the National League.

A question has been raised as to whether if a bill is passed by the New York legislature taxing all picture theaters in the state, it will be possible for cities to collect license fees from these theaters as at present. The cities would have the same police powers to govern the films as at present, it is said by legal authority, but the theaters could not be taxed twice and the state tax would take preference.

The National Committee on Better Films will give the first of a series of special performances at the Strand Theater on Saturday morning, April 14th, at 9:45, for the New York City Teachers' association. Cranston Brewster, chairman of the National Board of Review, will address the audience, before the presentation of the pictures, on the purposes of the demonstration. The National Board of Censors, according to E. M. Barrows, secretary of the National Committee on Better Films, maintains that a moving picture, in order to be considered first class, must be of an educational nature. It is the purpose of the Committee on Better Films to prove that good photo-plays have constructive educational value for children as well as grown-ups, and need not be glorified Sunday school sermons to be high class. Mitchel H. Mark, who is greatly interested in the project, has donated the Strand Theater for the occasion.

More than ten thousand workers, in western Pennsylvania, attended safety meetings recently, at which accident prevention motion pictures were shown in the campaign instituted by Commissioner John Price Jackson, of the Department of Labor and Industry, for the reduction of industrial accidents. The films were shown in Harrisburg under the auspices of the women's clubs.

One of the most pretentious advertising mediums in Niagara Falls was first put in operation over the Cataract Theater recently. An illuminated sign, extending along the entire front of the theater and measuring to a height of 30 feet, showing the American cataract in all its beauty, with the aid of a flashlight system, operating through colored globes, makes the most attractive sign along the main street.

The officers of the Actors' Fund in New York are sending out a request to all moving picture stars, men and women, for as many of their signed photographs as they can send to the Actors' Fund Fair rooms, Hotel Astor, so that they may be sold at the Grand Central Palace beginning May 12. The entire dramatic profession and members of the moving picture industry are interested in the success of this great fair and it is hoped that they will try to make it a success in the manner indicated.

"The Girl Philippa," Vitagraph's special Blue Ribbon feature, continues to have record runs throughout the country. The demands from exhibitors in the middle west are extremely strenuous several of them lengthening their runs to such an extent that Manager Nine, of the Kansas City exchange, was forced to wire headquarters for extra prints of the feature. The small town exhibitors find that "Philippa" allows them to eliminate the daily change of program. One Key West exhibitor wants the big picture for a long run. He is no exception.

A spark from the projector at the Favorite Theater, Piqua, Ohio, set fire to a roll of film, late one Saturday afternoon, a short time ago. About fifty feet of film burned. A blaze spurted out from the booth and the audience left the house quickly, but in an orderly manner, and there was little or no excitement. The operator saved the film from a total loss by throwing his coat over the box. The loss was not in excess of $15.00, and the evening performance was not interrupted.

An association for promotion of national advertising on the motion picture screens of the country was organized at a meeting of representatives of a number of states at the Claypool Hotel in Terre Haute, Indiana, a few days ago. The organization will be known as the Advertising Film Service Association of America. J. J. Noethe of Chicago was elected president and H. B. Hornaday of Indianapolis, secretary. Leo Perry of New Orleans was elected vice-president and A. V. Cougen of Kansas City, Mo., treasurer.

Ethel Clayton is at work on a new World-Picture Brady-Made called "The Stolen Paradise.' Edward Langford is the featured male player in this production and the cast also includes George MacQuarrie, Robert Forsyth, George Cowl, Lew Hart and Pinna Nesbit. The play is directed by Harley Knoles.

Women's Influence on Pictures

EARLY experience in trying to establish permanent picture shows with the limited and mediocre material at hand embittered many an exhibitor toward what he regarded as the mischievous meddlesomeness of women in general. It was the ladies who first attacked and criticised and objected to films. They were responsible for the censors. Their clubs and committees seemingly went out of their way to find flaws in everything from posters to ventilation. Even the few men who aided and abetted their crusades were invariably of the feminine type, and did not relieve the apparent responsibility of the sex.

The exhibitor who is doing the best he can is justified in resenting criticism. Being condemned for his failure to do the very thing he wanted to do, and would have done if he possibly could, has left a bad taste in his mouth. He has come to the conclusion that the feminine busybodies who harassed him were best ignored, and that the investigations of women's clubs are to be regarded as only one more annoyance.

Nevertheless, the average picture today is surprisingly near to the thing that the women demanded years ago. Gradually, with or without conscious effort, the industry has adapted itself to the feminine specifications. As usual, woman has had her way.

Feminine taste in pictures averages higher than masculine taste. It is also, strange to say, more reliable. Ask a man what kind of pictures he would enjoy seeing, and his answer will be influenced by his personal hobbies. You will get as many definitions of what constitutes an interesting picture as there are subjects in the catalogs of labor and sport. Ask women the same question and the answers will show only a few variations. The great majority will want clean, romantic drama. A respectable minority will ask for travel pictures. The highbrow few will want some sociological stuff. But a big proportion, if not all, will hastily interpolate a request for children's programs—something that the average man would never think of even though he be a father.

It is also a fact that should be self-evident, but is frequently overlooked by exhibitors, that feminine attendance is greater than masculine. How much greater—what the proportion of male to female audience is—we doubt if one exhibitor in ten knows to a certainty. And yet that is one point on which every theater manager should have definite information. Out of six thousand admissions a week, are there three thousand men and three thousand women, or one thousand men and five thousand women, or what is the ratio?

And then—of the total number of men, how many came at the request or insistence of their womenfolk?

The greatest merchants of the world made their success through a keen appreciation of the fact that women do the world's buying. And particularly are they responsible for the expenditures that are charged to amusements. The two dollar staged play that depended upon the patronage of the commercial traveler and his customer, or the summer amusement park that relied for revenue upon the youths of the Main Street Athletic Club, would hardly last until next month's rent came due.

One of the biggest troubles the early exhibitors of pictures had was getting rid of the notion that a shooting gallery, a pool room and a picture theater all should subsist upon the same kind of patronage. A good many of them learned better only after the show had closed. closed.

So if the ladies have made a lot of bother with their high strung ideas about pure pictures, and clean air, and all the other details that go to make up a modern show, it cannot be denied that the result has been all for good. And it was all in the way of natural evolution, too; for, as we tried to point out, the shows belonged to them in the first place. The exhibitor who tries to deny or ignore the influence of women upon his screen and his house is headed toward disaster.

True, their best influences have had their drawbacks, like everything else. With the charming illogicality of the sex, they have pushed and helped the exhibitor into building up an expensive children's program, and then have kept the children home. They have publicly criticised and condemned his shows sight unseen. They have persuaded him to change his service, and then calmly ignored his pleas for patronage. What they do is generally in the name of humanity, and they expect humanity to support the show—it is not up to them.

But in spite of all that, the picture show today is a far better thing than it ever could hope to be in a strictly man's world. The feminine influence has brought subtle acting and artistic settings and refined stories; it has encouraged a return to nature in pictures; and best of all, it has given twenty million children a chance to see inspiring, encouraging, understandable and wholly delightful stories without words.

When all the exhibitors realize that the women's influence is the dominant and compelling influence back of all screen success, the day of the censor will be over and the motion picture man will take his place in the council of the great.

Why They Close

NO ONE of prominence can publicly quote statistics or mention conditions of the motion picture industry that compare unfavorably with past statistics and conditions, but that somebody gets them wrong. We are supplied with a recent newspaper editorial that reads like this:

> W. A. Brady, president of the National Association of The Motion Picture Industry, says the "movies" are on the wane. Statistics from twenty leading cities show a decrease in the number of theaters and a decrease in the seating capacity of those remaining. There are probably two reasons for this decline. The leading stars have commercialized their acting and lost public sympathy and support. The business has gravitated to pandering to a low taste. A majority of the firms shown are society plays in which human frailty is depicted. This palls upon the public and other forms of diversion are taking the people's spare time and money.

The newspaper is of no particular importance, and we forbear to mention its name. It serves merely to illustrate how the unfortunate press tendency to jump at conclusions may work against the truth.

It is the quality of showmanship of the exhibitor that has not kept pace with the rapid refinement of the people's demands. The disappearance of a certain percentage of the theaters, and the increasing prosperity of a certain percentage of those remaining, is due to nothing but the old, familiar law of survival. The unfit are being eliminated. It matters little whether their unfitness comes from lack of capital or lack of aggressive showmanship. It all simmers down to the question of business ability; for the showman who is fitted to succeed will soon remedy a lack of capital.

There is nothing unusual or alarming in the condition. The same thing happens in practically all industries. Competitive strife in a field that invites into its glittering and dream-fed circle the inexperienced and the incompetent from all other fields, will soon eliminate those who lack in pluck or luck. The mystery is that half of them have not quit before this. They would if it were not really such a good business—in spite of their complainings.

Good business, that is, for those who have the strength and the talent to get away with it. It is no longer a good business for the outcasts of other businesses, and we do not want it to be.

ROOSEVELT APPLAUDED IN FILM

"Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation" is Presented to New York by Commodore Blackton With Unusual Success.

"The most enthusiastic opening of the whole theatrical and screen season" is the way one newspaper commentor spoke of the premiere of the Greater Vitagraph's preparedness spectacle, "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," at the Broadway theater on Sunday night, April 1.

The big production was greeted by a capacity audience composed of representative men in public life. Among those present were Enrico Caruso, William Fox, Lewis J. Selznick, Carl Laemmle, Rear Admiral Charles D. Sigsbee, Comptroller William A. Prendergast, Brigadier General J. L. Chamberlain, District Attorney Charles Albert Perkins, Judge Samuel Seabury, Admiral and Mrs. Marix, Former Postmaster General Frank H. Hitchcock, Commodore and Mrs. J. Stuart Blackton, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Sothern, Colonel John H. Foote, Henry A. Wise Wood, Percival I. Hill, Colonel O. B. Meacham, William A. Brady, Robert Davis, Ingalls Kimball, M. H. Mark, Colonel Sydney Grant, Peter Clark MacFarlane, Mrs. Joseph Duveen, Gellett Burgess, Henry Birrell, Samuel W. Fairchild, Dr. Rumley, Andrew B. Humphrey, Henry Melville, Mr. and Mrs. Walter W. Irwin, Arnon L. Squires, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Drexel, Mrs. R. C. Penfield, Benjamin J. Hampton, J. D. Hampton, Ellis Parker Butler, Penrhyn Stanlaws, Paul West, J. E. Brulatour, David Bispham, W. C. Church, Russell Doubleday, George Randolph Chester, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Dixon, Henry L. West, George C. Tyler, Mrs. James Speyer, Hudson Maxim, Daniel Frohman, Ogden Reid, Republican State Chairman Frederick C. Tanner, Major General John S. Eddy, Arthur Train, P. A. Powers, and Count A. Casella Tamburini.

The photo-spectacle, which depicts the awakening of America through industrial and military preparedness, was received with unusual evidences of approval. The appearance of Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, who is seen in a number of the scenes, was the occasion of a tremendous outburst. The audience laid conventions aside, stamping and cheering with wild enthusiasm.

During the intermission Commodore J. Stuart Blackton appeared. Commodore Blackton thanked his many assistants who aided him in the making of "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation" and then spoke on the purposes of the production. Commodore Blackton said that he conceived the idea for the picture a year ago and that he had gained from Colonel Roosevelt and Major General Leonard Wood their approval of its value in behalf of national preparedness.

All the preparedness and patriotic organizations are co-operating in the showing of "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation." Monday evening, April 2. was Security League Night; Wednesday evening, April 4, Military Training Camp Association night; Thursday, April 5, Daughters of the American Revolution Night; and Saturday, April 7, Junior Division Military Training Camp Association Night. The second week of the production's run will number seven special organization evenings.

The Vitagraph company is co-operating with the various societies in special exercises. Each organization is having a special speaker on its evening. The United States government has ordered that a recruiting officer be stationed at the theater every afternoon and evening, thus officially recognizing the value of the production's preparedness propaganda. The Boy Scouts of America are appearing several evenings each week, demonstrating the work of that organization.

"Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation" won unusual comments from the newspaper reviewers. "The opening of the picture was attended by one long gale of enthusiasm," said The World, which further commented upon "the battle scenes of marvelous pictorial effectiveness."

Supplies Clean Pictures Need

Edison Conquest Pictures are based on one idea, which dominates every production, although the productions themselves show a wide variety in manner and matter. The idea is nothing more nor less than clean pictures. These new screen stories to be released by Forum Films, Inc., will not be of the milk and water type, but of the red-blood type—clean, live, vital stories, pulsing with action and interesting not only to the children but to the entire family.

Adaptations have been made of many good stories which have been favorites among boys and young men readers. A great many of these favorites have heretofore been noticeably absent from the screen, where they should prove, if anything, more interesting than when they were between book covers.

The first program of Forum Films, Inc., will include "The Half Back," a picturization of Ralph Henry Barbour's story of school life and football; "Captains of Tomorrow"; a dress parade of cadets at the United States Military Academy, West Point; "The Dinosaur and the Baboon," presenting a new group of animated manikins; "The Sea Horse"; "A Vanishing Race," and "Puss in Boots."

Robert Louis Stevenson's "Kidnapped," will be among the early releases, as well as "Your Obedient Servant," an adaptation of Anna Sewell's "Black Beauty." "For the Honor of the School," by Ralph Henry Barbour; "Gallegher," by Richard Harding Davis, and other boy classics that will lead boy and man along "the open road to romance and knowledge."

That the public is ready for the idea upon which Edison Conquest productions are based—clean pictures—is being made very apparent by the voluntary enthusiastic endorsements received daily from women's clubs, colleges, social workers and educators all over the country. The general public, too, will be found in a most receptive mood, it is believed. They are recoiling from sex plays. Perhaps the screen intrigues and amours of the omnipresent vampire may have satisfied the average picture patron one time. A little later they cloyed. Finally, they have nauseated. The day of clean pictures has arrived, and Edison Conquest films could not be given to the public at a more auspicious time.

$1,000 Greater Vitagraph Prize

Greater Vitagraph is offering a prize of $1,000 in cash to the man, woman or child writing the most practical and constructive article on "How America Should Prepare."

The contest has no restrictions. It is open to every person of every age and nationality. The judges will be Admiral Charles D. Sigsbee, U. S. N.; Retired General Horatio C. King, Hudson Maxim, Alan R. Hawley, president of the Aero Club of America, and Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, director-general of Greater Vitagraph and co-author and producer of "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation."

The Vitagraph Company announces that ideas—practical suggestions—are the only things that will count in the award. Rhetoric and diction will not be considered.

The contest will close on July 4, 1917, and announcement of the prize winner will be made August 19, 1917. Essays should be mailed to the Greater Vitagraph, Contest Department, 1600 Broadway, New York City.

The contest is being given nation-wide publicity in the vast campaign connected with "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," now running at the Broadway Theater in New York and at the Strand in Washington, and in many theaters throughout the country. Folders, giving details of the contest, are being widely distributed. They will be given out at all theaters where "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation" is presented.

COMING MUTUALS

Charlie Chaplin in "The Cure" and Mary Miles Minter in "Environment" on Schedule for Week of April 16

"The Cure," the tenth Mutual-Chaplin special, two-part comedy, will be ready for the public on April 16.

The theater man needs no special "stunt" to attract the crowds when Charlie is the headliner—all he needs is to make a big display of the name of Charlie Chaplin to let the people know the time and the place and they will all be there. Chaplin's name is sufficient—the people themselves will do the rest.

April 16 also brings Mary Miles Minter in "Environment," a story laid in a New England village. Miss Minter is another star whose name will bring the crowds. This picture will hold a special attraction for high school pupils as it deals with the graduation exercises and the life of the young people of the village.

"The Single Code," schedule for April 16 is the second of the Crane Wilbur series and treats, as the title suggests, with the question of whether there should be a single code of morals for both men and women. This will be best advertised from the problematical standpoint—the asking of questions which will arouse a discussion on this subject. A special letter of announcement to women telling them the nature of the plot will be sure to bring a full house.

"A Double Steal," the second chapter of the Helen Holmes serial, "The Railroad Raiders," comes on April 16. Play up the high lights of the release, the stealing of jewels from a private car, the dynamiting of the railroad track in front of a special, the hold-up of a Pullman, a police raid on the gang of thieves, and a splendid hand-to-hand fight between Helen Holmes and one of the members of the gang. These will arouse keen interest in this chapter of the serial.

"Shorty Lays a Jungle Ghost," the fourteenth story of the "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton" series, will be ready April 16. The scenes of this picture are laid in the Philippine Islands and show some splendid fights in a Filipino uprising. In the conflict Shorty kills the leader with the same spear which has been used to kill Anita Keller.

The fifth of the "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal," were originally magazine stories and have been gathered series, entitled "The Fight for Honor," will be released on April 20. Now that the people have become intensely interested in these stories further incite their patronage by co-operating with a book store in the sale of Frank L. Packard's book "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal." These in book form. A good window display and a slide on the screen announcing the book sale will be of mutual benefit.

Three Comedy Offerings

The second Strand comedy, "When Mary Took the Count," goes to the screen on April 18. Billie Rhodes and Jay Belasco are the featured players, and a big wedding is one of the important scenes of the picture.

On April 19 comes the Cub Comedy featuring George Ovey and entitled "Somewhere in the Mountains."

The Vogue Comedy released April 21, "Masked Mirth," features Ben Turpin.

"Mutual Tours Around the World," released April 17, shows views of Russian Caucasia, Copenhagen, Denmark, and Salzburg, Austria.

"Mutual Weekly" comes on April 18 and "Reel Life" April 19. The six topics making up "Reel Life" are "New Legs for Soldiers," "Fishing Through the Ice," "A Traveling Dairy,"-"Making Iron Pipe," "A Vest Pocket Water Sterilizer," and "A Mock Bull Fight."

General Organized in Canada

A new company which will distribute in Canada the same product handled by the General Film Company in the United States has been organized and will be known as the General Film Company of Canada, Limited. Its headquarters will be in Montreal and it will have branches throughout the Dominion. The business of the company will be conducted from the main office at Montreal. The officers of the company are: President, T. A. Hubley; vice-president, Harold Bolster; secretary and treasurer, T. Coppelman. The directors are T. A. Hubley, Edward English, Harold Bolster, W. F. Rodgers and W. M. Gulick. The General Film Company of Canada, Limited, is the result

He organized and conducted the Howard Smith Paper Mills of Montreal and is known as one of the most successful business executives in Canada.

FAIRBANKS PICTURE FINISHED

"In Again—Out Again" to be Released April 30. "Doug" at His Best in Artcraft's Newest Offering

The initial Douglas Fairbanks production, "In Again—Out Again," to be released by the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, has been completed at the New York studio on West Fifty-fourth street, where the concluding scene was taken last week. The film is now being cut and assembled and it is expected, will be entirely complete in the course of a few days.

"In Again—Out Again," it is announced by Walter E. Greene, president of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, presents the April offering from this organization and will be released on the 30th of this month. A typical Fairbanks play, this picture discloses the smiling "Doug" at his best in a timely story of rapid-fire theme with many surprises from the pen of little Anita Loos, the clever Fairbanks scenarioist. The scenes of the photoplay are located in and about rural New Jersey and present the romantic and spectacular career of a young blood who goes through many trials and tribulations to win the girl of his choice, portrayed in the inimitable Fairbanks manner. Strange to say, this young man finds it more difficult to keep in jail than out of it, and various unexpected twists to the story are carried out effectively.

Weekly Carries Appeal for Volunteers

To aid the government in its call for volunteers the "Mutual Weekly," in its next issue, No. 118, will carry a pictorial appeal for men to volunteer for the Naval Reserve Force. This is distinct from the regular navy, being for the mosquito fleet and other auxiliaries.

"THE EASIEST WAY"

Film Adaptation of the Belasco Drama with Clara Kimball Young to be Shown at Rialto Theater, New York

The Selznick-Picture presenting Clara Kimball Young in Eugene Walter's famous American drama, "The Easiest Way" takes place next week at the Rialto Theater on Broadway, New York. Manager S. L. Rothapfel has viewed the picture and was so enthusiastic in his praise that he agreed not to change a single title or cut a foot of the seven reels of film as turned over by the director, Albert Capellani.

The play itself was originally produced by David Belasco.

Director Capellani has adhered closely to the original drama with the addition of introductory scenes to establish the heroine's character and carrying out the story to its logical conclusion which was only hinted at in the play itself. The cast surrounding Miss Young is an exceptionally strong one including Joseph Kilgour, the distinguished Broadway player, in the role he originated in the Belasco production; Rockcliffe Fellowes, Louise Bates, Cleo Desmond, Mae Hopkins, George Stevens, Frank Kingdon and Walter McEwan.

"Birds' Christmas Carol"

The Frieder Film Corporation, Chicago's most recent addition to its ranks of producing companies, announces that it will withhold the immediate release of its initial offering, "The Birds' Christmas Carol," founded on Kate Douglas Wiggin's celebrated story. The big feature was scheduled for sale on the state rights plan this month.

Said I. M. Frieder, president of the company, "In the first place 'The Birds' Christmas Carol' has vastly surpassed our most sanguine expectations. It is easily worthy of much more exploitation than we could possibly give it if we were to market it immediately.

"All of the sublime pathos and irresistible humor of the manuscript have been retained by Lule Warrenton, who directed the picture. The work of little four-year-old Mary Louise was a delightful surprise."

"The Girl Philippa" Sells Fast

The splendid metropolitan receptions accorded Greater Vitagraph's "The Girl Philippa" with Anita Stewart in the star role are now being reflected in the avidity with which it is being booked in the smaller cities.

An example of the cumulative verdict of excellence upon this picture exists in the success of A. H. McLaughlin of the Chicago branch of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. in obtaining bookings during a hurried trip through the section adjacent to Chicago. He returned in ten days with substantial bookings in eight towns including such important ones as Bloomington, Danville, Aurora, Galesburg, Moline and Rock Island in Illinois, and Burlington, Ia., and Anderson, Ind.

There is a decided military atmosphere in Edison's "The Law of the North," released through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay, that is especially appealing in these days. Canada's police rangers of the frozen north figure prominently in this stirring drama in which Shirley Mason is featured.

Unusual Publicity Campaign

GOLDWYN ADVERTISING ENDORSES MOTOGRAPHY AND OTHER JOURNALS

AN advertising and promotion campaign that has attracted much attention in the film industry, both among exhibitors and manufacturers, is that of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. That campaign, of course, is the Goldwyn corporation's voice with which it hopes and expects to reach the showmen of the nation.

The purpose and intent of this company's campaign, an analysis of portions of its campaign and the results obtained to date are set forth for several reasons:

First: Because Goldwyn is a new company, less than five months old, and its printed sales effort can be revealed from its initial step.

Second: Because it discloses a new and undeveloped method of film salesmanship.

Third: Because it has proved in a striking way the power and value of the film industry's newspaper and trade journals in their advertising and editorial "reach."

Market No Un-Made Product

Inaugurating a campaign ten months before its company planned to market a picture, this office has, in no instance, attempted to sell a product as yet unmanufactured. In sequence it has revealed to exhibitors the name values of the Goldwyn owners, their stability, their record of sound business ethics in their previous ventures and business, and the successes these men have achieved in related fields of amusements. Summarized into a sentence the argument of this phase of the campaign has been that men who have made fortunes for themselves in screen and stage productions will make money for exhibitors.

Following this came a sequence of advertisements designed solely to reintroduce and further popularize the names of the Goldwyn stars, with the hint of other stars to be announced in addition to Goldwyn's first five—Mae Marsh, Mary Garden, Maxine Elliott, Jane Cowl and Madge Kennedy. This also was purely personal advertising, as no production except "Thais" has been announced by name.

Exhibitors Aid in Policies

In between these two phases of the campaign there has been introduced a constant element of "exhibitor appeal." In other words exhibitors have been invited regularly to assist the Goldwyn executives in outlining the methods of organization to be employed by the company. The response to these appeals has been large and will be described at a later point in this article.

In its work of flotation and promotion Goldwyn has made use of the following mediums under two classifications:

ATTACKING COLUMN—A

Moving Picture World, N. Y. Morning Telegraph, Motion Picture News, Exhibitors' Trade Review, Motography, The Dramatic Mirror.

ATTACKING COLUMN—B

Variety, The Billboard, The Clipper, Dramatic News, Exhibitors' Herald, New York Review.

Goldwyn's heavy guns have been fired through the six mediums of the first column and its supporting artillery at intervals through the medium of the second column.

Goldwyn set out to build confidence and respect. Its copy has always been positive, never negative. It has steadfastly declined to compare its methods or plans with those of other companies. Aware of the existence of certain evils in the trade, Goldwyn has merely declared that the perpetuation of such evils will find no place in its scheme of things.

What has this campaign achieved? The time has come for the answer:

Twenty Thousand Letters Received

In five months Goldwyn has received, solely as a result of its trade journal advertising, just under twenty thousand letters from exhibitors and distributing factors. Every one of these letters has been answered with specific relations to the town, city, theater (and ofttimes neighborhood) from which it came.

Goldwyn now has in its files a hundred or two less than 6,000 booking reservations. Naturally, all of these reservations are filed by exchange zones, adhering for the moment, to the traditional exchange cities selected by the majority of the companies in the industry. From the time of the first inquiry all of these exhibitors, unduplicated, of course, are placed on Goldwyn's own mailing lists for promotional matter and announcements, and to receive far in advance pictorial and cut matter for use in their house programs, if they care to make such use of it. Thus has Goldwyn reached out beyond the exhibitor and been able to introduce itself to the ultimate consumers—the American public.

The daily newspaper, magazine, pictorial and foreign campaigns are each as comprehensive in their way as the one described here, but bear no relation to that conducted solely through the medium of the film trade's great publication.

Conservative Advertising Copy

Explanation should be made here that all of the Goldwyn advertising for the trade journals has been in direct contrast with all surrounding advertising. In appearance it has been kept light and dignified. It has shunned comparisons and avoided exaggeration as one would avoid a plague subject. At no time has it taxed the credulity of the exhibitors who are asked to read it and the editors who are asked to print it. For the future, the intention to invest it will still further individuality and distinction, but most important of all, with believability.

Splendid Settings in Goldwyn Play

Maxine Elliott, a beauty of world-wide reputation, may congratulate herself upon being the star selected by Goldwyn to introduce a noteworthy innovation into motion pictures.

When Miss Elliott makes her film debut, audiences will notice instantly that her production is unlike anything they have ever seen before on the screen. Just what this difference is will be quickly discernible. It will be in the "sets," or the scenic environment of the picture.

Goldwyn's has engaged Arthur Hopkins, Hugo Ballin and their associated artists who have devised an entirely new method of scenic investiture. These skilled experts, as the Elliott picture will reveal, have succeeded in transferring the actual atmosphere of refined homes, offices and public places to the screen. This innovation brings an air of reality into pictures and alters the entire atmosphere that invests them.

Special Booking for "Honor System"

Offers of unprecedented rentals from exhibitors of the metropolitan district have caused the Fox Film Corporation to make a radical innovation in the handling of its big ten-reel sensation cinamelodrama "The Honor System."

Many offers of from $3,000 to $4,000 per week for "The Honor System" have been received and in response the Fox Film Corporation has established a special booking department for the city of New York and the states of New York and New Jersey. The booking for this territory will be in charge of Carey Wilson, who will have his offices on the fourth floor of No. 130 West 46th street, New York.

The state right proposals will be handled by Winfield Sheehan, general manager Fox Film Corporation, who has already had propositions aggregating $400,000.

"The Honor System" received great praise from the New York newspaper and trade press.

"The Honor System" was directed by R. A. Walsh and shows in every scene the genius of its creator. Included in the cast are such well known screen stars as Gladys Brockwell, Miriam Cooper, Milton Sills, George Walsh, James Marcus, Charles Clary and Arthur MacKay.

For the past two months exhibitors have been visiting the Lyric Theater several times a week to see the picture and all agree that it will be a box office sensation in any picture house in which it is shown.

Lillian Walker in "Sally-in-a-Hurry"

A Blue Ribbon feature from Greater Vitagraph that will soon be released is "Sally-in-a-Hurry," a comedy drama from the pen of A. Van Buren Powell with Lillian Walker starred. This picture is noted for the appearance of Miss Walker in a sprightly role such as she had in her success "Green Stockings" and in "Kitty Mackay," her latest current release.

The story, directed by Wilfrid North, has a delightful Cinderella atmosphere, dealing with the dreams of a beanery waitress about her fairy prince which come true after she incidentally manages to save him from the machinations of a gang of crooks.

A rich vein of comedy runs all through the story, giving Miss Walker excellent opportunities for fetching action in both tenement and high life surroundings. Donald Cameron is her leading man, while Eulalie Jensen, Thomas Mills, Wm. Shea and Mrs. West—all favorites—are in the cast. This, it is believed, will be one of the most popular Lillian Walker pictures released through Vitagraph-V. L. S. E.

Echo of Russian Revolution

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay reports renewed activity in inquiries from exhibitors for Edison's "The Cossack Whip," featuring Viola Dana. Many of the direct causes leading to the revolution are vividly brought out in this picture and the theme is especially timely at this moment.

No wonder the kid is scared. He thinks it's his ugly granddad come to see him again. Gloria Swanson is the fond mother and Teddy is the granddad. They are all members of Mack Sennett's Keystone family.

NEW PLAN FOR DEPOSITS

Minneapolis Exhibitor Designs New Arrangement for Use in Northwest—Appears to Suit Both Exhibitors and Exchangemen

DAVID G. RODGERS of Minneapolis has brought forth a plan on advance deposits which seems to be generally suitable to exhibitors and exchange men both.

While exhibitors were voicing complaints and exhibitors' organizations were adopting resolutions of condemnation against the advance deposit system, Mr. Rodgers took the bull by the horns in his characteristic manner and evolved a working plan for discussion.

David G. Rodgers of Minneapolis, author of a new plan on deposits.

Dave Rodgers, by the way, was the first president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of Minnesota, which is now known as the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest.

He has been a director on the executive board ever since and is chairman of the convention committee for the Northwest gathering scheduled for Minneapolis May 1, 2, 3.

The advance deposit plan of David G. Rodgers was unanimously adopted by the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the Northwest in meeting assembled and is as follows:

THE RODGERS' PLAN ON DEPOSITS

This agreement made by and between the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corp. of the Northwest, party of the first part, and ....., party of the second part, witnesseth:

Whereas, party of the first part is an association of motion picture exhibitors through the Northwest and the party of the second part is engaged in the manufacturing, exchanging or releasing of motion picture films:

Now, therefore, in consideration of the sum of one dollar and other good and valuable considerations, in hand paid to said party of the second part by party of the first part, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, the party of the second part hereby agrees not to demand or require any deposit from any of the members of the party of the first part by reason of the renting or leasing of any motion picture film from said party of the second part by such member of the party of the first part,—provided, however, that such member is of financial responsibility, and it is further understood and agreed that in the event the member of the party of the first part has no financial standing and is not considered a good financial risk, then the party of the second part may demand deposit in advance from such member, not to exceed ten days' rental of the film sought to be leased by such member.

Said deposit may be either made in cash or by the giving of a surety bond or in the nature of a guarantee executed by two other parties of financial responsibility but that said deposit, bond or guarantee shall be either returned or cancelled by the party of the second part upon the fulfillment by such member of the terms of the contract of leasing, and it is further agreed that party of the second part shall enter into an agreement in writing with said member whereby party of the second part agrees to fulfill their part of the contract and that said contract shall provide that in the event of the failure of said party of the second part to perform all the terms and conditions of said contract on their part to be performed, said deposit, if any, shall be immediately returned to such member and in the event that a bond or guarantee was given, that the same be null and void.

Exhibitor Cannot Cancel

It is further agreed that if any member of the party of the first part contracts for or rents a certain film to be run on a certain day or days at his theater, such contract cannot be cancelled and said member will be required to pay the rental on such film whether the same is run or not; unless such member shall give party of the second part not less than ten days' notice in advance of his intention to cancel said contract of rental.

It is further understood and agreed by and between the parties that in the event any film or picture or series or serial is prohibited by either the mayor, police or council of any city, town or village, the member of the party of the first part exhibiting such film or picture shall be required to pay as rental for such film or picture only for the time film or picture has been actually exhibited, on the basis of a daily average rental of said film or picture, for the time contracted to run the same.

It is further agreed between the parties that where a member of the party of the first part contracts for a serial or series of pictures running for a period of several weeks or over, in episodes of two or more reels each week, the same shall be considered as one picture or film and the same cannot be cancelled by such member within less than ten days of the running or exhibiting of the first series or episode and such member shall be required to pay for all unrun episodes or pictures after entering upon the exhibition of any part thereof.

Party of the second part further agrees to return to all members of the party of the first part all money now held by party of the second part, its agents, branches, or exchanges, as deposits heretofore received from members of the party of the first part. by party of the second part, and the party of the first part agrees that it will at all times assist the party of the second part in enforcing its contracts made with members of the party of the first part, provided the same are in accordance herewith and to co-operate with party of the second part in any manner whatsoever, for the mutual benefit of both exhibitor and producer.

In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hand and seal this 28th day of February, A. D. 1917.—David G. Rodgers, Chairman of Committee.

Successful Children's Shows

Children's shows in Nebraska have been developed to a point of real profit by exhibitors so that they are given the same attention nowadays that regular shows formerly had. Manager Robert Shirley of the Muse Theater, Omaha, announced "Laugh Day" recently. The program was two comedies, "Wild Animals at Large," "Bowling Contest," "Borrowed Sunshine," and the colored film "Water Scenes in Belgium."

The same day was "Bird Day" at the Strand, where Manager Thomas held capacity houses, with a bird film and a short talk by a local bird authority. Caged birds were on the stage as a part of the decorations. Another Saturday in the Strand was made "Boy Scout Day." Nearly 250 members of the local boy scout troops attended and gave a fife and drum drill. The picture shown upon that occasion was "The Adventures of a Boy Scout."

Reports from various parts of the country echo the success of the children's shows in Nebraska. The following are some of the longer pictures for young people, recommended by the affiliated committees for better films, a section of the National Committee for Better Films, Seventy-fifth avenue, New York City.

Bluebird—"The Mysterious Mrs. M."; Vitagraph—"Kitty Mackay"; K. E. S. E.—"Skinner's Dress Suit," "Little Shoes"; Metro—"The Promise," "His Father's Son"; Paramount—"The Fortunes of Fifi"; Triangle—"The Americano," "Jim Bludso"; Mutual—"Easy Street," "The Gentle Intruder"; Fox—"A Child of the Wilds," "A Tale of Two Cities"; World—"Mothers of France"; Artcraft—"A Poor Little Rich Girl."

"A Lovable Thief," a lively drama in three acts, is being filmed at Universal City by Ruth Stonehouse, who also plays the featured lead.

TO FILM "ESCAPE KING"

Williamson Brothers Secure World-Famous Houdini for Appearance in Big Picture—To Perform Specatcular Under-Water Feats

Houdini, hero of thousands of challengers and the creator of many miraculous escapes and inexplainable feats, has accepted the offer of the Williamson Brothers and will be featured by them in an international drama of thrills in the air, on land, and under water.

Houdini, who has broken out of all kinds of prisons and shackles, and who is to appear in a big Williamson submarine picture.

Has Houdini, called the superman, mastered the fourth dimension? Has he the power to project his material body through solids? A scientist, J. H. McKenzie, in his latest book, "Spirit Intercourse," published by Simkin Marshall, Hamilton Kent & Co. of London, devotes considerable space to Houdini and declares that he can dissolve his body into "psycho-plastic matter" by the simple process of "dematerialization."

Whatever merit there is in this explanation, it is to be put to a very definite test, the Williamson Brothers announce. When their big picture is taken in the clear waters of the West Indies, Houdini will endeavor to demonstrate that he can escape from the Williamson tube without breaking through the two inch glass, five and one-half feed in diameter that forms the window of their steel chamber in which the camera operator sits. Houdini states that he can turn the trick without permitting any water to enter the chamber or the flexible metallic tube leading down to it; in fact, his challenge includes that condition. Houdini has this to say:

You can quote me as stating that I realize perfectly well the hazardous nature of my exhibitions, and I never know until I have successfully completed one of my feats, such as being handcuffed, nailed into a wooden box with leaden weights attached, and dropped over the side of a vessel to free myself if I can, just whether I will ever set foot on land again.

Another reason for my enthusiasm over the undoubted success of this production, not because I am to be featured in it, but because the whole idea of it is so big, is this:

Throughout the world and especially in India, China and those countries where magic and sorcery have been held in the highest reverence and practiced for countless thousands of years, I have a following that is enormous. Having appeared in all the countries of the world, not once but several times, I am especially keen to have my pictures exhibited in those countries, and as I understand the policy of the Williamson Brothers, special representatives will exploit this picture simultaneously all over the world with its release in this country.

Over 15,000 miles of travel, I am told, will be required to secure the action of the story and I am quite convinced, considering the money to be given me for my services, that this picture will cost in the neighborhood of a half-million dollars to make.

Herbert Rawlinson is being featured in a five-act Universal production entitled "Hands Up."

NEW PICKFORD FILM

"A Romance of the Redwoods" Now Being Completed in California Under De Mille's Direction. To Be Released May 14.

Closely following the announcement which involves its affiliation with D. W. Griffith, the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, through its president, Walter E. Greene, offers another big surprise for the trade as well as the general public, which links the art of two of the screen's greatest factors, Mary Pickford and Cecil B. De Mille.

For some time past Miss Pickford, following the completion of "A Poor Little Rich Girl," has been appearing before the camera in California under the personal direction of Cecil B. De Mille. This fact presents another triumph for Artcraft in keeping with its previous important announcements affecting such celebrities as D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and George M. Cohan.

The new Pickford vehicle will be released under the title of "A Romance of the Redwoods," and is now rapidly nearing completion. A western subject of full-blooded, dramatic action, it presents "Little Mary" in a role that is entirely different from anything in which she has ever appeared on the screen. The story was written by the famous director himself in collaboration with Jeannie Macpherson, and discloses a wealth of typical Pickford incidents of particular heart appeal. The settings are of the days of '49 during the time of the big gold rush. Mary Pickford, as Jenny Lawrence, a little New England miss, journeys to the west in search of her only relative, an uncle. Before she is aware of it, she falls in love and as a result becomes enmeshed in serious complications. Various clever twists to the story afford surprises that add greatly to the general merit of the subject. It is expected that this play will be entirely completed in the near future and the release date has been set for May 14, following Douglas Fairbanks in "In Again—Out Again," the April release for Artcraft.

"Darkest Russia," a forthcoming World-Picture Brady-made, has an exceptionally timely topic. The scene is laid at first in Petrograd and later in the mines of Siberia. Social and political conditions against which the present revolution in Russia was aimed are shown in this play as a background for the love story of a young Jewess and the son of a noble family. Alice Brady is the star and John Bowers plays the principal male role.

The Exhibitor and the Newspaper

BY PETE J. SCHMID

(Publicity Representative, Artcraft Pictures Corporation.)

HAD there been newspapers back in the old fig-leaf days there is little doubt but that Adam would never have fallen. He would have read column after column about the "initial appearance" of Eve, for had there been a newspaper there would have been a press agent and had there been a press agent, the newspapers would have heralded wide the coming of the first woman—provided there was no war news to crowd out good cigarette-inspired press matter. Then at least, the old boy would have had a chance for he would have been placed on his guard, inasmuch as any press matter, no matter how true, is read with suspicion—'tis sad to relate.

Just as Adam fell because of the fact that there were no newspaper notices, so have exhibitors fallen because, as far as their advertising was concerned, there were no newspapers. Far be it from me to contend that the newspaper is the only advertising medium in the world. However, little P. J. does feel that the newspaper should receive a goodly portion of the money which Mr. Exhibitor has safely stowed away in the bank in behalf of the advertising and exploitation of his show.

The showman would as much think of opening in a city without relieving himself of some hard-earned cash in the way of newspaper advertising as he would of giving the understudy the star's dressing room. Among the exhibitors throughout the country today are some of the greatest showmen since P. T. Barnum drew aside the flap of his big tent.

Never has an institution grown so rapidly and to such an extent as the motion picture. It is only to be expected that many in the picture industry could not keep stride with its rapid advance. Many established showmen have come into the game; many showmen by nature but of other business association have become affiliated with the screen, and many successful men who were not showmen have enlisted in the vast army of the cinema. The first continued their experience as showmen and in various cases, increased their efficiency as such as a result of the silent art; the second learned showmanship quickly inasmuch as it came naturally, and the third laboriously took up the art of showmanship, some becoming successful despite themselves, but many falling by the wayside.

Exhibitor Like Department Store Manager

The exhibitor is much in the same class as the department store manager. Both cater direct to the public. The department store is the retail dealer in shirts, collars and underwear. The exhibitor is the retail dealer in entertainment. The department store attributes much of its success to the newspaper ads. The live-wire exhibitor does likewise. The department store naturally tries to get the best goods at the best prices; it strives to give its patrons established articles. The enterprising exhibitor does the same. The department store manager advertises in the newspaper to a greater extent than usual whenever he has a special sale. Special sales bring new customers; new customers, if pleased, will return. Shows presenting the art of such established favorites as D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks or George M. Cohan should be treated similar to the special sale for they mean special sales in entertainment. The mention of their names will not only attract crowds to the theater but will always bring new patrons to the photoplay. Everyone will sooner or later "just have to see that famous movie star" if for no other reason than to see why he or she is so popular. Once in your theater they are susceptible to the talents, charms and mannerisms which have made the star in question famous. Of course, the music and the general appearance of the theater is a great factor in their decision as to whether or not they will return.

The newspaper is one of the greatest available agents tending toward the success of the exhibitor. Most newspapers are willing to work hand in hand with the exhibitor and give co-operation that could never be bought. Everyone that can see reads the newspapers. Everyone that can see is a prospective customer to the motion picture theater. Every exhibitor that "sees" the light of showmanship advertises in the newspapers.

Masterpiece Buys Deemster

B. Amsterdam, of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, of Vine Street, Philadelphia, has purchased the Hall Caine masterpiece, "The Deemster," for the states of Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia. The deal was completed on March 28. Mr. Amsterdam, who is associated with Mr. L. Korson, will present "The Deemster" in the National Theater, Washington, the week of April 23, for a run of four weeks, and the same week in a legitimate theater in Baltimore for a period of two weeks and possibly more.

Mr. Amsterdam is arranging a Press Club showing at Washington the week of April 16. He advises that he will handle "The Deemster" throughout his territory as a road attraction, playing all the larger cities.

Lester Park, representing the Photoplay Exchange of Salt Lake City, Utah, has consummated contract for his organization with President William L. Sherrill of The Frohman Amusement Corporation for the exclusive rights to the Frohman master production, "The Witching Hour," for the territory of Colorado, Wyoming and Utah, at a price reported to set a new record by their territory.

Max's Latest Fun Maker

Trade showings of Max Linder's third Essanay comedy, "Max in a Taxi," are now attracting exhibitors' attention at all branch offices of the Kleine-Edison-

M'sieu Linder tries a little "reverse English" on his horse in his newest Essanay comedy, "Max In a Taxi."

Selig-Essanay Service. The noted European comedian's latest American production will be released April 28.

"Max in a Taxi" represents Monsieur Linder's initial effort on the Pacific Coast. Technically it affords an interesting comparison between the natural lighting and scenic effects of California and the artificial accommodations of Essanay's Chicago studios, by which his first two comedies—"Max Comes Across" and "Max Wants a Divorce"—were produced. So far Max has uttered no word of praise, one way or the other.

According to reports from the K-E-S-E headquarters, the third picture is up to Essanay's standard technically. The photography is excellent, and, otherwise, no detail has been overlooked to make it a perfect bit of film.

"Max in a Taxi" has a screen time of approximately thirty minutes.

Valeska Suratt in "She"

Sir Rider Haggard's internationally known novel, "She," a weird, fantastic story laid in the Africa of two thousand years ago, is announced by the Fox Film Corporation as the next release starring Valeska Suratt.

The picture, which was many weeks in the making, will be released for the week of April 23, to exhibitors and to the public on the regular William Fox program, although it is a strikingly elaborate production.

Motography Will Aid You

Motography is always glad to aid an exhibitor in selecting children's programs and to give him any information regarding the method of obtaining each picture. And in turn we shall be glad to incorporate into our department "What the Picture Did for Me" any exhibitor's opinions on the value of the children's pictures he has run.

"Living Library" of Films

For some time more or less nebulous plans have been in the air in connection with the foundation, probably at Columbia College, New York City, of a "living library" in which the screened works of the most famous American authors might be immortalized for exhibition to posterity. The first concern actively to interest itself in the project is the General Film Company which controls the exclusive distribution rights to the entire output of O. Henry's typewriter, one of the most fertile storehouses of interesting and unusual film stories so far revealed.

The idea at present is to appoint a board to decide which are the most worthy of "The American Kipling's" stories to be thus preserved for succeeding generations. The General Film Company's co-operation has been invited and those interested in the project have been assured of the hearty participation of the concern in the plan. As plans are at present the first three stories of the long series which are distributed under the title of Broadway Star Features, namely, "Past One at Rooney's," "Friends in San Rosario," and "The Third Ingredient" will be the first photodramas to be placed in the archives of the proposed "living library." The General Film is in receipt of hundreds of letters daily commending the plan and urging immediate action.

Lockwood Signs Long Contract

Following the return of Fred J. Balshofer from the East and the announcement that Harold Lockwood would be featured in several big Yorke-Metro productions in the near future, comes the news that Lockwood this week signed a new contract with Mr. Balshofer, president and general manager of the Yorke Film Corporation, the contract to run for two years, during which Harold Lockwood will be starred in a number of master-features which will be bigger than any picture in which the Yorke-Metro star has yet appeared.

Sees Operation on Himself

To watch a surgical operation on himself while he is strong and healthy is the latest novel experience of Director George L. Cox as during the time he was unconscious under the ether cone Mr. Cox's camera-man was turning his regular "two a second."

A hospital operation scene was required for the picture Mr. Cox is making for the Rockefeller Foundation and making a virtue of necessity a camera and operator went along when Mr. Cox underwent his own operation, surely the last word in motion picture realism.

Free Educationals in Toledo

Educational motion pictures are being shown in the Toledo Museum of Art Sunday afternons.

The following films were listed for a recent Sunday and also Saturday afternon at 3: "Through the Canadian Rockies," "Elimination of Space," describing the manufacture of an automobile, and one animated cartoon, "When Knights Were Bold."

Sunday, like Saturday, was a free day. The museum was open from 1 until 5 p. m.

The first production in which Jack Pickford will appear since his transfer from the Famous Players studio in New York to the Lasky studio in Hollywood will be "The Girl at Home," in which he will co-star with Vivian Martin. This, by the way, marks Miss Martin's first appearance under the Lasky management.

Goldwyn to Distribute Own Films

BIG PRODUCING CONCERN TO OPERATE OWN BRANCHES

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION will own and operate its own distributing organization in all of the principal distribution zones of America.

This announcement by Samuel Goldfish definitely ends the speculation that has been going on in film circles since the Goldwyn Corporation was organized last December.

Plans are well under way for the opening of offices in the various cities into which distribution has been concentrated and these Goldwyn branches will be ready to deal with exhibitors early in June. Meanwhile, all negotiations and correspondence are being handled directly by the New York offices of the company.

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, in announcing Goldwyn's decision to own and operate its own distribution mechanism, made the following statement:

Exhibitors Favor Plan

From the beginning of its career, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has made serious and diligent efforts to learn the wishes of the exhibitors of America. Not only have we asked them for opinions on every conceivable problem of distribution and showmanship; we have heeded their suggestions and incorporated many of them into the business policies of the company.

The responses from exhibitors were overwhelmingly in favor of a Goldwyn-owned distribution organization. The concerns that give their patrons the things the patrons want, are the most successful firms in all industries. The picture industry is no exception.

Able and successful men in the various distribution territories have offered Goldwyn large sums of money for regional franchises, or for part ownership of territories. The aggregate of these offers is just in excess of $1,000,000. We have seen fit to decline these offers and to continue to assume full responsibility for the making of our productions and for their future distribution.

By accepting these offers, the owners and organizers of Goldwyn could have shared the huge risks that any men in big industries are called upon to assume with outsiders. But we preferred to assume all responsibility both for our productions and their salesmanship, because we have an enormous confidence in the human elements we have brought together for the making of a wholly new type of motion pictures.

This confidence is based on the capacity of the Goldwyn producers, the fame and ability of our authors, the reputation and value of our stars and the quality of service and salesmanship that we expect to devise in connection with the marketing of our product.

New Co-operative Methods

We think there are methods of co-operation for a producing concern to practice with exhibitors that have never before been known in the industry. We believe it possible to reduce exhibitor antagonism to an almost invisible minimum. The achievement of this depends almost entirely upon two things:

1. Ably-made quality productions.
2. The type of men employed by the producer to market them.

Under a system of regional franchise or partnerships Goldwyn would lose the power of control over the men who would be in active charge of its field policies. Home office contact with our exhibitors would be virtually destroyed.

Goldwyn feels certain that its determination to own and operate its own branches without outside assistance, represents the sanest and best thought in distribution.

One of our strongest efforts will be made in aiding exhibitors in the presentation of our pictures in their theaters and in solving many of the troublesome house problems with which he is vitally concerned.

Exhibitor Lauds Motography Editorial

April 7, 1917.

MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago:

Many thanks for your editorial of April 14 on the Exhibitors' League entitled "Why Don't You Join?". I shall certainly give this all the publicity possible and shall call attention of Twin City exhibitors to it, as I am to attend a meeting in Minneapolis Tuesday. I want everyone of them to know and appreciate your fairness and broad mindedness. I surely hope that every trade journal reader will own a subscription to MOTOGRAPHY and that your nine thousand exhibitor circulation will be increased to twelve thousand by January 1. Very sincerely yours, Thomas Furniss, Brunswick Amusement Co., Duluth, Minnesota.

Colorado Men After Censorship

All of the censorship bills which have been proposed in the state of Colorado have been killed in the legislature through the efforts of the film men. There is a small likelihood of their being revived in an extra session. This means that for two years the picture industry in Colorado will be free from the censorship menace so far as state laws are concerned.

There is, however, a new pest developing, that takes the form of censorship agitators, going from town to town, trying to establish so-called welfare boards. Meetings are held and public opinion is agitated to bring pressure to bear upon the various local authorities, which attempts to result in censorship.

The exhibitors and film men of Colorado are planning a harder fight on the local movement than they have in the state legislature. Every film shown in Colorado is now censored by the National Board of Reviews and also by Mrs. Marguerite Conway of Denver, and the film men feel that this is sufficient censorship.

The Rocky Mountain Screen Club of Denver is getting out some effective literature to oppose the censorship agitation.

"Mothers of France"

"Our purchase of 'Mothers of France'," said William A. Brady, director general of World-Pictures Brady-Made, "had an object very considerably beyond money-making. In the first place, it enabled us to do something of very unusual value for exhibitors using the World program, and in the second, it placed us in the position to prove our contention that specials are no better than real program features—only sometimes longer.

"We are convinced that World-Pictures Brady-Made are in fact a program of specials. In case there may be persons who think we are over enthusiastic about our own product, let us refer them to the Sarah Bernhardt picture play, which we did not make, but which we place upon our program, first, to give our exhibitors the best that the market affords, and second, to indicate that we do not fear comparisons.

"At the time of making the arrangement for the Mme. Bernhardt photoplay in America we also concluded a deal under which we are to have the rights for certain other great French pictures made by the same company and under the same director, Louis Mercanton.

"Certain stars under engagement to the foreign organization will come to America in due course to play in our dramas, while several of our own stars will go to Europe for productions under Mr. Mercanton's direction. The French players will sail as soon as they have finished the picture upon which they are working at present, but our American stars will not leave this country until the finish of the war, which naturally enough, has about paralyzed the manufacture of picture plays in the countries involved."

FOR "NAVY WEEK"

Mutual Offers a Representative Showing of Patriotic One-Reel Films Which Deal with Preparedness in the Army and Navy

With the interest at top pitch in the question of the preparedness of the United States and its liability of being drawn into the great conflict, the week of April 8-15 is to be known nationally as "Navy Week," and the motion picture exhibitors of the country have been requested to help in this celebration by the showing of appropriate and patriotic pictures.

The Mutual Film Corporation will come to the aid of the theater man in planning his program for the week by offering two five-reel features, six one-reel topicals and numerous issues of the "Mutual Weekly," all dealing with patriotic subjects.

The question of preparedness and what Uncle Sam has really been doing to get America ready for war is uppermost in the minds of all Americans and this is answered in detail in the series of six one-reel features, "Uncle Sam's Defenders." Each of these six pictures is complete in itself and depicts in detail the real strength of the United States. The subjects treated are "From Civilian to Soldier," "Our Boys at the Border," "A Jack Tar in the Making," "Afloat and Ashore," "Scouts of the Sea and Sky," and "Bulldogs of the Deep." One of these pictures, run each night during "Navy Week," will give your patrons a full knowledge of what is being done by both the army and the navy in their efforts to be ready to defend America.

If the exhibitor would rather have something a little lighter but still showing many scenes taken on board the U. S. battleships and the Jackies at work and at play, he can use "Miss Jackie of the Navy," featuring Margarita Fischer, a five-reel Mutual production, which contains both authentic information on the navy and a comedy strain.

The "Mutual Weekly" for April 8 will be designed to meet the demands of "Navy Week," and will carry a distinctly patriotic flavor. Many of the previous issues of the "Mutual Weekly" could also be utilized to good advantage at this time.

"The Price She Paid," the Selznick-Pictures production of David Graham Phillips' noted story, has been universally declared to be Clara Kimball Young's greatest achievement.

War Picture Released

With the widespread call for recruits, thirty-five regiments already called out, the women of the country offering their services in whatever capacity they can assist, and war the principal topic of conversation, interest in war pictures is at its height.

One of the thrilling scenes in "A Daughter of War."

The Mutual Film Corporation, to answer this demand for war pictures and aid in arousing the patriotism of the recruits, has issued a special picture "A Daughter of War." The story is laid in the days of the Revolution and carries the atmosphere of the spirit of '76.

The quaint costumes and magnificent backgrounds selected along the bank of the historical Hudson make a beautifully artistic production. Many historical scenes are depicted, among them being the Battle of Saratoga, the surrender of Cornwallis and the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

There are splendid impersonations of noted figures in history, including George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Sir John Burgoyne, Benedict Arnold and Major Andre.

May Ward, as the daughter of an American yeoman, for whose hand the officers are rivals, appears in many moods. First she is seen in huntress dress stalking game with the Indian guide; next as the carefree girl flirting with first one officer then another; then as a patriot drilling her girl friends to fight for her country, and again as a loyal American when she climbs the flagpole to fasten the stars and stripes on top in place of the British flag.

Mary Pickford Opens Frisco Theater

The Strand Theater, San Francisco, made its debut as a high-class motion picture house with Mary Pickford in her newest Artcraft picture, "A Poor Little Rich Girl," as the feature attraction, playing to seven thousand people on the opening night.

The Strand was formerly known as the Empress, playing vaudeville and musical comedy productions and has been entirely rebuilt for the presentation of pictures. The new Strand is under the management of Sid Grauman and plays to a fifteen, twenty and thirty-cent schedule. Mr. Grauman has contracted for first run engagements on all Artcraft releases.

FAIRBANKS OFF FOR THE WEST

Douglas Fairbanks, Artcraft star and everybody's favorite, left New York for the Coast on April 8 to begin his next picture, "A Regular Guy." The day before his departure from New York the Artcraft Pictures Corporation made him a guest of honor and many newspaper and trade paper men happy by giving a luncheon at Murray's, a place on Forty-second street, famous for its subdued lights, oriental trimmings, and revolving floor. Also, for the fact that its patrons can always discriminate between the moving dance floor and its stationary border.

The affair went along right merrily. Fairbanks made a speech, and then another one. Pete Schmid, the master of ceremonies, interrupted every now and then to speak publicly or to pull some stunt. Al Lichtman was heard from several times, Kelcey Allen confined his open conversation to a refusal to speak, and Bennie Zeidman fluttered about as though spring were here and he was a glad butterfly.

Kenneth C. Beaton, better known as K. C. B., the writer of "Ye Towne Gossip" in the New York American, was asked to give his impressions of a picture studio. He drew his opinions from the Fairbanks studio, and seemed favorably impressed up to the point where, after having his picture taken with Doug. he received a torn photo from the International News Service with a letter stating that he could obtain six untorn and similar photos for $30—which caused Fairbanks to look suspiciously at Bennie Zeidman, his publicity representative. Bennie convincingly pleaded his innocence, so it seems that the Hearst organization was having some fun with their K. C. B.

The following were present:

Douglas Fairbanks, Wid Gunning, Bennie Zeidman, Helen Duey, Women's Home Companion; Elizabeth Sears, Film Fun; P. F. Atkinson, Metropolitan Magazine; F. M. Gould, Metropolitan Magazine; M. L. Malevinsky, Dennis F. O'Brien, John Emerson, Walter E. When Fairbanks and his party reached Chicago a similar affair was given under the supervision of Max Goldstine of the Chicago Artcraft office. It took the form of a luncheon at the Illinois Athletic Club and many prominent exhibitors were present, along with members of the press. Peter J. Schaefer acted as toastmaster. "Doug." and "Bennie," his live little publicity man, left for the west the same evening.

Among the interesting things that Fairbanks told his admirers was that he is taking a course of study which will lead to the examination for a berth in the officers' reserve corps of the army and that he is ready to fight whenever the nation needs him.

Among those at the Chicago luncheon were the following:

Universal Buys More Sunshine

The largest consignment of Cooper-Hewitt lights ever made to the Pacific Coast has been received at Universal City to augment the large supply already on hand for use in making pictures at night or in inclement weather. This latest consignment involved a cost of approximately $50,000.

These lights are termed "elevator wings" and by their use rays can be thrown on a set from almost any height or any angle, as the contrivance is in three sections with the side wings adjustable to any position or height. The middle tier of the lights also can be elevated with a tip either forward or backward.

By the receipt of these new lights Universal City is equipped to make a number of pictures at any time without being dependent for interiors upon climatic conditions. The film capital already has three immense waterproof studios with a huge floor space in addition to thousands of square feet of open stages merely covered with diffusers.

FILM AIDS ENLISTMENTS

Vitagraph's "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation" Takes Prominent Role in Preparedness Activities in Philadelphia

Philadelphia exhibitors who have booked "Womanhood," Vitagraph's spectacular war and preparedness picture, showed their patriotism on Saturday, March 31, by using the picture to increase enlistments and incidentally told more than half a million people all about the big picture in every manner known to the circus showman.

March 31 was Philadelphia's big preparedness day when more than one hundred thousand able bodied men paraded the streets through lanes of people estimated at half a million persons. The parade terminated at Independence Square, where another hundred thousand persons listened to patriotic oratory.

The exhibitors interested in "Womanhood" took advantage of the parade by combining and placing it in two spectacular patriotic groups. One of the groups was "Joan of Arc," who was represented by one of the extra Vitagraph women and who was mounted on a beautiful white horse. She marched with the Washington Post, Patriotic Sons of America, and was preceded by one man bearing a banner with a patriotic inscription and was followed by five others carrying similar banners. The inscriptions on the banners kept the crowds along the sidewalk in a continual uproar and Joan was applauded during the entire march.

"Joan of Arc is the greatest recruiting officer of history—See Womanhood now at the Chestnut Street Opera House," the first banner in the procession read.

The five banners carried by men following Joan read:

Women meet this crisis by becoming Joans of Arc—See Womanhood.

Womanhood shows what Joan of Arc did for her country—See Womanhood.

Women make your men enlist—See Womanhood—See Womanhood.

Womanhood proves women have a place in War—See Womanhood.

Womanhood is a preparedness picture—See Womanhood at the Chestnut Street Opera House.

"The Spirit of '76" was represented by the boy with a drum, his father with the fife and the grandfather with the flag. This patriotic inspiring trio headed the division of the Patriotic Sons of America, and like "Joan of Arc," were preceded by one banner carrier and followed by five. The inscription on the first banner read:

Men, your country needs you now the same as in '76—See Womanhood at the Chestnut Street Opera House.

The exhibitors also engaged a young woman who attired as Joan of Arc, walked up and down Chestnut street, the leading downtown thoroughfore of Philadelphia, a sign on her back demanding that everybody see "Womanhood."

To further advertise preparedness and the picture the exhibitors procured a float upon which they installed a tremendous banner reading: " 'Womanhood' is the wonderful preparedness picture suggested by Colonel Roosevelt, endorsed by Secretaries Baker and Daniels—See it now."

The woman dressed as Joan of Arc and the float are to be kept on the streets indefinitely.

These circus advertising stunts were further augmented by the use of large advertising space in the Philadelphia newspapers, a tremendous circularizing campaign and co-operation with Philadelphia clubdom.

Circularize Schools

The combined exhibitors also distributed nearly fifty thousand circulars to the schools of Philadelphia, the circulars announcing Vitagraph's contest for the best preparedness essay, the prize for which is $1,000 in cash. Philadelphia school principals are enthusiastic over the contest.

Many of them have suggested that the pupils entering the contest should be sure and see "Womanhood" before attempting to start their composition. This contest the exhibitors owning the neighborhood houses believe will make them play to capacity for several months following the general release of the picture on April 9.

"Womanhood" was run at the Chestnut Street Opera House at prices ranging from twenty-five cents to a dollar for four weeks.

It gained momentum with every performance until the end of the run when it was predicted by experienced showmen that the picture could have been continued for eight or nine weeks had not the booking arrangements of the opera house been such that the run could not be lengthened.

The Man Inside the Booth

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

I got my answer to my question in this week's MOTOGRAPHY and wish to thank you for the same. I do not wish to criticise but I think that you have made a mistake in our friend J. J. W.'s answer. In your diagram No. 2 of his answer you state that the middle (25 and 20) circuits are taken off of the right side of the system but in the diagram I notice that there's a connection on the neutral wire but the other side jumps all three wires. I know that you must have a lot of work ahead and I call that a very slight mistake but just wanted to see it corrected for J. J. W.'s sake and to keep up the credit of the projection department. Thanking you again for my answer, I remain—A. J. P.

Your welcome letter at hand, and I thank you for calling my attention to the mistake in the diagram, (the one referred to is on page 682, issued March 31) and you are right, the diagram should show the wire from the 20 and 25 amp. circuits connected to the wire on the right in the three-wire circuit. This mistake was made when they copied my drawing and was an oversight. I am very glad that you take enough interest in the department to notice any and all mistakes, and I want you as well as all of the operators and managers to feel at perfect liberty to ask for any information that you may wish that pertains to this department and to call my attention to any mistakes that might occur. Come again.

I have a question in the three-wire system I would like a little information on. I am chief operator in one of the largest theaters here and also a reader of the MOTOGRAPHY. I see a question this week in the MOTOGRAPHY and would like to ask the same question only in a different way. Take the three-wire system with an arc drawing 60 amps. on one side of the line and on the other side of the line have three incandescent lamp circuits of 5 amps. each. Now if all lights are burning and you remove the neutral fuse, or it should blow out, what would be the result on both sides? Above is a diagram.—V. H. S., Massachusetts.

In figuring the above diagram, you figure that the outside wire carrying the arc lamp as carrying 60 amps. and the outside carrying the incandescent lights as carrying 15 amps., then the neutral must be carrying the difference or 45 amps. In case the neutral fuse would be removed or would blow out it would throw the three 5 amp. circuits in series with the arc lamp circuit on 220 volts. The result would be that the voltage on the arc lamp would drop and the voltage on the incandescent circuits would raise until they were equal in voltage, but the chances are that the incandescent lights would burn out immediately and by doing that open the circuit and the arc would go out too.

I have two 38-amp., 110-volt rheostats connected in multiple supplying a moving picture machine arc. Will you please tell me how to figure the resistance of such a connection, also how do you figure the voltage I am getting at the arc? Below is the diagram.—E. B., Conn.

The rule for figuring the resistance of a set of rheostats in multiple as you have these connected in the diagram comes under the rule of the "Laws of the divided circuit" (i. e.) the current flow in each leg is invariable proportional to their resistance. You do not say whether the maximum capacity of each rheostat is 38 amps. or whether you are taking 38 amps. through each of them. If the latter and if both are set on the same point how much is yet not cut out on each? To give you an answer to your questions I would have to know the amount of resistance that is in the rheostats and the amps. that you are drawing at the arc.

The rule for figuring your question is this:

$$C = \frac{E}{R} \qquad 38 = \frac{110}{R} \qquad R = \frac{110}{38}$$ but R = resistance of the rheostats plus the resistance of the arc.

I notice that you boost Silver Tips. I use them, but at first I had trouble with the adapters. I made my own and now all places in San Francisco using these carbons have bought adapters from me. I recently placed an eighth-page advertisement in one of the trade papers and never received one call from it. I am sending you one of the adapters to try on your "piano" gratis. You know an operator working for wages cannot afford to advertise extensively, his "salary"—get that—does not allow such a drain. These holders sell for $1.00. If any of the boys need them I will be glad to supply them to them at that price.—E. M. Schwarz, 2040 Taylor street, San Francisco, California. Local No. 162, I. A. T. S. E.

Up to date I have not received the carbon holder, Brother Schwarz, but as soon as I do I will give it a trial and give you a report on it. I cannot recommend any article until I see for myself just what it will do, but I have no doubt but what your carbon holder is O. K. and hope you meet with success.

The editor of this department has received several complaints from operators who are using Silver Tip carbons. The operators claim that the carbons deposit small particles of metal on the rear condenser. I have taken the matter up with The National Carbon Co. and under date of April 4 received a letter from W. C. Kunzmann of their sales department who advises operators as follows: "Regarding the metal coat of the Silvertip carbons spattering the rear condensing lens wish to advise that if the proper condensing system is used which brings the arc from 3½ to 4 inches away from the rear lens this metal spattering is very slight. Wherever a metal coated carbon is used it is impossible to entirely eliminate metal beads being carried off at the arc because of the air currents circulating in the lamp house.

"The Silvertip coat is an alloy metal which volatilizes at the arc as the carbon is consumed. The lighter metal beads which are given off at the arc may collect on the rear lens if the arc is operated closer than above stated due to the improper focal length condensing system. However, should a few of these lighter beads collect on the rear lens they can easily be removed without any damage to the glass by using a safety razor blade, or a circular slide glass can be placed in front of the rear lens which protects same with very little loss in screen illumintion."

"Even As You and I"

Inquiries continue pouring into the Lois Weber State Rights Department, 1600 Broadway, from exhibitors in all parts of the country who are desirous of obtaining exclusive territory on the latest Lois Weber feature, "Even as You and I," the seven-part production which has been playing to capacity business at the Rialto Theater.

The fact that S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the Rialto Theater, New York, booked this remarkable film production for Holy Week alone stamps it as an extraordinary attraction. It is generally recognized throughout the picture industry that this is the worst week in the whole year. Among a score of strong features he selected "Even as You and I," because of its tense dramatic story, its artistry and because of the excellent acting of the cast, headed by Ben Wilson and Mignon Anderson, and which includes such well known screen players as Bertram Grassby, Priscilla Dean, Harry Carter, Maude George and Hayward Mack.

As a result business at the Rialto surpassed all expectations, and instead of playing to small crowds for the past week hundreds of persons anxious to view this great photodrama, were turned away. "Even as You and I" demonstrated its box office value under a real test and one which only a film masterpiece such as this could possibly do. There is a wide appeal in theme which is founded upon fundamental laws of life. Its presentation on the screen is superbly handled by capable actors who give splendid performances in difficult reels. It is staged in an artistic manner without thought of expense in regard to detail and the direction constitutes a film achievement.

"A Kentucky Cinderella," a drama from the story of F. Hopkinson Smith, is rapidly nearing completion at Universal City.

Railroad Ties Announce Serial

Helen Holmes did some advertising on her own hook for "The Railroad Raiders," Mutual-Signal photonovel scheduled for release April 9.

She shipped to Alexander Pantages and Eugene Roth, well known Pacific coast exhibitors, each a roughly hewn railroad tie on which was painted: "Helen Holmes Will Soon Appear in 'The Railroad Raiders.'"

The idea was Helen's own and she went so far in its execution as to supervise the shipment of the ties, and carry the receipt back to the Signal offices.

The unique shipment caused considerable comment along the route and delivery at Mr. Roth's Portola Theater, San Francisco, attracted a crowd.

String Shows Universal Serial

The Universal Film Company announces that Marcus Loew completed arrangements yesterday to show the new Universal Surprise Serial, "The Voice on the Wire" throughout his entire circuit of theaters. Mr. Loew's decision was reached following his attendance at a preliminary showing of a part of the serial held in the Universal studios, at which he declared that "The Voice on the Wire" was one of the most thrilling and entertaining weekly features to have been filmed in recent years. It has been booked for first showing in the twenty-five Loew theaters in the metropolitan district, following which it will be featured on the weekly program of the Loew houses throughout the country. Fifteen weeks will be required to exhibit the picture in its entirety.

McClure Pictures Moves Office

McClure Pictures, now releasing "Seven Deadly Sins," the series of seven five-reel features, has moved its office from the McClure building, New York, to the sixteenth floor of the Berkeley building at 25 West Forty-fourth street.

The McClure series department of the Triangle Distributing Corporation and the McClure publications also have moved to the new address.

Filmed Novel at Big Theaters

HALL CAINE'S "THE DEEMSTER" BEING SOLD TO STATE RIGHTS BUYERS

"THE DEEMSTER," by Hall Caine, is being released on the state rights plan. It is different from any feature offered to state rights buyers recently and is considered by experts to be one of the strongest features now on the market. Of course, Hall Caine being recognized as one of the greatest living authors and having to his credit "The Christian," "The Eternal City," and other like successes, commands instant attention from all thinking people.

At the Broadway Theater, Sunday, April 15, "The Deemster" makes its New York premiere, but even before the Broadway Theater announcement, state right experts placed their stamp of approval on it. Louis Mayer of Boston snapped it up and reports unusual bookings at high rentals.

Shown at Big Theaters

B. Amsterdam of the Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia, who purchased the rights for Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia, is arranging to show "The Deemster" in big theaters in Baltimore and Washington before allowing it to be released in the picture houses proper, but reports big bookings to follow his prelease bookings.

Other buyers, in the several territories already disposed of, report satisfactory progress and promise an outline of success as the bookings progress.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, with offices in the Times Building, is delighted with the progress made by his sales organization along co-operative lines with buyers, and goes on record as guaranteeing to live up to any promises made by his force. He and Louis J. Selznick are preparing a great drive for "The Deemster" as soon as it closes at the Broadway, which will be at the end of two weeks, as that is all the time available at the big theater.

Marcus Loew and the other big time exhibitors are bidding for "The Deemster," and it is possible that New Yorkers will see the Hall Caine posters on billboards for many weeks to come.

Change in Selznick Policy

Selznick-Pictures will no longer be sold by exchanges which handle cheaper goods.

Says Mr. Selznick:

I have been forced to take this step because of the actions of my own franchise holders. They have been displaying rhinestones and diamonds in the same showcase. The exchange man who is loaded up with cheap films naturally has to work twice as hard to sell them as he does to sell the good ones, which he lets take care of themselves.

In carrying out this principle, Ben S. Cohen, who has organized many of the Selznick branches, has left for the Pacific Coast. He will establish headquarters in San Francisco, opening exchanges in that city and Los Angeles and Seattle, for carrying out the Selznick "quality" idea. This plan will also be carried out in Boston.

Lillian Walker with New Company

An unusual combination has just been effected in the motion picture world which will bring into a single producing company Lillian Walker, a popular star, Aaron Hoffman, author of dramatic acts and screen successes, and Harry Revier, one of the most original and efficient of directors. This unusual combination of talent will produce five-reel comedy-drama features fitted to Lillian Walker, former Vitagraph star, who will appear in Ogden comedy dramas.

Miss Walker's popular methods. They will answer the demand for cleaner, better pictures by combining the exposition of a basic, significant idea with high entertainment value.

A distributing arrangement is being worked out which will give these pictures the widest possible circulation. Miss Walker's popularity is universal and firmly established, and her admirers everywhere will receive this announcement with the keenest interest.

Mr. Hoffman is vice-president and one of the organizers of the Popular Plays and Players Company, one of the prominent producing units on the Metro program. It was he who introduced Mme. Petrova to pictures. The original stories he has written for her have done much to contribute to that success.

Mr. Hoffman says the best of scripts can be ruined by an incompetent director. Of Mr. Revier he says:

He is a wizard of the screen. He possesses a dramatic instinct developed to the highest possible degree, combined with a thorough knowledge of the technical phase of this industry. This makes it possible for him to be artistic, dramatic, efficient and economical. If any further progress is to be made in this industry it will have to be through the development of men possessing the knowledge that Mr. Revier does.

Starting with the famous Ambrosia in Italy and Gaumont in France fifteen years ago, Mr. Revier has forged ahead constantly, until now he ranks among the leaders of his profession.

The supporting company is being organized by Lester Park, vice-president and general manager of the Ogden Pictures Corporation. A studio is ready at Ogden, Utah, and plans are completed for starting the first picture within a few weeks. Albert Scowcroft, a leading Utah business man and a pioneer in the film business, is president. The secretary and treasurer is W. Fred Bossner, formerly expert "theater doctor" with Paramount, and a man, like his associates, thoroughly schooled in all banches of the film business. J. J. O'Connor, associatd for 16 years with some of the biggest manufacturing concerns in the country, is general representative. The other directors are W. H. Battis, president of the Utah Construction Company, Mayor Abbot R. Heywood of Ogden, Fred G. Taylor, secretary and general manager of the Amalgamated Sugar Company, R. B. Porter of the Dee interests in Utah, and Dr. W. H. Petty, director in many Utah organizations.

Conducts "Anita Stewart Week"

The Strand Theater, in Racine, Wisconsin, recently developed a new method of adding to its list of patrons by having an Anita Stewart week. During the seven days, six productions in which this dainty little Vitagraph star was featured, were used to such advantage as to break all box-office records of the theater.

The Strand advertised the novelty in all the Racine papers and through the liberal use of regular and special one, three, and six-sheets for a whole week before the special Anita Stewart showings began. Collaborating with Sydney E. Abel, manager of the Chicago exchange of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., the management of the Strand selected as its program "The Juggernaut," "The Combat," "The Suspect," "Daring of Diana," "My Lady's Slipper," and "The Sins of the Mothers."

Racine is a city of some 30,000 people. Either even the tiniest children were taken to the Strand during Anita Stewart week, on paid admissions, or else, as seems more likely, many of Racine's motion picture lovers went early and often to the Strand, for it played to more than 29,000 paid admissions in the seven days. The admission price from 1:30 to 6 o'clock was ten cents. Twenty cents was the price charged from 6 o'clock to closing time.

Musical Score for "Womanhood"

A special synchronized musical score on "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," which will soon be released by Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., has been prepared by S. M. Berg. This score is so arranged that it can be used by a pianist or organist alone or by any combination of musicians, from violin and piano up to full orchestra At the personal suggestion of J. Stuart Blackton, director general of the Vitagraph company, who is author and director of "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," Mr. Berg, in arranging his musical score, paid particular attention to themes and motifs for each of the principal characters.

Kalem Studio Nears Completion

According to the latest reports from Lower California, Kalem's new enclosed studio at Glendale is practically completed. It is 100x150 feet. The present outdoor stages have been rebuilt so as to conform to convenient working with the new indoor studio.

Besides these important structures many minor stages have been built on different parts of the grounds. Landscape artists will be employed for the beautification of the grounds.

Lois Weber, Universal City director and actress, is a stickler for correct atmosphere in all of her productions.

NEW PRODUCERS

Ince Productions headed by Ralph and John Enter Independent Field—Noted Directors to Produce Twelve a Year

Ince Productions, Inc., with Ralph and John Ince as equal owners and active heads, is the latest important addition to the producing firms of the motion picture industry.

The plans of the organization, a closed corporation in which no stock will be sold and no financiers interested, were announced this week by Ralph Ince for the first time.

Ralph Ince, who now heads his own producing company.

Twelve important productions a year of approximately six and seven reels in length will be the producing schedule, with the first release to make its appearance on or about June 15. The first production will, in all likelihood, be the filmization of a novel, now immensely popular, and the rights for which a noted author has refused twenty thousand dollars. The Ince Productions, Inc., was capitalized under the laws of New York for ten thousand dollars.

Ralph Ince has contracted with Harry Rapp forces to produce "To-Day" for them, which will be exploited as an Ince production, after which he will devote his entire time to the Ince concern's efforts. He will begin actual work on Ince features May 1st.

The idea of release and distribution to be followed by the Ince concern will be of the franchise nature, the distributing exchanges receiving the entire twelve pictures, with the usual financial obligations imposed upon the exchanges. The fact that five territories were closed for the entire output, without any intimation being given of their intentions, conclusively demonstrates the equitability of the Ince project.

Even balanced casts of well known motion picture personalities will characterize the pictures. Studio arrangements are going forward rapidly. Whether a plant of sufficient dimensions to accommodate two companies will be built, or the present plan of leasing a studio, now under advisement, will be adhered to, Mr. Ince was not ready to divulge, and stated that this matter was one of future development.

John Ince, who will share activities with Ralph Ince in all productional matters, most recently created "Sealed Lips" and "The Struggle" for the World Corporation. Each of these pictures were referred to by the trade reviewers as 100 per cent productions.

Harry Reichenbach, noted principally for his remarkable exploitation of the Lasky, Metro, Bosworth and World products and unquestionably as accomplished an advertising and publicity man as exists in the amusement field, is to take charge of the exploitation departments of the new concern.

The Ince Productions' offices will be temporarily located at 1600 Broadway until offices now being equipped are ready for occupancy.

Scenario, technical, productional and distributional departments will be under the direction of known experts with the executive departments under prominent business men, acquainted with the intricacies of the film trade.

The modesty of Messrs. Ince in their capitalization, their quiet, unvarnished statements, their stated policy of dignified aiding and abetting of their branches and their statement of policy, bears fruitful promise of big things to come within the next year.

Exhibitor-Producer Talks

Herman Fichtenberg, the chairman of the board of directors of the new Paralta Plays corporation, who has taken up his residence in New York, says in reference to the new venture on which he has entered:

Let there be no false impression of my motive in entering the film producing and distributing business at this time. While I am approaching this proposition primarily from the standpoint of desiring to be of benefit to my fellow exhibitors, whose difficulties I well know, for I have been through them all, there is no philanthropy in it. I do not intend to stand in any aspect of offering something for nothing, for something for nothing always means nothing for something. I expect to give generous value for what I receive and I expect to receive full value for what I give. I mean that the word "Paralta" shall stand for full and broad equity in this industry.

The Paralta plan of production will mean good plays as well presented as talent and generous outlay will permit. Our plays will not be photographs of a star, five or six thousand feet long. The star will have a conspicuous place in each story, of course, but we propose to make productions that will give opportunity for other talent to be seen. We do not propose to kill our stars in public interest by over-running them in our screen stories. Valuable players may be completely effaced in this way.

As to the Paralta plan of distribution, that is the outcome of my years of experience as an exhibitor. It has been formulated and taken shape during the past two years. It represents my idea of what is right and it is submitted by the Paralta corporation for what it is worth.

I have thought sufficiently well of it to merge my chain of theaters in the south and leave my business there to give my whole time to Paralta interests. I desire it plainly understood from the start that Paralta plays and plans are launched strictly from a business standpoint to be conducted on strict business principles, as well as on the theory of John Wanamaker, "The customer is always right."

We intend to satisfy every customer—every business connection—and give all the service within our power. We intend to show the exhibitor how he can make his own energy and his own enterprise work directly for his own pocket and exclude all possibility of waste. This is an important part of the Paralta plan, which I shall work just as hard to make a success as I have worked during the past twelve years to make a success of my theaters in the south.

The publication of our plans and details of Paralta plays will be begun in extensive trade paper advertising in editions dated April 28, which will be issued April 10.

First Master Drama Production

The entry of the Master Drama Features, Inc., into the manufacture of motion picture will be marked by the production of "Who's Your Neighbor?" a screen version of an original drama by Willard Mack. The company was formed by Edward Small, for years one of the prominent figures in the vaudeville branch of the amusement business, and Herman Becker, treasurer of the Robert Warwick Film Company.

For their initial production the Master Drama company has secured the services of S. Rankin Drew, director of "The Girl Phillipa," the recent Vitagraph success, and many other notable feature film productions for Vitagraph and Metro. Mr. Drew is responsible for the scenario and also the direction of the feature.

An especially strong cast composed of well known persons of both the legitimate and screen worlds has been engaged.

When completed this feature will be exploited on the state-right basis of distribution after a premier showing at a Broadway playhouse. Extensive advertising plans are being planned, and no effort will be spared to make the initial presentation of this new corporation worthy of note in its field.

BLACKTON LOOKED AHEAD

Film Producer Who Crystallized America's Patriotic Need in Dramatic Spectacle Tells of His Own Preparedness.

On the occasion of the New York premier of "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," the producer, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton of Greater Vitagraph, revealed for the first time how intensive had been his own preparation for this dramatic spectacle of American military preparedness. Over a year ago he had planned this production, and upon the great national problems involved in staging such a vital object lesson had consulted with such authorities as Col. Theodore Roosevelt and Gen. Leonard Wood.

"I talked it over with them," says Commodore Blackton, "and those sterling patriots helped me inestimably. For two and one-half years our president did everything to keep us out of war, and finally at the point when, in spite of his restraint, we find ourselves forced into a real defensive crisis, we also find ourselves inadequately prepared. If this picture, 'Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation,' will present the gravity of our obligations and stir us into zeal to meet the issue with all our latent strength and enthusiasm, it will be exactly what I ventured to hope it would do.

"I was impressed not long ago when, in speaking with Stephen Lausanne, the brilliant visitor to this country, he said that every Frenchman is fighting for the honor and liberty of France. It struck me that when France does that she does it as well to protect the honor and liberty of America, and it behooves this country at least to match the spirit of France. And I firmly believe that the unquenchable spirit of France and of the Allies is going to be the spirit of America.

"If we play the 'Star Spangled Banner' we have got to play it on the bugle, not on a cash register. So we are going to revive the spirit of Bunker Hill and stand up again under the unselfish patriotism of the past, in spite of the few to whom no part of Bunker Hill means anything save the 'Bunk.'"

Fox Forces to Aid Nation

Congress' declaration that a state of war exists between the United States and the Imperial German Government finds William Fox and his huge film corporation ready to do their bit for Uncle Sam. Mr. Fox employs in his various departments several thousand men. His studios and offices throughout the country are now seething with martial activities.

William Fox, now at his Los Angeles studios, is major of the four home guard companies formed there. He has telegraphed to the adjutant general of the California militia for authority to enroll the platoon.

John Glavey, formerly of the Pennsylvania National Guard, and who holds a first lieutenant's commission in the infantry, has been appointed captain of this force, which was organized under the supervision of Maurice Cytron, head property man. One hundred and seventeen men enlisted the first day.

Mr. Fox will supply the complete equipment for his men and has already placed an order for two machine guns. Three squads will be excused from work each day for rifle practice at the Eagle Rock range near Los Angeles. The entire force will drill one hour nightly. A transportation corps has already been formed.

In the east the same enthusiasm prevails. An infantry company has been organized at the Fort Lee studios by Director William Nigh. Drilling will be under the supervision of Director J. Gordon Edwards, who spent several years in the Canadian Mounted Police.

On Paramount Program

Paramount's program for the week of April 23 is the most spectacular and interesting this organization has issued for many weeks. Marguerite Clark will next be seen in the Famous Players production of "The Valentine Girl," to be released this week. In this picture Miss Clark will take the role of a very young girl, the type of character she has been portraying with such unprecedented success and infinite delight.

The other five-reel feature for this week will be the first production in which Jack Pickford appears since his transfer from the Famous Players studio in New York to the Lasky studio in Hollywood, entitled "The Girl at Home," in which he will co-star with Vivian Martin. This production also marks Miss Martin's first appearance under the Lasky management.

The first of the Paramount Arbuckle comedies, featuring Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle in two reelers, will be released this week, and will be shown simultaneously in over four hundred and fifty (450) theaters the first week of its existence. The first release is entitled "The Butcher Boy."

The motion picture rights to M. E. M. Davis' "The Little Chevalier," a stirring tale of Louisiana, laid in the days when that territory was a French colony, have been secured by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., for picturization for the Conquest Pictures program. Plans have been made to give this superb story an exceptionally fine production and Shirley Mason, a star who is ideally fitted to the part, will play the title role.

Bessie Barriscale Play

Bessie Barriscale soon will be seen again under the Triangle-Kay Bee banner, when she is presented by Thomas H. Ince in "The Snarl." She will be seen in a dual role—for the first time in her screen career—and will, it is predicted, earn ardent praise by her work.

"The Snarl" is a dramatic story of the strange happenings which destiny held in store for twin sisters—two girls blessed with beauty, but in beauty alone alike. It tells of the experiences, in the city, of Helen and Marion Bean, the former earnest and self-sacrificing, the latter selfish, vain and egotistical. How they both play parts in the affairs of a young millionaire, with love and loyalty finally triumphing over mockery and stealth forms the basis of the absorbing plot. Supporting Miss Barriscale in the principal male role is Charles Gunn, the popular Ince leading man, while the "heavy" is handled by Howard Hickman.

Farnum Drama on April 30

On April 30 William Fox will release the third William Farnum special production of the year. It will be called "American Methods," and is an adaptation of the theme in George Ohnet's widely read novel, "The Ironmaster."

Frank Lloyd, who scored such distinctive successes with his productions of "The Price of Silence," and, more lately, "A Tale of Two Cities," for the Fox program, was again in charge of Mr. Farnum's newest pictureplay. Jewel Carmen will be seen in the role opposite the distinguished Fox star.

The supporting cast has such notable names as Bertram Grassby, Willard Louis, Alan Forrest, Josef Swickard, Lillian West, Genevieve Blinn, Florence Vidor and Marc Robbins.

Warner Oland, who played the role of Baron Huroki in the International serial "Patria," has been engaged by Astra and is now at work in a new Pathe serial which is being directed by George B. Seitz. Pearl White is the featured player in this production and her leading man is Earle Fox. Ruby Hoffman is another member of the cast.

Remarkable Letter From Exhibitor

William A. Brady, director general of World-Pictures Brady-Made, has received a remarkable letter regarding decent motion pictures from Charles S. Smoot, an exhibitor operating the Camden Theater in Parkersburg, West Virginia. This communication, which is notable for the vigor of its terms and the earnestness of the convictions it reflects, is believed by its recipient to be of such general interest to exhibitors and manufacturers that Mr. Brady supplies a full copy of its contents for publication, as follows:

As owner of the Camden Theater, Parkersburg, I want to compliment you upon "The Web of Desire" with Miss Ethel Clayton. This is by far one of the most artistic productions that has ever distinguished the program of the Camden Theater. If all pictures on every program were up to the standard of Miss Clayton's production, there would have been no need of the fight we have just gone through in West Virginia to kill a proposed West Virginia State Censorship Bill.

As a newspaper man and theater owner, I was delegated to kill or modify this bill at the last meeting of the West Virginia legislature in February. I spent considerable time and money and asked for considerable of the time of my political and newspaper friends, to defeat this bill. Through strategy we gained our point and killed the proposition in the committee room.

Immediately following the death of this bill, there came through West Virginia several alleged picture masterpieces, which could have been appropriately associated with Laura Jean Libby, The Fireside Companion and The Police Gazette, notwithstanding the fact that they were the presentations of two of the leading picture producers.

In order to make our theater absolutely fool proof against indecent and sensuous pictures, we now do our own censoring, and when I find a picture that isn't fit for my own family, I conclude of course that everybody's family should be so considered and the picture cut out entirely. On two or three occasions we have lost the day's program. This, however, is much more preferable than insulting the intelligence of our thoroughly respectable clientele.

I mention these facts in order to emphasize the necessity of clean, wholesome moral pictures. If some of the big producers do not get on to themselves and respect a little more the intelligence and decency of the average audience, there will soon occur the death of the goose that laid the golden egg.

Brady-Made Pictures in Parkersburg and all through West Virginia, recommend themselves in advance to the respectable people. I have never seen a Brady picture that did not carry all the way through, a good clean, wholesome entertaining subject. I can see the strength of your policy reflected in the expression of many patrons throughout West Virginia.

I am interested in the production of moving pictures, as a newspaper man and exhibitor, and have written to the heads of the different picture corporations along these same lines, in order, first, that the successful conduct of the business may be continued, and second, that we will not be compelled to incur the unnecessary cost of a State Censorship Board.

Human nature doesn't vary much; Parkersburg people and West Virginia people, in their moral standards, are no different from those in any other part of the world. There would be just as much unfavorable criticism of a sensuous picture from an audience of two thousand people in New York, as there would be from an audience of two thousand people in Parkersburg. The great majority of the people are decent.

I know you to be a big influence among the other producers, and I know your good influence will be exercised in doing what is absolutely essential to perpetuate the success of the moving picture industry. The people of the world are entitled to the benefit and enjoyment to be derived from high standard pictures. If certain picture producers do not exercise the proper judgment, it is very likely that they will be determined in the same manner as will be the man engaged in the liquor traffic.

I am advocating a movement among all theaters in West Virginia, to conduct their own censorships. This seems to be the only "fool proof policy." This has no reference at all to Brady-Made pictures, and I want to take this occasion again to compliment and congratulate you upon your perfectly splendid policy.

If the publication of this letter will serve our good purpose, you are at liberty to use.—(Signed) Charles S. Smoot.

Lesser Buys Big Features

During his recent trip to New York, Sol L. Lesser of the All Star Features Distributors, San Francisco, acquired the rights to so many features, that upon his arrival in San Francisco, he was forced to the realization that it would be impossible to handle all of these productions in his old quarters at 234 Eddy Street, although Mr. Lesser occupies one of the largest exchanges in San Francisco.

While in New York, Mr. Lesser purchased the California, Arizona and Nevada rights to D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance," Norma Talmadge in "Panthea," Robert Warwick in "The Argyle Case" and the Art Drama program. He is already exploiting in this territory such big productions as Jules Verne's under-water spectacle "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under The Sea," Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization," Col. William N. Selig's gorgeous production, "The Garden of Allah," "War Brides," with Mme. Nazimova, Lois Weber's "The People vs. John Doe," Julius Steger's "The Libertine" and the Louis J. Selznick releases including the Clara Kimball Young super-productions.

Mr. Lesser said:

I have just signed a long lease for the new three-story building located at Golden Gate Avenue and Leavenworth Street, in the heart of film row, and it is my intention to make it the most thoroughly equipped and up-to-date film exchange in San Francisco. It is my intention to set off part of my building exclusively for the use of out-of-town exhibitors, having for their comfort a lounging room, private telephone booths, writing desks and a stenographer. It is also my opinion that the projection rooms of our western exchanges have been neglected, and have come to be considered necessary evils. I am going to pattern mine as much as possible like those of some of the New York distributors, where I have found furnishings and equipment that would rival a drawing room.

Donald Galleher Joins Goldwyn

Donald Galleher, one of the best known juveniles on the American stage, has been engaged to play in Goldwyn's second Maxine Elliott picture. He is known to theater-goers principally through his work, over a period of years, in "The Silent Witness," "The Battle Cry," "Judith Zaraine" and "Our Mrs. McChesney," the latter play being Ethel Barrymore's starring vehicle.

Galleher has just completed an engagement in "Magic." This is not his first appearance in motion pictures.

Mabel Taliaferro on Stage

After having worked two years exclusively as a motion picture star, Mabel Taliaferro has been loaned by the Metro Pictures Corporation to the Shubert Theatrical Enterprises, and she soon will be seen on Broadway as the star in a big speaking production.

Her new vehicle will be Hall Caine's "The Woman Thou Gavest Me." Miss Taliaferro, who is now busy rehearsing, expects to open in Boston on April 9. Announcement of this interesting theatrical deal was made by Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Metro-Rolfe and Metro-Columbia studios.

Elaine Hammerstein, who made a distinct success in her first screen appearance, in "The Argyle Case" with Robert Warwick, has been engaged as leading woman for the same star in his third Selznick-Picture, "The Modern Othello."

Mills on O. Henry Stories

Thomas R. Mills was born in Headcorn Kent, England. After leaving college he entered law, but the lure of the stage was so strong that after serving two years he broke his articles and joined a traveling "Fit Up" company.

Thomas R. Mills, actor of long experience, appearing in General's O. Henry stories.

After many strange and valuable experiences gained with this repertoire company, he joined the Compton Comedy Company, playing in Old English Comedies in the larger cities.

Mr. Mills' first appearance in New York was with Louis Mann, with whom he remained three seasons, creating the important parts in "All on Account of Eliza," "Hoch, the Consul," and "The Red Kloof."

Then followed a season with Henry Miller in an English comedy entitled "Man Proposes," after which Mr. Mills was specially engaged to support the late Madame Modjeska in her repertory, playing such parts as "Mortimer" in Schiller's "Mary Stuart." Then followed an engagement with the late Richard Mansfield, with whom he remained four seasons. Harrison Grey Fiske then engaged him to support Madame Kalish in Fred De Gressae's play, "Cora."

Following this engagement the late Charles Frohman selected Mr. Mills to create "Lieutenant Jackson" in "The Englishman's Home." He also appeared under the Frohman management in several successes.

A successful season in vaudeville was then spent, playing Arnold Daly's parts in "After the Opera" and "The Shirkers." He spent the summers with the famous Hunter Bradford Players in stock at Hartford, Connecticut. After a stock engagement as director at the Harlem Opera House, New York, Mr. Mills entered the "movies," and for the past three years he has been associated with the Vitagraph Company, playing heavy leads in a great many feature productions.

For the past six months Mr. Mills has been engaged in producing special feature pictures for the Broadway Star Feature Co., which will be released on the General Film Program. Notable among same are the famous O. Henry stories. The following have been completed for release: "The Third Ingredient," "Friends in San Rosario," "The Gift of Magi," "Past One at Rooney's," "The Marionettes" and "The Green Door."

Ethel Clayton is the star and Montagu Love the featured actor of "Pretty Polly Pollard," an approaching Word-Picture Brady-Made. A part of the story is placed in Washington. One of the scenes was photographed in the office of a famous United States senator, and others in the Japanese Embassy, the staff of which were greatly surprised to see a man of Mr. Love's commanding presence impersonating the ambassador of Japan.

Century Girl with Fairbanks

For "A Regular Guy" his next production to be released by Artcraft following "In Again—Out Again," Douglas Fairbanks has engaged Eileen Percy, who for the past year has attracted particular attention on New York's rialto in the Orange Grove and at present in "The Century Girl" show.

Eileen Percy, who is to appear in Douglas Fairbanks' next play, "A Regular Guy."

Miss Percy recently passed her seventeenth birthday and is an unusually attractive little girl of Irish birth, although she has spent the greater part of her life in this country. In "The Bluebird" about nine years ago, she made her theatrical debut which was followed by many other successful engagements including those with "The Pied Piper of Hamlin," "Pickwick Papers," "The Arab," "The Lady of the Slipper," "Stop, Look and Listen" and "The Man Who Came Back."

Elsie Janis, now appearing in "The Century Girl," recommended Miss Percy to Mr. Fairbanks, who after an interview and photographic test immediately engaged her to appear opposite him in his second picture for Artcraft. Miss Percy will leave with the Fairbanks organization for California in the near future.

"Bob" Burns in "Pokes and Jabs"

Robert P. Burns and Walter H. Stull, his partner, are the leading players in the "Pokes and Jabs" series, and direct the pictures as well. They have produced and acted in over sixty single-reel comedies which have been released under the Vim brand on the General Film Company program. Before their screen debut, both comedians had appeared separately and together for a number of years in comedy plays on the legitimate stage and in vaudeville. They had already a wide following from their tours about the country with legitimate attractions, before their first picture appearance, and their work in the films has increased it immeasurably, as is invariably the case.

Walter Stull, who shares the honors with Burns in the "Pokes and Jabs" comedies, was also born in Philadelphia. His early professional training was obtained in stock, and in playing leading parts with a touring repertory company that specialized in melodrama. He has also appeared in numerous legitimate attractions on Broadway as well as on the road. His screen career embraces engagements with Lubin, Reliance, Mutual, and Wizard as well as his present engagement as "Jabs" in "Pokes and Jabs." Mr. Stull has appeared in a number of legitimate pieces with Mr. Burns, the most prominent of which is "The Wizard of Oz."

"The Crandall Kin," by Willard Mack, is under production at Universal City by Allen J. Holubar.

Here is Mister Ben Turpin in his latest concoction from the Vogue laugh kitchen. "Masked Mirth" is its name and we agree that if we had to run along a two-inch ledge the mirth would be very much masked.

V. L. S. E. Will Not Merge

Walter W. Irwin today denied, without reservation, the statement that V. L. S. E., the distributing organization for Greater Vitagraph's features, would merge with the General Film and K. E. S. E. Mr. Irwin made the denial in his official capacity as general manager, treasurer, secretary and a director of V. L. S. E., and a director of the Vitagraph company. He said:

The rumor that the V. L. S. E. is to merge with the General Film Company and the K. E. S. E., or with any other distributing organization, is absolutely without foundation. Of all the rumors that daily spread through the motion picture industry, none has been brought to my attention so completely devoid of substance as this one.

I have read the article published this morning and am totally at a loss to understand how any official connected with either of the three companies could say that such a combination was even contemplated.

The V. L. S. E. has been importuned in the past to join its sales organization with the sales force of one or more other companies, but has never considered such a proposition, for the reason that the V. L. S. E. is far too successful by itself in furthering and promoting the good will of Vitagraph and of its trade-mark.

Moreover, the V. L. S. E. has entered into many contracts with exhibitors under which they are extensively advertising Vitagraph product, and thus enhancing the prestige and good will of their theaters, and Vitagraph and the V. L. S. E. purpose to see that nothing shall interfere with the proper execution of those contracts.

You, therefore, are at liberty to say, in fact, it is requested that you do say, that the V. L. S. E. has not contemplated, does not contemplate, nor does not intend to contemplate any merger with any other distributing company.

Reel Fellows Organize Band

Before many long days there will be sweet strains of music floating out on the classic atmosphere of Wabash avenue from the headquarters of the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago. Passersby will linger to listen to the entrancing strains of "brass," "wood wind," and bass drum.

In other words, the Reel Fellows, already so proficient in the art of taking and making and selling and showing pictures, are to take up another art, in the organization of a brass band. The following members of the club have already volunteered their services. Most of them are old-time musicians, commonly known as "wind jammers."

Richard Travers, cornet; F. W. Hartman, cornet; J. W. Brickhouse, trombone; Harry C. Miller, trombone; L. T. Mordeau, saxophone; Jack Haag, clarinet; W. C. Cook, snare drums; M. G. Watkins, piccolo; Dave Russakov, bass drum; C. W. Jones, alto; J. S. McHenry, tenor; Billy Hamburg, clarinet; Cresson Smith, bass; Ralph Proctor, drum major; William Heaney, contra bass; A. E. Curtis, alto. K. M. Scoville and Harry E. Rice, Jr., are utility men who will play the instruments which can be handled by no one else in the club.

Arrangements have already been made to secure the services of one of the foremost band masters in Chicago as instructor, and rehearsals will begin soon. It is probable that the first public appearance of the band will be at the national convention in July.

H. B. Warner with Selig

H. B. Warner has joined the Selig galaxy of stars and is completing his first picture at the Selig studios. William N. Selig also announces that Violet Heming and W. Lawson Butt have become members of the Selig Stock Company.

The first picture in which Mr. Warner will star, supported by Miss Heming and Mr. Butt, will be "The Danger Trail," James Oliver Curwood's exciting story of the Northland. "The Danger Trail" will also be our next release in the K. E. S. E.

Thus it will be seen that the latest of Selig feature dramas carrying three of the best known stars in the business will not be sold on a territorial rights basis but will be released in K. E. S. E.

Warner and his company have been at work in northern New York for several weeks filming snow exteriors for the drama, coming to Chicago for the interiors.

There is no more popular star than H. B. Warner and his joining the Selig forces is a distinct asset to that company.

Miss Violet Heming, the leading lady for Mr. Warner, is a widely known star of the spoken drama. She created the role of Rebecca in "Rebecca at Sunnybrook Farm." She has been a leading lady since she was sixteen years of age. She played for two years with George Arliss, was a prominent member of the New York production of "The Lie," appeared in "Under Cover," and supported William Courtney in "Under Fire."

Director William Worthington practically has completed at Universal City a five-act comedy drama, "The Car of Chance."

"Mrs. Balfame"

Nance O'Neil in Powell-Mutual Feature Released April 9. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

GERTRUDE ATHERTON'S novel by this title has been picturized by Frank Powell, with Nance O'Neil in the name role. Pictures based upon books have ranked among the best and among the poorest of screen offerings. This unfortunately falls into the latter classification. It exhibits a defect common to screen versions of books in that one feels that some explanations are lacking, that some characters are introduced merely because they were in the book, and their relation to the story is left vague.

As entertainment, the chief defect in the play is its lack of heart interest. The characters do not arouse sympathy. The mystery element is the best feature in the story and the exhibitor who advertises it as a murder-mystery story will prepare his patrons to see it in the right way. The complications are cleverly set forth and the outcome is a surprise.

The acting of the cast is very good, most of the players in unsympathetic roles, however. Frank Belcher, who played the role of "Freneau's partner" in "Gloria's Romance" with Billie Burke, appears as David Balfame. His acting is excellent but the scenes which he is called upon to enact vary between the repulsive and the ludicrous. Two interesting character parts are contributed by Anna Raines as Dr. Anna Steuer and Elsie Earle as the maid, Frieda. Others in support of Miss O'Neil are Robert Elliott, Agnes Eyre, Alfred Hickman, Grace Gordon and Aubrey Beattie.

The photography and settings vary from good to indifferent.

The Story: Mrs. Balfame, a woman of culture and refinement, lives in constant fear of her husband, David Balfame, who usually returns home in a drunken rage. Dwight Rush, a young attorney, loves Mrs. Balfame and urges her to divorce her husband. She refuses to do this.

One day after her husband had threatened to kill her, Mrs. Balfame learns through her fried, Dr. Anna Steuer, of a poison which may be given in secret and cannot be detected. She yields to the temptation to steal the poison from the doctor's cabinet and goes so far as to prepare the poisoned drink for her husband. While waiting for his return, she is alarmed at the sight of a stranger in the shrubbery and, taking a revolver, she goes out of the house. Shortly after, David Balfame, returning home, is shot and killed in his own dooryard. Mrs. Balfame is charged with the murder.

The rest of the story deals with the trial and the efforts of the various detectives to solve the mystery. First one and then the other of the characters appears to be the criminal. At last Dr. Steuer, Mrs. Balfame's friend, who is fatally ill, confesses that she killed Balfame to save his wife. Mrs. Balfame is freed. The young attorney who had defended her and whom she had promised to marry, however, had fallen in love with a younger woman, and Mrs. Balfame gives him up.

"Paddy O'Hara"

Five-Reel Triangle-Ince-Kay-Bee Featuring William Desmond. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz

AS Paddy O'Hara, William Desmond is here seen as a daring war correspondent, representing a large London newspaper, who secures his news by his Irish wit. This lively comedy-drama contains many humorous situations. In most all of the titles can be found a laugh. The scenes are laid in London and in two fictional principalities. Parts of the picture are somewhat complicated, and it is with difficulty that one gets the trend of the story.

William Desmond is well cast for the role of Paddy O'Hara, as it is his audacity, life and pep that makes the picture good. In the supporting cast is Mary McIvor as Lady Maryska of Darbaya, whose work is fine. Robert McKim, playing the part of Count Carlos, and J. J. Dowling as Count Ivan of Darbaya, are exceptionally good. Walt Whitman makes a good monk. The story is by J. G. Hawks. It was directed by Walter Edwards and supervised by Thomas H. Ince.

Upon the outbreak of affairs between Ideria and Darbaya, Paddy O'Hara is sent to the front to get the news for his paper. Arriving at the seaport town of Ideria, he makes the acquaintance of Raoul, who is charged with an important message to Darbaya. Count Carlos, a spy in the employ of Darbaya, forces Raoul into a duel. Raoul is seriously wounded, but manages to give the documents to Paddy. Disguised as an Iderian soldier, Paddy passes the guards and delivers his message.

Spies are hot on his trail, but Paddy rides fast, and reaches a castle high on the cliffs of Darbaya. The place is deserted except for the presence of Lady Maryska, who has been left to flash the signal to the men fighting in the valley. Col. Ivan retreats and arrives at the castle. His one thought being to get his niece away from the danger zone, he places the girl in the hands of Paddy, who alters his passport to read Patrick O'Hara and wife. Circumstances make it necessary for Paddy to go through the marriage ceremony with the reluctant Maryska. She consents on condition that she is to be freed when they reach safety.

"The Hidden Children"

Five-Reel Metro Release with Harold Lockwood and May Allison. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz

"THE Hidden Children," produced by the Yorke Film Corporation, is an exemplification of the old Indian custom of giving children to foster-parents until maturity. A boy and a girl thus "hidden," as it was termed, upon learning the truth were expected to marry. This marriage was supposed to bring fresh spirit into the tribe. Much of the story is centered around the welfare of two white children, who were made "hidden children" when mere babies, so that they would not be sacrificed by the Indians.

The plot is a very good one and is carried out in such a manner as to make it a likeable picture. The scenes are laid in the vicinity of Lake George. Picturesque views of the Colonial life at the Fort are shown, as well as many pleasing ones of the life of the Indians. The play is taken from Robert W. Chambers' novel of the same name.

Harold Lockwood and May Allison in the leading roles do fairly good work. In the supporting cast are: Lillian West, Henry Herbert, George MacDaniel, Lester Cuneo and Charles Cummings. It was directed and adapted for the screen by Oscar Apfel, and was photographed by Antonio Gaudio.

In an encounter with the Indians, Capt. de Contrecoeur is killed. His wife, Jeanne, is captured by the Indians and taken to their camp at Catherines-town. Fearing that Amochol, the sorcerer, will sacrifice her new-born daughter, she makes of Lois a "hidden child." Jeanne interprets a dream for Amochol, and she becomes the White Sorceress of the Iroquois.

Years pass. Euan Loskiel, grown to manhood, is given a commission in Morgan's Rifles as Lieutenant and Chief of Indian Scouts. Euan learns that he is a hidden child. With Mayaro the Sagamore, Euan is sent on a mission to Catherines-town. Lois disguises herself as a camp-follower so as to follow Euan and Mayaro. She knows that her mother is a captive there, and intends to find her.

The Sagamore, knowing that she is a hidden child, protects her from all the mischances of the journey. Euan falls in love with Lois, but she will not permit his caresses until she has found her mother. The Indians in the party insist that the ceremony of the White Bridal be performed over these two sacred "hidden children."

They reach Catherines-town in time to witness the Feast of the Dreams. The White Sorceress is about to be put to death for interpreting ill fortune.

Euan and his men attack the Iroquois and in the encounter that follows, Amochol is killed. Lois is at last folded in the arms of the mother who has watched and waited all these years. Then Jeanne, having been reunited with her "hidden child," puts her hand in that of the brave scout, Euan Loskiel, and their White Bridal is completed.

"Environment"

Mary Miles Minter-American Play Released Through Mutual April 16. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THERE are few pictures offered which are so consistently good as this one. That there were good points in each of the preceding Mary Miles Minter-American pictures, the many admirers of the youthful star attest, but there were jarring elements in each play. In this picture, on the contrary, star, role, directing and story blend into a harmonious whole. As an artistic feature, "Environment" (but what a wretched title!) ranks high. A role has been provided for Miss Minter in which she is given a chance to act, not merely to pose, and the skill and intelligence with which she plays will surprise even her admirers.

While Miss Minter's playing of Elizabeth is delightful in its expressiveness and restraint, the work of James Kirkwood as director and author is no less artistic. The atmosphere of the small town makes itself felt, both in the well chosen settings and in the characters depicted. They are both typical and individual, and the supporting cast of players deserves praise. Among these are Harvey Clarke, who as Elizabeth's father, a lazy ne'er-do-well, draws a vivid, convincing character, Margaret Shelby (Mary's sister), a clever actress who, as the village belle is an interesting foil for neglected Elizabeth, and George Fisher as the young minister who is the hero. Other prominent players in the cast are George Periolat, Arthur Howard, Al Vosburgh, Emma Klug, Lucille Ward and Jack Vosburgh. The photography is up to the high American standard. The only important point of adverse criticism against the play concerns the title. Why didn't someone have a happy inspiration and invent a title which would be typical of the play and a box-office aid instead of tagging this appealing human-interest story with a problem play label?

From a box-office standpoint, the name of the star will doubtless counteract the unpromising title. As an offering for the better class neighborhood house, the play is entirely satisfactory, while it will please the majority of patrons in any theater. The note of pathos which characterizes the play is not depressing and is enlivened by humor and realism.

The Story: Elizabeth Simpkins is the motherless daughter of John Simpkins, the village drunkard. Elizabeth, a high-spirited, sensitive girl, manages to graduate with honors from the local high school. After that, she helps support herself and her father by "taking in washing." The young minister of the village (George Fisher) is interested in the girl and she delights in mocking him and his sometimes too high-flown sermons. Secretly she loves him.

Elizabeth becomes a "washlady."

Mildred Holcomb (Margaret Shelby), daughter of a wealthy family, is infatuated with a young artist. Her brother, knowing the artist is unprincipled, forbids his sister's meeting him. Mildred disobeys. Elizabeth gets Mildred out of a perplexing situation but brings suspicion upon herself. Then her father dies suddenly, and the village authorities decide to send Elizabeth to a Home. However, the minister learns of the girl's sacrifice in time and instead of sending her away, marries her.

"God's Man" is an unusual theme with unusual treatment and is a magnificent screen interpretation.

sham structure of abnormal modern urban life. It shows how a man endeavoring to be strictly honest in his own strength is brought low as a result of his very desire to trust in mankind and help his brother.

The unnatural living of the poor in the vast wastes of the slums and the equally forced living of the "over-fed, under-bred" rich who indulge a moral madness which almost taxes them beyond endurance in the frenzied seeking of happiness where it is not to be found, are set forth in vivid portrayal.

New York is here pictured as the precise abode of the man with hoofs and a barbed tail, and it affords a picturesque and convincing background for his pernicious activities. It is logic to assume that where five million live there will be found in boldest relief the forces of both evil and good. A sub-title poem setting off the delirious, heathenish status of Gotham is a classic.

Any film story has to work hard to keep up interest for nine thousand feet, but this one does it very well purely on its merits as a story. A rather erratic philosophy is injected which provides both novelty and food for thought. There is much in the picture that will go over the heads of the devotees of surface action, those who think on more simple lines and care not for the psychological presentation of things, but then the picture has plenty of exciting situations and a goodly apportionment of well prepared comedy. The denouement is highly dramatic, giving a number of those in the cast excellent opportunities for emotional work.

George Irving's work in the capacity of director deserves a round of applause. The production is masterful. Anthony Kelly's well rewarded toil, too, in the assembling of the story's action and intent in its scenario form, is deserving of praise. H. B. Warner's impersonatiion of the leading role, Arnold L'Hommedieu, is cause for continuous admiration and satisfaction on the part of the audience. Mr. Warner is alive with the spirit of the part.

A cast of some thirty people, including a generous amount of individual talent, is in support of the star. Walter Hiers has the part of Hugo Waldemar, one of Arnold's chums, and Edward Earle has that of Archie Hartogensis, another friend. Both make their parts human, which is all that drama demands, the former providing the picture with some irresistible humor, the kind that he does'nt have to force. Mr. Earle shows us how a boy of the age of pipes and fraternities acts, and in a later scene provides us with a good depiction of the frenzied actions of an opium addict. These three, through their characters, carry the story. Jack Sherrill is good in the important but short part of "Bink." Others in the cast are: Barbara Castleton, Betty Bellairs, Kate Lester, Albert Tavernier, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Barbara Gilroy, Harry Eytinge, Marion Fouche, William Fredericks, Jack Sherrill and Dan Jarrett.

As a résumé, "God's Man" is a picture which will be appreciated by high-class audiences. Although some of its appeal is limited, the balance may be enjoyed even by children. It is a production which may be unhesitatingly called "big."

"The Pulse of Life"

Gypsy Harte in Five-Reel Bluebird Photoplay. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE appeal of this play is not to fastidious, high class audiences, but its wildness and its out of the ordinary settings and characters may be liked by patrons who crave excitement and sensation. Gypsy Harte as the Italian girl is interesting and appealing throughout the play and her work does much to counterbalance the unhappy story whose presentation, while vivid, is at times unpleasant and grucsome. The offering will keep the attention of an audience, but will not send them away in a comfortable frame of mind.

The exterior settings in the early part of the story representing the lonely Italian country in which Lizette lives are well chosen. Later scenes show underworld life in New York. The introduction of several dwarfs and cripples in a number of scenes is unpleasant and in poor taste.

The production was directed by Rex Ingram from a story by E. Magnus Ingleton. Players supporting Miss Harte are Dorothy Barrett, Molly Malone, Nicholas Duneaw, Wedgewood Novell, Millard K. Wilson, Albert McQuarrie, Edward Brown and Seymour Hastings.

The Story: Lizette, the daughter of an Italian fisherman, is discontented with her quiet life and runs away to America with Serrani, an Italian artist, who has returned to his native land for a visit. In New York, the girl meets with various adventures and at last becomes an entertainer in a cheap cafe. She also poses for an American artist who, in spite of his betrothal to another girl, falls in love with her. Later Lizette's brother follows her from Italy and, learning of her betrayal, seeks and kills Serrani. Circumstances point to the American artist as the murderer and he is convicted of the crime. Just before his execution, the brother confesses his guilt. The artist is freed. Then Lizette returns to her own country, having had too much of adventure.

"A School for Husbands"

Lasky-Paramount Picture Featuring Fannie Ward. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz

THIS Fannie Ward comedy shows in a very realistic way how a husband can be managed and taught "home ethics." From the plain economical wife to the gay and frivolous, Fannie Ward, as Betty Manners, trains her husband to look toward his own fireside. The picture affords the charming and popular Lasky star the opportunity of wearing most gorgeous gowns. Her splendid acting, with its humorous side, will make a strong appeal to any audience.

The story is amusing and entertaining. Jack Dean plays in a capable way the part of John Manners, who is fond of betting. He spends much of his time and money at the race track while his wife is home trying to be economical. The work of the players is excellent and the production is exceptionally good. Others in the cast are Frank Elliott, Mabel Van Buren, Edythe Chapman, James Neill, Frank Borzage and Irene Aldwyn.

John Manners is ashamed of his plain wife. Not wishing to take her out in the unbecoming dresses she persists in wearing, he naturally pays much attention to the stylish Mrs. Airlie. Betty's jealousy is aroused and she decides to buy some pretty clothes. There is a slump in the stock market and John is ruined.

Sir Harry Lovell, an old friend of Betty's, arrives with the good news that she has been left a fortune and is now Lady Betty Manners. With the help of Sir Lovell, Betty keeps the matter a secret, and proceeds to spend money for gowns, hats and automobiles. John goes west to sell the large estate, the only thing left of his fortune. Business also takes Mrs. Airlie to California. When Betty hears of this she makes up a party and sets out for the same place.

Betty and her party arrive at the California home first. Manners and Mrs. Airlie come strolling through the grounds, where they are surprised by Betty and Sir Lovell. The estate is sold at auction and Sir Lovell buys it for Betty. As the two are much in each other's company, Manners becomes suspicious. Betty is light-hearted and gay, enjoying her husband's uneasiness.

Believing that his wife is going to elope with Sir Lovell, Manners calls upon him and in a struggle shoots him. Thinking he has killed the man he returns home. Betty hides him from the authorities. Sir Lovell, unharmed, enters and all is explained. Manners sees how foolish he has been and all is forgiven.

"The Power of Decision"

Five-Reel Metro Drama for Release April 9. Reviewed by George W. Graves

"THE POWER OF DECISION" is a story which holds interest consistently through its five reels, interpreted by a cast of general good merits headed by star of magnificent emotional power. The story provides her with a finely sympathetic role, that of a woman whose nobler instincts are used in manipulation against her happiness by a worthless individual in whom she places a child-like trust. The story differentiates between mesmeric love and true spiritual love, and shows once more in the eloquent language of the screen how deception is fatal to marriage felicity. Frances Nelson gives a sincere, feeling rendition of the part of Margot, the woman who exercises her power of decision, lending grace and reality to every scene.

The scenario writer and the director have combined their duties in a manner sufficiently able to give the story a clear, easily followed and well balanced screening. Both Richard Tucker and John Davidson are well cast and do pleasing work as the two men to whom the allotment of Margot's affections calls for a strict decision, and Sally Crute handles her business of being a disdainful, cold and calculating separated wife with realism. Others helping in the story's interpretation are Mary Asquith, Fuller Mellish and Hugh Jeffrey. The story was written by George W. Gunn and put into scenario form by June Mathis. John W. Noble's direction is adequate.

Margot's first love affair is broken up when she learns that her artist husband has a wife already living. Although she still loves the artist, Harding, she marries Bland, a novelist, who accepts her knowing she has no love to give him. Harding shows up again, unknown to Bland, and arranges to elope with the woman. The husband returns, but shoots the butler, a thief, instead of Harding. Margot then confides to her husband that she had chosen the right road on second thought, and that had he not returned she would still have remained faithful.

"The Cost of Hatred"

A Lasky-Paramount Drama Co-Starring Kathlyn Williams and Theo. Roberts. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz thought is to be revenged upon Amory, the man who stole his wife's affections. He accomplishes this, to a certain extent, in his cruel treatment of Ned, the man's son. In the end, as the cost of his hatred, he is deserted by his daughter, who elopes with the son.

Kathlyn Williams has two singular roles in this thrilling play; first she is seen as Elise Graves, the wife and mother, and later as the beautiful daughter Sarita. Under the direction of George Melford, many picturesque exterior scenes were taken in Mexico. Among the prominent names in the supporting cast are: Tom Forman, Jack W. Johnston, Charles Ogle, Horace B. Carpenter and Jack Holt.

Graves, a stern, cruel man, returns to his home to find his wife in the arms of Robert Amory, a widower living next door. He shoots Amory and is about to shoot his wife, when he hears his little daughter crying. With his child he flees to Mexico. When Amory recovers he marries Elise.

Years after, we see Sarita grown into a beautiful girl, the idol of her father's estate in Mexico. Ned, the only son of Amory, secures a diplomatic position in Mexico City. On the way to the place young Ned is left behind in a Mexican settlement. He is robbed and then thrown into jail. There Graves runs across him, and upon learning his identity induces the Mexican government to sell Ned's services to him for a year.

So great is his hatred that he intends to break the youth, body and soul, to avenge the sins of the father. Ned is beaten, whipped and put through many cruel tortures. Sarita's pity is aroused and she does all she can to help him. Finally her pity ripens into love.

Aided by her trusty servant, Sarita effects her lover's escape. She induces him to take her and the two flee to the United States. The father and his men follow, but the lovers reach the border in safety and are married by a justice of the peace. When Graves learns of the marriage he is furious and begs his daughter to return to him. She refuses. He is left to realize what his terrible hatred has cost him.

"The Railroad Raiders"

First Chapter of Helen Holmes-Signal Serial. Released Through Mutual. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE popularity of previous railroad serials which the Signal Company has produced would seem to prove that the subject is a favorite one with the public and that this latest offering will be as well liked. However, the public is fickle, as every exhibitor knows, and many exhibitors may fear that another serial story based on the same subject may prove tiresome.

Judging from the first chapter of "The Railroad Raiders," this is not likely to be the case. The public might grow weary of a series of spectacular stunts. It does not weary of real stories in which the atmosphere is so true to life that one forgets the scenes are acted for a picture. Director J. P. McGowan has succeeded unusually well in catching in this chapter the spirit of outdoor, active, adventurous life, and while there is no lack of spectacular incidents, it is in the vivid reality that the fascination of the photoplay lies. A public at all interested in railroad or adventure stories will respond without doubt to this serial.

The directing, the acting by the cast which appeared in the previous serials, the story and the photography, all may be justly rated excellent. "Circumstantial Evidence," the first chapter, gives the story a speedy start. Characters are well defined without being artificial or hackneyed types. The plot is well introduced without waste of time.

The Story: The general manager of the railroad receives complaints of the looting of freight cars on one division. He investigates the matter personally and finds Steve Arnold, a station agent, guilty. Arnold runs away before he can be arrested, falls in with a gang of tramps and becomes their leader. They plan a system of looting cars. When he learns that a large amount of money is to be sent to a certain station he manages to steal it, making the station agent the apparent thief. This station agent is David Holmes, Helen's father. The man is convicted on circumstantial evidence and sent to the penitentiary. The head of the road assures Holmes that he will look after Helen.

"The Manx-Man"

Ten-Reel Adaptation of Hall Caine's Novel Offered by Cosmofotofilm. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THE story, acting and production of this remarkable film combine in their excellence to give one as enjoyable a two hours' entertainment as he ever experienced in a photoplay theater. Right through its entire length the play is a succession of deeply emotional situations setting forth human character as it is seldom set forth on the screen. Love, sacrifice, temptation, ambition, friendship, all have their part in the story, which is one not of action only but of exquisite characterization. Such acting as that of Henry Ainley as "Philip," Fred Groves as "Pete," and Elisabeth Risdon as "Kate," makes an impression on a spectator which is not soon forgotten. These characterizations set a pace that it is no simple matter to equal. The stars had the advantage of a fine story and unexcelled direction to aid them in the expression of their talents. Henry Ainley, an actor of great note abroad and no little reputation in this country, plays the "heavy" in a way that should make "fans" insistent on seeing more of the polished actor. The role of "Pete" is rivaled in sympathetic power only by that of "Kate." The former holds our sympathies to the last, for he sacrifices love for friendship and justice in the closing scenes and is left in solitary grief at the end.

The masterful way that George Loane Tucker handled the production of this picture stamps him as one of our greatest producers. With the beautiful Isle of Man as a background he has brought the story to palpitating, colorful life on the screen, causing every subtle emotional feeling of the book to register with force. A gigantic mob scene of the trial on Tynwald Hill is both spectacular and impressive. The picture, however, tells its story without any undue recourse to the spectacular—a thing decidedly remarkable when the spectator's eyes are riveted in fascination to the screen for the length of ten reels. The locations chosen for an abundance of out-door scenes are picturesque and impressive. Many of them absolutely beggar description. Even in this day when all the producers are paying marked attention to the artistic side of their pictures, the photography and "shots" taken in this force one to marvel at the possibilities of the screen for bringing nature before our vision.

Those who see "The Manx-Man" will feel that they have enjoyed an entertainment which is every bit worthy of the name drama. They will not question the fact that they have been deeply moved by its pathos, that they have felt the touch of romance and been a victim of all the other entertaining graces of a heart-interest story. The picture is good enough to see twice, and there are but a few offerings that inspire a person with this desire. It is worthy of big advertising, the name of the author, Hall Caine, deserving prominent place.

Kate, the girl, loves Pete, whose misfortune it is to have been born illegitimately. Pete has been scorned by Kate's father, but before his leaving for the mines in Cape Colony, his bosom friend, Philip, also in love with the girl, influences the father to allow the two lovers to become engaged. As time passes Kate, the woman, realizes that she loves Philip. Word is received from the diamond mines that Pete has been killed. Philip, being of high birth, and having lofty ambitions, does not marry Kate, although the inevitable has happened. Pete suddenly returns; Kate becomes the hypocrite and marries him, living a miserable life. The joyous, light-hearted Pete, however, never discerns that her love is forced and much less that the baby who comes to them is really not his. Finally, unable to endure the sham life, the girl attempts suicide and is brought to trial before Philip, now Deemster. Before the whole court he renounces his office and explains why he is not worthy of the trust vested in him. The story closes with the bitterly disillusioned Pete making a great sacrifice, returning to the mines without even the companionship of the baby in whom he was so wrapt, and leaving the little family in contentment and happiness.

When the revenue officers do arrive they take care of father while Jerry handles Hank. The constable is still after him and the resourceful Jerry finally pushes him off into a ravine. They then are easily captured. The spies of a foreign government, led by Margaret Templeton are trying to steal the secret of the bomb. Among their number is a hypnotist of amazing power and he hypnotizes Lillian, the devoted daughter of the inventor. While under his power she steals the plans, and hands them to the hypnotist. Ben sees him from a window and climbs out. Margaret Templeton, from the roof above, drops a potted plant on his head and he in turn drops it on the head of the hypnotist below. He thus secures the plans and returns them to the inventor. After the spies have tried all means and have bound the inventor and his daughter, Lillian lights the bomb herself and is shot skyward. The bomb drops into the stronghold of the spies and they are all set laughing. When Ben has fitted out the police with nose appliances, they are able to take the dancing prisoners to jail.

He determines to propose, then comes upon Ann with a group of society women about her congratulating her. Suspended Sentence—(One Reel)—Christie Comedy—April 2.—Betty Compson, Neal Burns and Ethel Lynne featured. Mr. and Mrs. Gordon think their daughter, Betty, must be getting tired of her stay in the country. But Betty is having the time of her life, falling in love with Neal, a young lawyer of the village, and before she leaves they are engaged. Now, Mr. Gordon is a gay old boy who will have no hick lawyer for a son-in-law and sends Neal packing. Back in the village, the justice of the peace has to leave for a few days and has Neal take his place. Mr. Gordon goes out on a joy-ride with another gay dog and a couple of "chickens." They go to the country and are arrested for speeding. It happens to be Neal's district and when Gordon is haled into court, there is Neal presiding. Seeing his advantage, Neal writes a little note to Gordon, "If I can marry your daughter, you get suspended sentence; otherwise—thirty days in jail!" Gordon has to admit defeat and gives his consent, knowing he cannot double-cross Neal because of the "suspended sentence."

Twice in the Same Place—(One Reel)—Christie Comedy—April 9.—Featuring Billie Rhodes. Jack has little except a large heart, full of love for Maida, who lives across the hall with Ethel and is wedded to her art studies. Jack, to loosen Uncle's purse-strings, has told him that he, Jack, is married and a happy father. Uncle drops in suddenly and Jack prevails upon Maida to impersonate his wife, while a baby is borrowed from a neighbor, Stella. Uncle is completely fooled and decides to spend the night with Jack and his "wife," sleeping on the couch in the front room. As a way out, Jack proposes marrying Maida at once and she has to consent. Jack brings an unwilling minister up the fire escape. A witness is needed and Ethel has to come up the fire-escape, but gets in the front room with Uncle. An officer, chasing a burglar, comes in Uncle's room and Uncle, to save Ethel, tells the policeman that she is his wife. Meanwhile the burglar is acting as witness for Jack and Maida, and Stella is trying to recover her baby. The policeman leaves, threatening to return for proof of Uncle's proper relations with Ethel. The minister, passing Uncle's window, is again presed into service, while the fleeing burglar again is witness. Jack and Maida come in just as the knot is tied on Uncle, and the policeman returning, captures the crook. Stella bursts in to get her baby, and the whole scheme is revealed, with congratulations all around.

Frieder Film Corporation: This company's first offering will be a five-reel production of the "Bird's Christmas Carol" by Kate Douglas Wiggins.

Empire All-Star Corporation: A little stock is being offered for re-sale slightly below par, with bonus of common. The company expects to commence releasing pictures in about sixty to ninety days.

States Film Corporation: Say that their business is exceeding expectations, as they are now using practically all their capital and have received all their money back from some of their earlier deals.

Sunshine Film Corporation: This company has produced its first picture, which is a one-reel comedy, entitled, "Some Baby."

Mr. Weiss is desirous of awakening the exhibitors in these states to a further appreciation of the value of Selznick pictures, and the combination of Mr. Weiss and his new tan machine will be an alliance that will be irresistible to the exhibitors. Mr. Weiss is accompanied by Ben Weisenbach, sales manager of the American Photoplayer Company, 14 East Jackson boulevard, manufacturers of high grade photoplayers and orchestral pipe organs. Mr. Weisenbach is also making a tour of the different theaters where they have placed their photoplayers and organs.

WAKE UP!
Motion Picture Industry

An Appeal for Immediate United Action to Take Care of an Emergency

We, the undersigned Exhibitor Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, representing the Exhibitors of the United States, appeal to all who have the best interests of the Industry at heart for immediate help in the following emergency.

There are some thirty States in which censorship and other bills are pending in Legislatures, which, if passed, will cost this Industry hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Several States are attempting constructive Legislation, especially the passing of laws legalizing Sunday showing, which will add millions to the receipts of this Industry.

Do you realize that we are now paying hundreds of thousands of dollars each year because several Cities and States already have censorship laws, which if repealed would be a great saving in money and increase in picture value?

Do you further realize that those States and Cities which have censorship do not alone pay the freight of censorship but that every one of us pay our share of this added expense to the cost of production?

You will probably agree that the National Association should have a permanent fund of Fifty Thousand Dollars to protect the Industry at all times.

Then you should also know that several States are asking for help and the National Association has no funds mostly because everybody thinks it is everybody else's business and not their own.

Do you realize a united Industry, or half united, can prevent any further abuse?

If a cyclone were to strike your neighbor you would at once contribute your work and money to help. Here is your own business at stake, attacked by worse than a dozen cyclones.

We can think of but one way to get immediate and quick relief. That is by asking a donation from all in the Industry towards a Legislative Fund. We therefore ask for voluntary and immediate contribution. Those having big interests give big; little interests their mite; great stars with great salaries should give bountifully; and other artists in proportion. We ask producers, photoplayers, exhibitors, great and small, each and all, when you see this appeal don't wait for someone else but start and immediately send your check with a generous donation in care of this Journal. Make check payable to the Exhibitors' Legislative Committee.

We further ask this Journal to publish from week to week the names and amounts of all donors. Are we the fifth largest industry? If so, are we large enough to take care of ourselves?

A SOUTHERN STAR

ZENA VIRGINIA KEEFE, co-star with Alan Hale in B. S. Moss' production of "One Hour," sequel to Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks," and "One Day," is a product of the Golden West, and one of the youngest and most promising stars on the motion picture horizon. Miss Keefe was born in San Francisco in 1896 and her career in films makes interesting history. She is an American girl to the core. While born in California, Miss Keefe is of Southern type, possessing all the characteristics of the land of cotton and sweet scented magnolias, particularly the soft voice and hospitable manner that is a birthright of every person of Southern heritage.

Zena Keefe in Scandinavian clothes.

When but three years old Miss Keefe made her first professional appearance in Palmer Cox's "Brownies in Fairyland." After this engagement she began her education in a convent in San Francisco, where she stayed until her parents moved to New York.

The latter part of 1914 Miss Keefe returned again to pictures. The most important pictures in which Miss Keefe has appeared lately include "The Scarlet Runner," "Perils of Our Girl Reporters," "The Island of Surprise," "The Tigress," "Life's Yesterday," "The Esterbrooke Case," "Three Hours of a Woman's Life."

VAN LOAN WITH MOTION PICTURE MAGAZINE

Herbert H. Van Loan, for the past two and a half years publicity manager for the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., has resigned his position to become identified with the staff of the Motion Picture Magazine as feature writer. His departure from the Universal's publicity desk was in the nature of a distinct loss to that concern, as Van, as he is popularly known, long has had the reputation of being one of Broadway's most proficient press agents.

Van Loan made his film debut with the Universal company and during the two and a half years that he has held down the berth of publicity manager has been responsible for some of the biggest "stories" of the industry. Van Loan handled all of the Universal publicity for the screen debut of Anna Pavlowa in the photoplay, "The Dumb Girl of Portici," also for "Where Are My Children," "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," "Liberty," the serial which he novelized, and other Universal features too numerous to mention.

It was H. H. Van Loan who first introduced semi-fiction publicity stories, which he syndicated to all leading magazines. Van Loan's last appearance for Universal was on Easter Sunday night when with Violet Mersereau, the Universal star, he led the grand march at the ball of the Motion Picture Employes' Mutual Aid society at Labor Lyceum, Brooklyn.

In addition to his fiction duties, Mr. Van Loan will handle the publicity for L-Ko films and for Hiller & Wilks.

FOUR YEARS GENERAL MANAGER

John Francis Skerrett celebrated his fourth year as general manager of the Nicholas Power Company on April 1. Mr. Skerrett came to the Power company in 1913 and during his administration the now famous Camerograph No. 6B was introduced to the trade. To his efforts is due in great measure the present splendid organization which is so well known to all in the motion picture industry. Prior to his connection with the Nicholas Power Company he was chief of the New York municipal bureau of electricity. He is a man of very strong and forceful personality, and the Nicholas Power Company is to be congratulated upon having such a man as Mr. Skerrett at the helm.

NEW VITAGRAPH MANAGER

W. F. Barrett has been appointed manager of the Toronto office of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., succeeding L. H. Watrous, who goes to the Boston Exchange.

Mr. Barrett has been connected with the film industry for a number of years, his field of endeavor being the Dominion of Canada, which he has covered from coast to coast. He first was stationed at Toronto as exchange manager, later changing employers and taking charge of everything in the Dominion west of Winnipeg. His most recent position gave him jurisdiction over Toronto, Montreal and St. John. He brings to his new position a host of exhibitor friends who have followed his destiny for several years.

Grace Cunard, and Francis Ford, have finished a special feature for Carl Laemmle, and both Miss Cunard and Francis Ford have made other affiliations.

DORIS MITCHELL PLAYS HEAVY

Doris Mitchell, who has played many sweet pursued-by-the-villain heroines, is playing the villainess in support of E. K. Lincoln in the Mutual series "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal." Miss Mitchell is cast as "The Woman in Black" who exerts such a strong influence over the life of Jimmie.

Before becoming distinguished as a screen star Miss Mitchell achieved a great deal of fame behind the footlights of the legitimate drama. Her first appearances were in Chicago, her home town, where she played in Edmund Russell's production of "Hamlet" and later in the support of Julia Marlowe and E. H. Sothern. After her apprenticeship in Chicago she was featured in many of the theaters in New York City, later returning to Chicago as leading woman with the Marlowe Stock Company. Following this engagement she appeared with many American stars, the last one being with Arnold Daly, as his leading woman in such productions as "The Regeneration," etc.

Doris Mitchell, as the Woman in Black in "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal."

She next accepted an engagement in the films with the Essanay Company but afterward left the screen to appear in vaudeville—again as Arnold Daly's leading woman. Miss Mitchell has now returned to the screen with the Monmouth Film Corporation and is appearing in the unique "Jimmie Dale" series.

VIC JOHNSON WITH WILLIAMSON BROTHERS

Victor B. Johnson has moved the tools of his profession to the Longacre building, New York, and is now responsible for the advertising and publicity of the Williamson Brothers productions, controlled exclusively by the Submarine Film Corporation.

Vic has been actively engaged in publicity work for the past four years. He broke into picturedom with Warner's Feature Film Company, after an extensive newspaper career. The motion picture section of the Morning Telegraph next claimed his attention. Then came the exploitation of Ditmar's Wild Animal Life Pictures; two years in the copy department of Street Railways Advertising Company, six months in charge of Vitagraph's news service department, and now he has concluded four months with the Kalem Company to take up his new duties with the originators of submarine motion pictures.

He developed the idea of having all trade stories set in a typewriter face on the linotype machine and then run off on a distinctive colored stock; also the idea of sending studio gossip to a mailing list of newspapers in a new and attractive form—an 8-page perforated folio, 6x9, accompanied by mats or featherweight electros. With the unusual opportunities that the under-sea devices of the Williamson Brothers offer for publicity along new lines, he will undoubtedly further enhance his reputation as a purveyor of good press stories.

Goldwyn's Decision Is: "Open Bookings"

THE REASONS behind Goldwyn's adoption of this policy are:

1. Thousands of the nation's exhibitors have advised it.

2. Each Goldwyn production will be strong enough to stand on its own merits, without leaning on the picture behind or the picture ahead.

3. Exhibitors should have the right to rent the group of pictures they want without being forced to take other pictures they do not want.

And—Goldwyn considers it wisest to let exhibitors use their own brains in deciding what pictures are best for their theatres and their communities.

Goldwyn guarantees a minimum production of twenty-six pictures a year from the date of its first release in September.

Thousands of exhibitors already have written to inquire about bookings because they believe Goldwyn Pictures will solve their most troublesome problem—the problem of quality. Are you on the Goldwyn mailing list to receive our announcements?

New York Film Tax Modified

OTHER STATES MAY FOLLOW SUIT IF BILL SHOULD PASS

THE bill which is to mean a tax of several hundred thousand dollars a year on the picture industry is at present in the mill in the legislature of New York state.

The forces of the industry have been mobilized to oppose it. President William A. Brady, of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has called several meetings of film men in New York and many were present also at the public hearing of the bill held before the senate judiciary committee at Albany on April 19.

Other States May Follow Suit

The importance of this proposed state tax lies in the fact that in the opinion of many prominent film men, including William A. Brady, if the bill becomes a law in New York many other states will pass similar taxes. This would mean a burden on the industry that would be impossible to estimate. The efforts of the men of the east in combating the bill may bear results. In fact, it is possible that even before this reaches its readers the bill may be delayed, killed or again modified. There seems to be a sentiment that the bill will not be passed.

In last week's issue of MOTOGRAPHY was printed the complete bill as it then stood. Through the efforts of those who have the welfare of the industry at heart the measure has been modified to the following form:

The Revised Bill

The revised draft of the measure calls for the appointment by the governor with the consent of the senate of a commissioner at $7,000 a year, to hold office for five years. The commissioner will have charge of the regulation of motion pictures, will collect all taxes and license fees, and seems to be empowered to suppress any "improper" picture by order, with rules and penalties fixed for the production, distribution or showing of any film so prohibited. He can also appoint deputies and fix their compensation within the limit of the appropriation allowed for the department. He may subpoena witnesses and papers in the carrying out of his investigations, and may impart the same power to his deputies.

The heavy tax upon the industry includes a license from the main branches of the business and an impost upon every foot of positive print produced or shown within the state.

Each producer and distributor must pay an annual license fee of $200. The producer also is taxed on every foot of positive produced within the state for exhibition here. Films produced elsewhere are taken care of through a footage tax on the distributor, who must pay for every picture brought into the state for exhibition. The exhibitor's share in the levy is made up of a license for each individual theater, the amount being regulated by the seating capacity of the house, ranging from $5 to $200. The exhibitor must also pay a supplemental fee for every foot of positive used by him which is not already taxed under the levy imposed upon the producers and distributors. Proof of the cost of the production must accompany the positive, and the commissioner will then determine the amount of the tax according to the schedule. Each positive will be given a serial number and have indicated upon it the payment of the tax. How the film is to be marked has not yet been decided.

License Fees

The provisions of the bill, which differ from those which appeared in last Sunday's issue of the Morning Telegraph, follow:

License Fees—The following fees shall be paid for licenses issued under this article:

1. For a producer's license, an initial annual fee of $200, and a supplemental fee for each positive print for exhibition within the state of a picture produced by him within the state, based upon the footage cost of the negative of such positive print.

2. For a distributor's license, an initial annual fee of $200, and a supplemental fee for each positive print for exhibition of a motion picture within the state except a positive in respect of which a supplemental producer's fee is payable under subdivision one of this section, based upon the footage cost of the negative of such positive print.

3. For an exhibitor's license, an initial annual fee of $5, if the place of exhibition has a seating capacity of 300 or less; $10, if the place of exhibition has a seating capacity of more than 300, and not more than 600; $25, if the place of exhibition has a seating capacity of more than 600 and not more than 1,000; $50, if the place of exhibition has a seating of more than 1,000 and not more than 1,500; $100, if the place of exhibition has a seating capacity of more than 1,500 and not more than 2,000; $200, if the place of exhibition has a seating capacity of more than 2,000.

Every positive on which a producer, distributor or exhibitor must pay a tax is to be submitted to the commissioner before it can be distributed for exhibition in the state.

An exhibitor shall also pay a supplemental license fee for every positive used by him in the exhibition of a motion picture except a positive in respect of which a supplemental producer's or distributor's fee is payable under subdivisions one and two of this section. Such supplemental license fee for an exhibitor shall be measured by the cost of production of the negative, at the same rate as the supplemental fee for a producer's or distributor's license.

$2 for Operators

4. For an operator's license, an annual fee of $2. If a license, other than an operator's license be issued for a term of less than one year, the initial license fee shall be apportioned accordingly by the quarter year, but a fraction of a quarter of a year shall be deemed a whole quarter.

Supplemental License Fees—The supplemental license fees on account of the production or distribution of positives, or the exhibtion of motion pictures by the use of positives, shall be based upon the cost per foot of producing the negative as follows:

The Film Tax

If $2 or less, ¼ of a cent per foot.
If more than $2 and not more than $3, ½ cent per foot.
If more than $3 and not more than $4, ¾ cent per foot.
If more than $4 and not more than $5, 1 cent per foot.
If more than $5 and not more than $6, 1¼ cents per foot.
If more than $6 and not more than $7, 1½ cents per foot.

If more than $7 and not more than $8, 1¾ cents per foot.
If more than $8 and not more than $10, 2¼ cents per foot.
If more than $10 and not more than $12, 2¾ cents per foot.
If more than $12 and not more than $14, 3¼ cents per foot.
If more than $14 and not more than $16, 3¾ cents per foot.
If more than $16, 4¼ cents per foot.

Every positive on account of which a producer or distributor is required by this article to pay a supplemental license fee shall be submitted to the commissioner before distribution for exhibition within the state. Every positive on account of which an exhibitor is required by this article to pay a supplemental license fee shall be submitted to the commissioner before a motion picture is exhibited therewith. The submission of each such positive shall be accompanied with such proof of the cost of production of the negative as the commissioner, by rule, shall prescribe. Such cost shall include a just and fair share of the overhead or general expenses of the corporation or concern producing such negative. The commissioner shall thereupon compute such supplemental license fee. Upon the payment of such fee the commissioner shall assign to such positive a serial number, and indicate such payment on the positive in such manner as he may determine.

No positive shall be used for exhibition of a motion picture for the first time within the state after September 1, 1917, unless the supplemental fee required to be paid by the producer, distributor or exhibitor on account of such positive shall have been paid.

General Powers and Duties of Commissioner—The commissioner shall enforce the provisions of this article and of article twelve-a of this chapter. He shall also co-operate with local authorities in the enforcement of laws and ordinances relating to sanitation, safety and ventilation of places for exhibition of motion pictures.

GENERAL'S PRESIDENT RESIGNS

Benjamin B. Hampton, of General Film Company, to Devote All His Time to Rex Beach Pictures Company.

Concerning his resignation from the presidency of the General Film Company, Benjamin B. Hampton has the following to say:

I have resigned the presidency of General Film so that I can spend my time on the Rex Beach Pictures Company, of which Mr. Beach and I are the owners. I am distributing "The Barrier," which is a highly important piece of work in itself. Mr. Beach and I are making a ten-reel drama of "The Auction Block," and are planning to start production at once on another large picture from another of his books. It was impossible for me to do justice to these valuable interests and continue to handle such an important matter as the presidency of General Film.

Some weeks ago I requested the board to appoint an assistant to the president of the General Film, Harold Bolster, who was then business manager of the Vitagraph Company. Mr. Bolster has now been elected vice-president and general manager of General.

Some of the trade journals have been kind enough to state that during the very short time I have been with General Film, important progress has been made. Undoubtedly this is the fact, but the important changes that have taken place in General Film must be credited to the manufacturers who are also the common stock-holders of the company. Like many old, successful institutions, General Film has become conservative, but the manufacturers are very progressive and were very quick to accept suggestions to modernize and improve the business. General Film is today in position to move on to a most prominent position in picture distributing.

Sunday Pictures Winning

While reports were being received at the offices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Times building, regarding the favorable action taken by the New York senate codes committee in reporting the bill designed to legalize motion picture shows in New York state on Sunday, advices were received from Iowa that the state senate had passed, by vote of 27 to 17, a bill permitting motion picture shows on Sunday in that state.

The favorable action on the Sunday bills by the Upper Houses in the legislatures of New York and Iowa, follows closely the passage of the bills permitting the opening of the motion pictures theaters on Sunday in the states of Indiana and Connecticut and it is now believed that other states will adopt similar measures, as it is evident the opposition has been broken in several states where it was not expected that favorable consideration would be given to the Sunday measures providing for Sunday openings at the present legislative sessions.

Directors Offer Services to Wilson

The Motion Picture Directors' Association of New York pledged its allegiance and offered its services to President Wilson at a dinner given at the Hotel Astor, last Tuesday evening (April 10th) in honor of Adolph Zukor. The telegram sent to the President by the association was as follows:

At our meeting tonight, we, the Motion Picture Directors' Association of New York, beg to express to you and our nation our loyalty and allegiance in this hour of national peril. Any service that our association in its small way can render to the cause of humanity will be rendered. May right and justice prevail. May victory attend your every effort to further your high and noble purposes. God bless our leader and our country.

The dinner was one of the most successful that the association has ever held. J. Searle Dawley of the Famous Players had built for the occasion an elaborate Egyptian set. The dinner table was constructed in step formation, so arranged that four guests sat on each level. On the top level sat Mr. Zukor and Alan Dwan, the toastmaster.

The guests included Alan Dwan, J. Gordon Edwards, Oscar Eagle, J. Searle Dawley, Joseph Kauffman, Paul Scardon, Joseph W. Smiley, Sidney Olcott, Joseph Humphrey, M. Simpson, Robert T. Thornby, Robert G. Vignola, John G. Adolfi, Emile Chautard, Edwin Carewe, Frank Crane, Harley Knowles, Jack Harvey, Travers Vale, Charles Giblyn, Francis J. Grandon, Del Henderson, Larry McGill, John Ince, Perry N. Vieckroff, Bob Leonard, and J. Allen Boone.

St. Louis Managers Meet

At a meeting of the Theater Managers' and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of St. Louis, on April 6, all officers and thirty-two members were present.

William Goldman, manager of the Lindell Theater, was elected to active membership.

The National Film Publicity Association offers to pay the association $1,500 a year if the members will run an additional fifty feet to their paid advertising for six days a month, and a 5 per cent commission on new business.

A motion was carried adopting unanimously the following resolution:

Whereas the Congress of the United States assembled in extraordinary session has seen fit in their wisdom and judgment to declare that a state of war exists between the United States and the Imperial Government of Germany; now therefore, resolved, by the Theater Managers' and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, that we pledge our earnest support to the Stars and Stripes and our loyalty to our country.

Second Gail Kane Feature

In a statement issued last week it was erroneously stated that the second American-Mutual release featuring Gail Kane would be a screen adaptation of "With Edged Tools," a novel by H. S. Merriman. The error arose in a misconstruction of studio information. Miss Kane's second American-Mutual picture is entitled "Edged Tools" and is from an entirely different story by Forrest Halsey.

Goldwyn Director Called to Washington

Uncle Sam, in taking stock of his military resources, has summoned to Washington nearly all of the men on the retired lists of the United States Army and Navy, who have entered fields of labor.

John W. Noble, who has been directing Miss Mae Marsh, has been summoned to Washington for a conference. Mr. Noble is a graduate West Pointer and as a captain and engineer saw seven years of military service in China, the Philippines and in Mexico. He has practically completed his latest picture for Goldwyn, and the call will in no way retard or interrupt Miss Marsh's picture.

SAD STORY OF A BLACK SHEEP

SAMUEL ZICKER, manager of the New Center Theater, Fifteenth street and Troost avenue, Kansas City, after finding that he could not make the house pay, skipped out, leaving musicians, ushers, film exchanges, advertising, electric lights and telephone bills unpaid, to the tune of about $1,300, according to F. G. Altman, one of the owners of the house. It is said the former manager did not steal the machine nor the theater.

"Buster" Keaton, formerly a vaudevillian, and who makes his screen debut with "Fatty" Arbuckle in "The Butcher Boy," developed an attachment for screen work which convinced him he should stick in that work for some time to come. This decision was reached after "Fatty" had emptied a bucket of molasses over him.

George Hoover, of the Universal City forces, reported to General Manager Davis, on Friday of last week, that he has another baby on his hands. It seems however that the baby is not his. It belongs to Mr. and Mrs. Camel, third apartment, the Zoo.

WILL HE KILL US?

Back in the musty tomes of Motography the official sleuth has discovered that about three quarters of a generation ago a secret concerning D. W. Griffith percolated to the public. It was this,—and we almost blush to say it—the full name of the mighty drama builder is David Llewelyn Wark Griffith.

Here is a note of how Doug. Fairbanks boarded a train and the train boarded Doug.

When Mister Fairbanks took the Twentieth Century from New York to Chicago on his recent jump to California the New York Central entertained him and Bennie Zeidman at a sumptuous repast and the vigorous star's name appeared on the menu card in a dedicatory phrase. Everyone in the diner will tell the folks at home about it.

The railroads are at last beginning to learn that moving picture people are doing a great deal to keep things moving on the R. R's.

MADGE KENNEDY'S OPINION

"What could be more sad than a man without a country?" queried a patriotic person, displaying emotion.

"A country without a man," answered Madge Kennedy, without hesitating a moment for the response.

The best laugh that was handed to Fatty Arbuckle during his recent tour of the country resulted from a post card which a small town motion picture exhibitor sent out to his patrons. Arbuckle carefully saved one and brought it to New York with him.

The card reads: "Next Saturday! 'The Doll's House' by Ibsen! Come and bring the kiddies!"

New Plan Favors Theaters

PARALTA PLAYS GIVES EXHIBITOR CONTROL OF PICTURE IN OWN TERRITORY

THE new distributing corporation, Paralta Plays, Inc., formed by Carl Anderson, Herman Fichtenberg, Nat. I. Brown, Robert T. Kane and Herman Katz, has begun to make known its policy, which is likely to greatly interest the industry in general and the exhibitor in particular, their new plan offering several very important advantages to the managers of theaters.

The new corporation will have two interests—producing connections on one hand and distributing service on the other. The producing connections, of which there are two at the present time, will make a specific number of big feature pictures each year, which will be booked under a method of distribution which will be known as the Paralta Plan.

Combats Distribution Waste

This plan is designed especially to combat waste in distribution. By minimizing waste Paralta Plays will be able to offer exhibitors much more advantageous terms than less efficient distributing methods can offer, their leaks, through inefficiency of system in many instances, representing the difference between profit and loss.

The Paralta plan reduces distributions costs and overhead to the lowest possible figure. Waste in every direction is reduced to a minimum, which saving will be turned to the advantage of the exhibitor and not used to increase the profits of the producer or distributor. These interests will be protected on the basis of fixed returns on specific outlay and in this way the theater manager will be given every possible advantage in the booking of Paralta Plays.

Another feature of the Paralta plan will be the booking of Paralta plays with one exhibitor in a specific exhibition territory. This feature will give that exhibitor full control of an attraction for a definite time. Should he run it for three days or a week, and spend considerable money in advertising it, the picture cannot be run at lower prices against his house a few weeks later and another exhibitor reap benefit from his work. He controls the picture absolutely in his own territory and can run it as often as he may be able to make it pay, practically without greater expense than he now pays for his first run of feature photo-dramas.

Plan Used in Chain of Theaters

The leaders of this enterprise have been giving every detail of the picture industry very close study during the past two years with the formation of Paralta Plays and the projection of the Paralta Plan in mind. For eight months they had their plan in operation in the Fichtenberg chain of theaters in the south and in several houses in the west. Experiences in the working of the plan were identical in each section.

It was only after this exhaustive investigation under the supervision and direction of Nat. I. Brown, the general manager of the Paralta enterprise, that the new company was formed. Its basis is solid experience and complete evidence that the plan is practical and will work out in actual experience that which was expected of it in its theoretical stages.

Several state rights men of prominence, who have inquired into the new distribution plan, and have talked with General Manager Brown, express their satisfaction with its details and especially the very equitable break it gives the local distributor in connection with the exhibitor.

"The Paralta plan," President Anderson says, "will prevent waste from the first day of the making of a picture it controls to the last day of its distribution and exhibition, excluding all 'hogging' of profits by one interest. The Paralta plan stands only for absolute equity in the relation of each interest to the other in the handling of Paralta Plays."

Booklets Give Information

In view of the fact that the work of detailing the Paralta plan to exhibitors will be largely educational at first, the company is having prepared several pamphlets and other communication of importance treating of the new system and other features of interest in the picture production and exhibition industry. These pamphlets and communications will present many very interesting facts in connection with the investigation on which the Paralta plan was founded.

MINNEAPOLIS CONVENTION

Big Exhibitors' Show to Take Place May 1, 2 and 3. Program Announced—Exchanges Contribute to Support of Event

All arrangements for the sixth annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the northwest have been completed, according to David G. Rodgers. The convention is scheduled for Minneapolis, May 1, 2 and 3.

President Gilosky has made an emphatic ruling which will certainly tend to facilitate matters at the coming convention in Minneapolis two weeks hence.

He has ruled that every exhibitor intending to bring up any matters on the convention floor must have same typewritten, double-spaced, with a duplicate to cover every resolution or constitutional amendment. This rule will be strictly adhered to so as to avoid confusion and waste of the convention's time.

David G. Rodgers, chairman of the convention committee, made an eloquent talk before the film exchanges the previous Tuesday and at last Tuesday afternoon's meeting of the exhibitors his recommendations were adopted unanimously.

W. K. Howard, manager of the Vitagraph Exchange, and Harry Rathner, of the Supreme and Selznick Exchange, appeared before the exhibitors last Tuesday and each tendered a subscription of one hundred dollars to help entertain the visiting exhibitors.

These exchange men were very frank and stated that they did not expect any special consideration for their subscription and commended the exhibitors corporation for the independent spirit it had shown.

Thomas J. Hamlin, chairman of the publicity committee, offered the following program for the convention and same was unanimously adopted:

TUESDAY, MAY 1

Ten a. m.—Convention called to order by President Gilosky in the Colonial Room, West Hotel. President Appoints a Credentials Committee of Three; Mayor's Speech of Welcome; President's Report of Year; Treasurer's Report of Year; Secretary's report of Year, which also includes the reports of all standing committees. Panoramic group photograph, Hennepin avenue side, West Hotel.

Eight p. m.—Banquet, Moorish Room, West Hotel.

THURSDAY, MAY 3

Ten a. m.—Convention, Colonial Room; Parcel Post Representatives; National League Officers; Trade Journal Representatives; Exchange and Supply House Representatives.

Two p. m.—Nomination and Election of Officers.

Eight p. m.—Grand Ball (Formal) in Moorish Room; Dansant (Informal) in Pheasant Room, West Hotel; Movie Stars' Reception. The exchanges were requested to appoint a committee of five to serve on the Reception Committee of the coming convention.

There will positively be no charge for the various entertainments this year and every exhibitor who is a member of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest, whether he lives in Montana or the Twin Cities, will receive one combination ticket admitting him to all entertainments free of charge.

The visiting exhibitors have heretofore been charged $2.50 for the course tickets.

Each film exchange and supply house that contributes toward the entertainment of the delegates will receive two course tickets complimentary. To others who desire to attend the entertainments the course tickets will cost $3.00. Single tickets to each of the entertainments, collectively, would amount to $3.50, as follows: Fifty cents for the Broadway Cabaret, $2.00 for the banquet and $1.00 for the ball.

It is predicted that this convention will exceed the combined attendance of the last three conventions.

All the trade journals will be provided with tables just outside of the convention hall and their press representatives will have a long press table at their disposal inside the hall.

New York Motion Picture Ball

The motion picture ball at Terrace Garden New York, was given for the benefit of the American Red Cross, but those who did not wish to enlist in the army or navy did well to stay away. All of the screen players present were endeavoring to get recruits, and Sidney Ascher promised a diamond ring to the person who obtained the most applicants.

More than fifty actors and actresses made the rounds of the Broadway hotels and restaurants during the week preceding the ball and on Saturday night a group of players, including Leah Baird, Virginia Pearson, Florence Turner, Zena Keefe, June Elvidge, Betty Scott, Eva Shirley, Bertha Ascher and Pearl White, visited a number of Broadway restaurants and were able to dispose of several hundred tickets. They were escorted by a troupe of Boy Scouts.

Hugo Reisenfeld, conductor of the Rialto Theater orchestra, directed the music of fifty musicians and composed a special march for the occasion. The grand march, starting at midnight, was expected to be led by Roscoe Arbuckle, with Virginia Pearson, and Earle Williams with Leah Baird. A large number of city officials were present.

Large Cast in "Outcast"

Thirty-six well known players have been engaged to support Ann Murdock in "Outcast," the Charles Frohman stage success which is being produced at the Empire All Star Studios for release through Mutual.

The splendid cast selected is an indication of the elaborate production which is being made of this great drama.

The players who will assist Miss Murdock are:

Jack Dillon, Charles Hampden, Conrad Cantzen, Lola Talma, Al Gaston, Jack Tansey, Andrew Marity, Basil Buck, Thomas Gaston, Andrew Harrington, Thomas Estleman, Eddie Boulden, Walter Carter, Leo Frankel, Jessie Liggens, Carrie Darling, Bessie Brown, Bert Hyde, Ann Barleson, Baby Lasher, Elizabeth Van Sell, Nellie Backwith, Arthur Notman, Basil West, Edward Thompson, Joseph Burton, Frank Murdock, J. War Message to Exhibitors

By John R. Freuler,
President Mutual Film Corporation

THE United States of American is now at war with the German Empire.

It has long been inevitable—regretable but inevitable and necessary. We need not discuss that here. Our government has acted for us. It is now for us to support the government, make valid its demands, its plans, its action.

The motion picture, in the period since the United States was engaged in its last conflict at arms, has grown into the estate of a new form of public press. The picture today supplements and completes the all important mission of the newspaper and other organs of the public press.

As a part of the public press the motion picture has its privileges and its obligations.

We of the motion picture industry can, I believe, be of peculiarly valuable service to the nation in this time of stress.

The motion picture is the literature, the drama, the amusement, and the thought stimulus of our millions of people. It is certain that the motion picture reaches daily and hourly as many persons as any other medium under the sun. The motion picture has the particular power of attracting and holding concentrated attention in a measure that is not approached by any other medium of thought transmission and art expression.

This means the motion picture is a great power.

Let us strive to make this power serve the just and patriotic purposes of our government. Let us make our screens aid the cause of preparation and mobilization. Let us tell the government's story, the appeal of the army and navy and the munition makers and workers, on the screen.

In expression of the attitude of the Mutual Film Corporation the following message has been sent to President Wilson:

"In behalf of the Mutual Film Corporation, an institution in intimate contact with the sixteen thousand motion picture theaters of the United States, I offer you our services in communicating your policies and the will of the government of the United States to the people through the medium of the picture screen.—John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation."

To those exhibitors who may feel a slight apprehension of the commercial effect of the war let me offer reassurance. The war history of the motion picture industry of the European countries now in conflict shows a remarkable prosperity for the theater. The picture theaters have nothing to fear from a state of war. People will look to the theaters with a renewed interest.

Let us put picture power behind the President.

Triangle Abolishs "Deposit System"

BEGINNING APRIL 30 WILL ACCEPT BONDS FROM EXHIBITORS AS SECURITY

ORGANIZED exhibitors have been mobilized against the deposit system for some time. Their drives are now beginning to win results.

Trinagle is about to put into operation a new system of bonding exhibitors which is designed to do away with the necessity of requiring advance deposits. This will lift a tremendous burden from the shoulders of exhibitors, and will undoubtedly be hailed as the most progressive move that has been made in the film industry in several years.

Speaking of this new policy, R. W. France, general manager of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, said:

"This is one of the steps Triangle is taking to assist the Triangle exhibitor, leaving him greater freedom to devote to the exhibiting problems which constitute his legitimate work in the industry. It is also Triangle's way of keeping the pledge made to the Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League on December 6, 1916. At that time we made this statement:

The principal need of a deposit is to provide against sudden and unfair discontinuances by theaters at such times or in such manner as to cause film to lie idle. * * * If we can work out, or if anybody else can work out, a plan that will make the deposit system unnecessary, we will gratefully adopt it.

"Doubtless the trade took this to be one of those glib 'promises' that are easier to make than to keep, but Triangle officials have been busily engaged in arranging the details of this reform ever since. We are happy to say that we are now in a position to make good our words.

Underwritten Contracts In Lieu of Deposits

"Beginning April 30, and extending to all accounts as fast as the actual labor of rewriting the old contracts will permit, exhibitors may apply their deposits against current service; and in lieu of deposit to secure this corporation against abuse of contracts, we have perfected arrangements with the Fidelity and Casualty Company of New York, whereby for a nominal sum, it will underwrite the contract made by the exhibitor and become security for the correct performance of all his obligations under the contract. Under these circumstances the only remaining advantage of the deposit system would be the free financing of our proposition by the exhibitors, a service this corporation has never needed, and does not want.

"The premiums which the exhibitor will have to pay per year will only average one per cent of one month's deposit under the present system."

Mr. France also wishes to make it clear that this new plan is entirely elastic. If for any reason any exhibitor prfers not to use it, the old system is always available to him. New contract forms embodying this new option, he said, were now in the press; the premiums charged by the bonding company are very small. They are on an annual basis, and if a contract be cancelled in accordance with its terms, a pro-rata return premium to the exhibitor will be made.

It is evident that the system has been worked out with considerable care to fully meet the exhibitor's demand for relief from the advance deposit system, while giving the distributor the protection which it is generally agreed that he is entitled to have.

W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, who is directly responsible for the successful launching at this long-awaited reform, has issued the following interesting statement regarding the events which have led up to the change:

"At the time I devised the cash deposit system for the Progressive Motion Picture Corporation several years ago I had no thought that it might later be intimated (perhaps with some basis of fact) that such a system could be utilized to finance shaky propositions. Naturally I had appreciated the added financial strength which such a system would give to an organization backed by these cash deposits guaranteeing as they did the payment of all accounts and the faithful fullfilment of contracts on the part of the exhibitors.

Purposes of Deposit System

The underlying purposes of the system were:

To secure the support of exhibitors for a period of time sufficient to enable us to demonstrate to them the value of our product.

To insure us against having our films booked and then left on our shelves unused because of violations of contracts.

To provide us with ample time to secure new business following notices of discontinuance.

To afford us some protection against damage to or loss of our property.

To protect us from unscrupulous persons.

"The above are but a few of the legitimate reasons for our adoption of the cash deposit system. That it has been successful is now history.

"The policies of the Progressive company, among them the cash deposit system, served as the groundwork for the Paramount policies which were later prepared by me. When Paramount was formed I tried unsuccessfully to get various bonding companies to assume the risk but they all declined to do so giving as their reason the instability of the film industry as a whole and the unreliability of exhibitors in particular. They held that the business was not a legitimate one.

"While I am satisfied that the cash deposit system has been a success and has, up to the present time, represented the best plan available, I have, nevertheless, always regarded it as no more than a makeshift, a sort of stepping-stone to the ideal solution, the bonding system. I have devoted a great deal of time and thought to this problem and have never for a moment doubted that sooner or later we could secure the recognition which is accorded to other big businesses.

"For several months past I have been in consultation with the heads of some of the largest bonding companies in America and have laid before them a large amount of data which I have been collecting for just this purpose with the result that I have been able to convince the Fidelity and Casualty Company of New York of the soundness of our proposition and they have agreed to provide bonds for such exhibitors as may elect to substitute a bond in place of their cash deposit.

"I am not a little elated over this successful termination of a long, up-hill fight and my satisfaction is due, in a great measure, to the fact that it establishes the motion picture exhibitors as sound, dependable business men, a status heretofore denied them.

"The bonding proposition, like our optional booking plan announced last week, represents but one of a series of progressive, constructive plans we expect to inaugurate

Learns From MOTOGRAPHY

Motography, Chicago:

I am an enthusiastic reader of Motography. I read every department and learn a little more every time. Could I get a little sound advice through your paper? Being a small town exhibitor, my theater being a converted store house in the middle of a block, I realize with summer coming on the poor ventilation my patrons will get. Am a little more than a month in the business, but mean to improve the best I can. I have only two oscillating fans, but mean to put in two more. I want to know with two extra exhaust fans each side of the booth will same cool and freshen circulation of air, if not, what would you advise? Am open to any suggestions.—S. Rubenstein, Elba, Ala.

in the near future and I am convinced that every one will make for a betterment of conditions and the improvement of the entire business. The Triangle Distributing Corporation is in this business to stay, and we expect to achieve eventual success by constantly fighting to put the film industry on a dependable, permanent basis, and we believe that we are going to have the loyal support of all of the better class exhibitors in the country."

Exhibitors Approve Plan

Pursuant to Triangle's announcement of its new booking policy, giving exhibitors the opportunity to show open market attractions, under an optional arrangement without cancelling their program rights, endorsements of the innovation from exhibitors in all parts of the country have already shown that the system will solve some of the most serious problems now facing the industry.

One tangible evidence of the soundness of the new policy has already been shown in the statement by R. W. France, general manager of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, to the effect that Eugene H. Roth, proprietor of the Portols Theater of San Francisco and executive manager of the new California Theater, now being constructed in that city at a cost of one million, seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, has decided, after a careful survey of the entire market, to book the Triangle program for both houses.

Telegrams from W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, who is now touring the West in the interest of the organization, and from branch managers in all sections of the United States also make it plain that the new booking system will strengthen Triangle's position materially.

E. V. Richards, general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company and the Fitchenberg Enterprises of New Orleans, who operate more than thirty-five picture houses, has also made known the fact that he and his associates will rely entirely upon the Triangle program and "special" feature to fill their new quarter million dollar Strand Theater, shortly to be opened in the Southern metropolis. Referring to the statement that Mr. Hodkinson sent out explaining the new schedule in detail, Mr. Richards said to a Triangle representative:

If that letter outlining the combination of program and open market booking had come from anyone else, I'd be apt to take it largely as "hot air," but I've been following Mr. Hodkinson's moves for years, and when he says a thing will happen, it certainly will be accomplished. This is really the best news I've heard in months.

"WAKE UP, AMERICA"

Paul Revere Alarms New York in Morning Ride on April 19, Anniversary of the Battle of Lexington

The National Duty Committee of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers arranged "Wake Up America Day" in New York City on April 19.

For this purpose the motion picture advertisers combined forces with the mayor's defense committee and temporary offices were taken in the room occupied by that committee at 50 East Forty-second street. John Harvey of the mayor's committee outlined the work which the mayor's committee had done, at a meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at Keene's Chop House and told the need for co-operation.

A cordial invitation was extended to Mr. Harvey to co-operate with a committee consisting of President Arthur James, B. P. Schulberg, P. A. Parsons, Paul Gulick, and Julian Solomon, and this committee met with the representatives of the mayor's defense committee.

Colonel Lucy and John Harvey of the mayor's committee were very enthusiastic in their praise of the work accomplished by the motion picture advertisers, and the excellent material in the form of slides, posters, newspaper advertisements, stories, etc., which was at hand.

A working plan of co-operation was drawn up for a permanent organization, in which neither patriotic society lost its own identity, but in which a complete and harmonious co-operation was assured, thereby rendering the work of both more effective.

"Wake Up America Day" was the anniversary of Paul Revere's ride on April 18, and the battle of Lexington which followed it next day. A mounted figure, dressed as Paul Revere, rode through the city in the early morning, and was greeted by all of the school bells, church bells, factory whistles and other noise-makers which have taken the place of the alarms of 1775.

Aeroplanes dropped messages from the clouds, automobiles carried banners with the inscription "Wake Up America," and a beautiful poster with the design of the American flag, and the legend, "If it is good enough to live under it is good enough to fight under," was used in front of motion picture houses by exhibitors.

Lamy with Hawk Film

The Hawk Film Company, of 1600 Broadway, New York, has entered the producing and distribution field. While engaged in making the next release, which promises to be a production of pretentious character, they have been marketing with success their first release, "The Monster of Fate." Joseph Lamy, general manager of the Hawk Film Company, has the keen judgment and energy of an executive who will place the Hawk in the front rank of the industry.

2,000 Feet Without Subtitles

One thing that will challenge attention of audiences in the second Maxine Elliott-Goldwyn Picture is the absence of every form of title, spoken word conveyed in print, or explanatory text matter of any sort in more than 2,000 continuous feet of this picture.

Stars Motor Onto Theater Stage

ONE of the best theater publicity stunts and the shortest auto ride on record was arranged by the Circle Theater of Indianapolis, Bryant Washburn, star of "Skinner's Dress Suit," and Hazel Daly, his leading lady in that screen play.

The auto course covered was exactly sixteen feet four inches and was made on the stage of the mammoth new Circle Theater at Indianapolis, Indiana.

The car was driven on its own power at a speed of fifteen miles per hour and served to climax the play on the screen by turning the inanimate to life and introducing the stars of the photoplay to perhaps the largest audiences ever assembled in a theater to welcome two players from shadowland.

The Circle, which is considered one of the largest and finest motion picture theaters in America, has a seating capacity of 3,100 and it is estimated that nearly twenty thousand people welcomed Mr. Washburn and Miss Daly on the first day of their appearance and the total attendance exceeded thirty-five thousand during their two-day visit.

Immediately upon consummation of booking arrangements for "Skinner's Dress Suit" S. Barrett McCormick, the managing and producing director of the Circle, invited Mr. Washburn and Miss Daly to appear in person at that theater, suggesting that their thousands of friends and screen admirers would surely be interested in the creators of the interesting and human screen characters. Following their acceptance, Mr. McCormick laid extensive arrangements for their entrance. The stage of the Circle is a huge one, measuring forty feet deep, a hundred feet long and seventy-five feet high. The stage setting was arranged as an exquisite garden with massive pillars, bubbling fountains and radiant with riotous color of natural flowers.

The screen was arranged so that it could sink beneath the stage and disappear from view. Behind the screen and masked from view by the scenery a crew of carpenters built a trestled bridge eight feet high and nearly a hundred feet long. On this was driven a huge touring car which with its occupants weighed two tons. Bearing full equipment and manned by a racing driver the big car was ready to be driven in on its own power.

As the last scene of "Skinner's Dress Suit" faded away the screen quickly and silently disappeared from view and off stage, as though in the distance, came the shriek of auto siren, then suddenly, as though rounding a bend in the road, two headlights flashed in from the wings through the mellowed blue lights of the stage setting and with the blare of horns and the smell of gasoline adding its touch of realism to the scene the huge car drove in upon the stage bearing in real life the stars of the sunplay.

Stepping from the car and blowing kisses to the thousands in the audience Miss Daly crossed to the footlights and in a gracious little speech that bubbled with the spirit and good humor of her screen characterization "Honey," told the audience how glad she was to cease being only a film and only hoped that they would learn to love her "Just half as much as they did Mr. Washburn."

Following Miss Daly, Mr. Washburn talked interestingly of the photoplay, its ideals, his hopes, and made a plea for a clean screen, expressing an opinion that only that which typifies the wholesome and true characteristics of life could live and give any art its fullest expression. His magnetic personality so keenly felt on the screen radiated from behind the footlights and his talk was greeted with constant applause. Following their stage appearance the players held an informal reception in the beautiful lounge room of the theater, greeting their many friends and screen devotees.

Manager S. Barrett McCormick arranged a mighty good publicity scheme when he had Bryant Washburn and Hazel Daly, stars of "Skinner's Dress Suit," motor right out onto the stage of his Circle Theater, Indianapolis. It drew big crowds.

The novelty of the appearance of the stars and the spectacular stage scene made for one of the most successful productions created by Mr. McCormick at the Circle.

Lobby Girl Advertises Theater

Not all theaters have lobby girls. And if they do, they are not always so attractive and versatile as Miss Helen Ketchum of the Colonial Theater, operated by Miss Helen Ketchum, lobby girl from the Colonial Theater, Chicago, in Joan of Arc costume advertising "Joan the Woman," now running at the Colonial. She is trying to induce some of the "slackers" getting marriage licenses to enlist.

Jones, Linick and Schaefer, prominent Chicago exhibitors.

One of the recent unique publicity stunts pulled off by the eternally vigilant press agent of the house was to get Miss Ketchum mixed up in the affair of the "slackers" who have been getting marriage licenses at the Chicago "marriage bureau" to the tune of several hundred a day.

Helen donned her working clothes and accompanied by a husky sergeant of Major C. R. Vincent's First Illinois Artillery, proceeded to the county building to heckle the "war bridegrooms" and drive them from the altar to the colors.

The stunt was particularly apt as advertising for Joan of Arc in "Joan the Woman," the Colonial offering, was no "slacker." She loved a man, Eric Trent, the gallant Britisher, but she loved her country better. When the latter called she squelched her love and bade her lover adieu.

Unusual Projection Feats at Rialto

During the recent engagement of Sarah Bernhardt's "Mothers of France" at the Rialto in New York an impressively dramatic effect was secured by superimposing on the picture several excerpts from "Joan the Woman," the spectacular feature in which Geraldine Farrar is appearing at the Forty-fourth Street Theater. The famous prima donna, in the role of Joan of Arc, was made to appear as a vision to the stricken mother portrayed by Mme. Bernhardt.

Great masses of French troops, "the steel wall of France," also were shown, as well as a portion of a picture not yet released in which Napoleon appears, reviewing his triumphant troops. The effect was so undeniably thrilling that it brought the people in the audience to their feet time and again, cheering, waving their programs, and applauding with fervor perhaps never before heard at a motion picture entertainment.

So much comment was occasioned by this trick of projection and so many inquiries were made as to how much of what appeared on the screen was in the original picture and how much had been thrown on the screen separately that it may be interesting to exhibitors to learn precisely how the effect was secured. The credit for the innovation goes to S. L. Rothapfel, who was known as an expert on projection long before he made his reputation as an exhibitor. It was accomplished by the use of two machines, one carrying the feature picture and the other a reel of film made up of the selected inserts, with ten feet of blank leader between each subject. Mr. Rothapfel first measured the scenes in the feature on which he wished to superimpose his "visions."

Each bit of film for the visions was cut ten feet shorter than the scene on which it was to be shown, thus allowing five feet for a "fade-on" and five feet in which to "fade off" again. The title sheet in the operator's booth was then "cued" so that the operator running off the feature would know when to be ready with his supplementary machine. The motor on the supplementary machine was kept in operation constantly, so that the moment the first scene for which a vision was scheduled arrived on the screen, the extra film could be started at once.

When it was desired to produce the vision effect, the "douser" on the machine projecting the feature was pulled on half way and the one on the supplementary machine was pulled half way off, thus allowing only half the normal amount of light to come from each machine but producing a total illumination on the screen equal to what one machine would produce at full strength.

At the instant the dousers regulated the light, the film on the secondary machine was put in motion, with the result that two pictures, or in some cases a title and a picture, appeared on the screen at the same time. The result was not unlike a double exposure film, but far more vital and all embracing. Mr. Rothapfel first tried this experiment when he presented "The Girl Philippa" and it invariably called forth a burst of applause, but it was not until he elaborated the idea by using half a dozen added scenes during the projection of "Mothers of France" that the public recognized the impressive quality of the discovery at its full value.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

FRED J. HERRINGTON, national organizer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, is about to start on an organization tour of Indiana and Wisconsin. Besides organizing he intends to arouse enthusiasm for the coming National Convention in Chicago. He will visit Indianapolis, Ft. Wayne and Logansport in Indiana and Milwaukee, Madison and Oshkosh in Wisconsin. From these central points he will branch out to every exhibitor he can possibly reach.

Joseph Wallace, manager of Proctor's Grand Theater of Albany, N. Y., has obtained a permit for an additional exit and stairway from the balcony of the theater into North Pearl street.

Getting in line with other cities that are showing their patriotism, there was recently a mass meeting at the Royal theater of Ashland, Wisconsin, when public utterances backing the president were made.

The new playhouse, the Casino, San Francisco, opened Easter Sunday, April 8, with eight vaudeville acts, a five-reel photoplay and other pictures. This is the largest house devoted to amusement ever built in this city.

Despite the two verdicts rendered during the week in relation to the operating of motion picture theaters in Hudson Falls, New York, the two playhouses, Scenic Temple and Dreamland Theater, will be closed "tight" on Sundays.

At the first annual Rochester Film Frolic, held at Moerlbach Park, Rochester, New York, an all feature program was projected before guests from New York, Buffalo and Syracuse. The Frolic was under the direction of the Pictureplay News Publishing Company.

The Old Lympic Theater at Muskogee, Oklahoma, and one of the landmarks of that city, is to be torn down and replaced by modern buildings. The theater was recently condemned by the city inspection and chief of the fire department as a fire trap.

Indianapolis theaters are making every effort to help secure enlistments in the army and navy. Numerous slides and naval photographs have been secured for exhibition in picture houses by E. F. Clement, lieutenant commander of the Indianapolis naval station.

The Association of Commerce of Grand Rapids, Michigan, is planning to use the moving pictures in order to show the public the industrial, commercial and financial development of the city. The advertising will take the form of cards and short sentences which will tell the whole story.

Among the new buildings erected in Butte, Montana, during the past year probably none offers a more striking appearance than the Rialto block, at the corner of Park and Main streets. This is a six-story building of brick, concrete and terra cotta, the exterior being faced with pure glazed terra cotta, with just enough color to destroy the effect of a large surface of dead white. The building will have six stores, 35 offices and a large moving picture theater capable of seating 1,500 people. The theater will be one of the finest to be found between Chicago and the coast.

At Fort Dodge, Iowa, through the efforts of the Women's Club, from 1 until 2:30 is devoted to "pictures suitable for children" at the Majestic Theater. "Wizard of Oz," "Such a Little Queen" and "Wildfire" have been shown and between 400 and 500 children visit this house every Saturday during this hour.

The Stillman Theater, Cleveland, is showing Lasky's "Joan the Woman," beginning the week of April 16. John P. Clum lectured the week of April 1, followed by the Mme. Sarah Bernhardt film, "Mothers of France." The Stillman Orchestra and Miss Emma Bruce Beck, soprano, supply the musical program.

A suggestion for a special inspection of motion picture houses in Minneapolis under appointment of the city council instead of the Mayor, has been presented to the Mayor's advisory council. The council grants theater licenses and should have a check on theater operation, is the theory back of this argument.

The Theater Louisiana, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, is holding a contest to select a young lady who will take part in the photoplay, "A Modern Maid of Orleans," to be produced in New Orleans. The Crescent Motion Picture Company will produce the play, and the girl who wins the contest will have a professional tryout at the Metro studios.

The Pennsylvania State Constabulary was pictured in the performance of its many activities in the line of rural patrol work last evening at the Regent Theater, as a part of a movement by a state committee represented in Rochester by George Eastman, to promote a bill in New York State for a similar branch of police.

An interesting bill was presented at the Strand Theater, New York, last week. The feature was "Sleeping Fires," with Pauline Frederick as the star. A second film adaptation of the famous O. Henry stories, "Friends at San Rosario" was very successful. "A Spring Ideal," some educational studies and the Strand Topical Review completed the program.

Baby Marie Osborne, in "Told at Twilight," headed a recent bill at the Rialto Theater, New York. Charlie Chaplin, in "The Cure," provided the comedy. The Salisbury expedition to the Spanish Main showed Rex Beach and his fellow explorers and views of ant eaters and other strange Central American fauna. The Rialto orchestra presented its usual fine program.

Automatically locked doors constitute the latest efficiency device in the dark room department of the Signal Film Corporation at Los Angeles.

Orrin Denney, who arranged this perfectly working scheme for "safety first," thereby saved the corporation something like $5,000 a year since the human memory is not proof against lapses, and one lapse a week, as a result of which light let into a darkroom, is sufficient to make up the annual loss.

P. Bush, director of the Beach Theater, Fifty-first street and Harper avenue, Chicago, states his policy by means of several short mottoes printed on the program. Among his selling sentences are these: "Our pictures will cheer, refresh and stir the imagination," and "Our pictures are designed to appeal to intelligent, refined people."

Oklahoma City theater managers are issuing a weekly Theater Bulletin with news of the theaters and films. H. W. Smith is the editor and C. E. Beard is business manager. The Bulletin contains fifteen pages of news and is illustrated with cuts of various film actors. The weekly programs of the theaters are advertised in this manner.

A bill seeking a receiver for the International Amusement Company, of Chicago, controlling five motion picture theaters, pending an accounting of its affairs, has been filed in the Superior Court by Napoleon Picard, a stockholder. The principal defendant is Thomas A. Garibaldi, president of the company, who is charged with mismanagement resulting in a loss of assets.

The Strand Theater of New York announces the following photo-dramatic productions for presentation: Pauline Frederick in "Sleeping Fires"; Marguerite Clark in "The Valentine Girl"; Marie Doro in "Heart's Desire"; Mae Murray in "The Primrose Ring"; George Beban in "The Marcellini Millions"; Pauline Frederick in "Her Better Self," and Fannie Ward in "Unconquered."

The Theatergoers of Nova Scotia will be taxed at rates ranging from one cent on a five-cent ticket to ten cents on a ticket costing more than fifty cents, by the provisions of a bill which has been introduced into the House of Assembly by Premier Murray. The measure stipulates that the tax shall be collected by the owners of theaters by means of tickets issued by the board of censors.

To stimulate recruiting in the United States navy, motion pictures were exhibited in the various motion pictures theaters of Dayton, Ohio, recently for a week, according to word received from the naval office at Cincinnati by Samuel McDonald, local recruiting officer. The plan resembles that carried out by the late Lord Kitchener in England. Many theatrical managers have agreed to exhibit the pictures free of charge.

To obtain money for the soldiers, the two local chapters of the D. A. R. presented at the Alamo Theater, Kansas City, Missouri, April 5, pictures entitled Historic Missouri. The pictures were explained by Mrs. Ethel Massie, state historian. The pictures showed the history of the state of Missouri from 1730 until the present time. A musical program and army motion pictures was also shown to a large and highly appreciative audience.

Official figures regarding the moving picture business in Great Britain have been given out. The total capital invested is $87,000,000. There are 4,500 picture theaters in the country, which had an attendance last year of 1,075,000,000 persons. Fifty per cent of these attending, paid six cents each or less. The number of persons engaged in the business is 100,000. The length of new films used during the previous year was 6,000,000 feet, including 4,800 new subjects. Films imported, mostly from the United States, cost about $6,500,000.

The suffragists in New York City have determined to present their cause on the screen. Mary Pickford will lead their bill and Frank Daniels will conclude it. The film will show an imposing array of pictorial arguments for suffrage, including the work of women in the factories and hospitals in Europe. The changes in industrial life which have taken place in fifty years give women more leisure today than they had fifty years ago, and this will be shown, as well as pictures of suffrage parades and of prominent men who believe in the cause.

A subpoena as a witness in Max Linder's divorce case should bring many patrons to your theater when you show the second Essanay-Max Linder comedy, "Max Wants a Divorce." A clever folder in this style with facsimile court seals has been designed by the Essanay publicity. The outside states that "You are hereby Summoned as a Witness in Divorce Case No. 2864," by the plaintiff's attorney, "O. H. Joy." Within, in legal form, "To R. U. Funfan, greeting. You are hereby summoned to appear before the Court of Laughter at (name and address of theater and date of showing), then and thereby to witness the case of Max Linder in 'Max Wants a Divorce,' and thereafter to testify that this photocomedy gave you the greatest laugh of the year."

The Stanley Theater of Philadelphia carries this "Special Notice" on the cover of its well-printed program:

> The management desires to call attention to the fact that tickets are sold with the express understanding that the purchasers' behavior towards the President of these United States, the Flag and the Military Forces sworn to uphold the Constitution, be respectful at all times. This course of conduct, together with that of rising and standing at attention when the orchestra renders the "Star Spangled Banner" is not only the duty of every patriot, but it should be the pleasure of everyone to show such honor in this great crisis.

Traveling salesmen of the near future will carry moving picture outfits with which to demonstrate and show their goods, C. M. Beer, advertising manager of an Illinois implement company, said, at Dallas, Texas, recently. The motion picture already is being used extensively by the big manufacturing companies to familiarize their salesmen with the products they are selling. He said: Within a few years they will be used by the salesmen to sell to the dealers. The possibility of this method of presenting wares is unlimited, and can be applied to almost any line of business. It is especially adapted to the use of the farm implements business.

The manager of the Idle Hour Theater, Kansas City, Missouri, advertised the showing of the Mutual-Chaplin Special, "The Cure," at his theater by having a group of four men parade around the streets in the district of the theater. The first man carried a big banner on which was written "I am going to give them 'The Cure' at the Idle Hour Theater, 'Charlie Chaplin'." The second man was in a wheeled chair with his head, arm and feet swathed in bandages and the chair was propelled by an imitation Charlie Chaplin in the characteristic costume of baggy trousers, big shoes, derby and cane. Along at the rear hobbled another man on crutches with his head tied up and one foot entirely covered with bandages.

Time to Think About the Meeting

FROM now to the big convention of the Exhibitors' League in Chicago is a matter of less than ninety days. Exhibition space in the Coliseum is going fast. Delegates from an increasing number of states are announcing their intention to be present. Altogether there is strong promise not only of a record-breaking exhibitor attendance but of unusual activity in the political and business side of organization work.

The location of the convention and exposition under one roof will increase the effectiveness of both. Their two-mile separation last year was a disagreeable and wasteful feature of the sixth annual meeting. A new scheme for the distribution of cash prizes to the state branches sending the greatest relative numbers of delegates is another evidence of alert management, and should produce a perceptible increase in attendance.

There seems to be some reason for the belief that the exhibitors are at last awaking to a realization of the importance of organization. They are beginning to see that the trade association is not a social club, nor a contribution to a few organizers, but that its greatest benefits go to its members. Association membership is a purely selfish proposition, after all; and, with all due respect to human nature, the sooner that fact can be made clear, the sooner will such associations reach their proper proportions.

We expect to see a great many new League members next July, and a great many more old ones in attendance and voting. Praiseworthy and enterprising as it may be merely to join, that alone is not enough. Associations need executives to carry out the purposes of their organization, and there is no way to select such executives except by vote of the members. The conduct of the association itself, the activities it shall endorse and those it shall attack, all are to be decided by the members for their own good.

These are things about which it is not too early to think. Every delegate and every visitor should have a clear conception of what his association should be and do. His decision on all these points should be made before he sets foot in the convention hall.

So ninety days is none too much time for preparation. The delegates who know definitely in advance what they want, and who they want, and why, will stand a pretty good chance of getting it.

Co-operating with the Nation

ANNOUNCEMENTS from the publicity departments of producers begin to bristle with patriotism. The dominant picture motifs of the day are loyalty and service. Producers, in the very act of offering their facilities to the government, are proceeding of their own initiative to undertake co-operative work without the formality of government request.

Adaptability is the fundamental virtue of the motion picture. That is why it can never grow old or stale. That is why the picture industry can give so much to the nation and lose nothing itself in the giving.

There are few lines of human effort whose processes and possibilities coordinate so perfectly with any activity of the people. To that which is of immediate and paramount interest the picture instantly responds—and always to the benefit of the cause it espouses.

Since it has suddenly become the duty and privilege of every industry, as well as every individual, to subordinate the effort for private gain to the effort for national welfare, we have cause for thankfulness that our own industry is so well prepared to give real and useful service. The motion picture is a force already trained.

There is constantly growing evidence that the newspaper press is not adequate to convey to the people all the information that the government wishes them to have. The habit of newspaper reading is universal—but it is a habit marked by superficiality. The typical American reader "skims through." Seldom does he read anything that is not presented interestingly or prominently.

There are operating in this country thousands of amateur wireless plants. The government has ordered that all of them be dismantled and put out of service. The newspapers have presented all the facts; yet a great many of the operators do not even know of the order—and will not until the government inspector calls upon them and destroys their apparatus. The President has laid down the law of loyalty and defined disloyalty and its penalties. Yet many who could be of material assistance to the government if they familiarized themselves with those provisions remain in blissful ignorance, incredulous even that the nation is at war.

No one familiar with the psychology of the picture theater's relations to the public can doubt that these things, and others, presented on the screen would have been more widely known than they are. It is impossible to "skim through" a screen showing; it commands attention and gets it. The man who buys a newspaper need not read any of it—or he can confine his attention to the "funny sheet." The man who enters a picture theater has little choice but to watch and absorb what is shown before him.

There has been considerable discussion of a government advertising campaign for the dissemination of information about war bonds, recruiting, propaganda, and all the other multitudinous affairs that now demand quick means of communication between the government and the public.

Such a means of communication is provided most effectively by the screens of our sixteen thousand picture theaters, which are viewed every day by close to ten per cent of our total population. A newspaper circulation of twenty million would be far less effective; for, as already stated, newspaper circulation does not guarantee a reading, and screen presentation does.

In offering the screens of the nation to the government the motion picture industry is taking a tremendous part in the activities of patriotism.

Bonds Instead of Deposits

THE substitution of a bonding system for the deposit plan formerly required of exhibitors by one producing and distributing organization is a progressive step.

The deposit system never had any legitimate reason beyond its guaranty that the exhibitor would be forced to uphold his end of the service contract. It has the unfortunate aspect, on the other hand, of an easy way of financing production. No successful and responsible producer wants to be subjected to the suspicion of financing his operations at his customers' expense. That suspicion, though it may come without real provocation, still is quite natural. It would be unfortunate indeed if its existence should arouse enmity or serious distrust between producer and exhibitor.

The bonding system, while it does not eliminate the distributor's disposition to safeguard his contracts, still is a step in that direction. It is only one more step to placing the exhibitor upon his commercial honor—and we believe that practice will become standard in another year.

Exhibitors today are honorable business men, whatever their class status may have been ten years ago. The fact that recognized bonding companies accept that fact is sufficient evidence that even they will not long be needed.

We have never viewed the deposit system with the feeling of antagonism that it has evoked among many exhibitors; but we have always been confident that natural evolution would shortly eliminate it, and events are bearing out that theory.

"WITHIN THE LAW"

The Screen Version of the Legitimate Drama From Bayard Veiller's Story, Produced by the Greater Vitagraph

The Greater Vitagraph has filmed "Within the Law," in eight parts. It will have its premier performance at the Broadway Theater, New York City, on April 29. The play was one of the greatest successes of recent years.

In producing "Within the Law" every effort was made to follow as closely as possible Bayard Veiller's wonderful story. The screen version not only follows the lines of the novel closely but also follows the legitimate production with the possible exception that some liberties are taken which tend to make the screen version even more gripping than the version of the speaking stage.

Great care was exercised in the selection of the cast for the production. Harry Morey and Alice Joyce are the co-stars and are supported by a company consisting of Adele De Garde, Anders Randolf, Walter McGrail, Eugene O'Rourke, Robert Gaillard, Billie Billings, Miss Bunce, Joe Donohue, Bernard Randall and Bernard Seigel.

Mary Turner, who is portrayed on the screen by Alice Joyce, is a salesgirl in Gilder's department store. She is accused of theft of which Helen Morris (Miss Billie Billings) is guilty and is sent to prison.

Mary begs Gilder (Anders Randolf) for mercy but there is no mercy. She goes to prison swearing vengeance and while in the cell spends her time reading law. While in prison she makes the acquaintance of numerous members of the "under world" who make every effort to get her to join them upon the termination of her sentence. These members of the "under world" are "English Eddie" (Bernard Randall); "Tom Dacey" (Bernard Seigel); and "Aggie Lynch" (Adele De Garde).

Mary at first refuses to join in their criminal schemes but later, unable to obtain work, decides to join with them but is persuaded not to by "Joe Carson" (Harry Morey). Through the persuasions of Carson she decides to remain "Within the Law."

After Carson had persuaded Mary to follow the straight path through a fortunate land speculation she made enough money to rent a handsome apartment. Here she got her first chance for vengeance against Gilder when "Dick Gilder" (Walter McGrail), the son, fell in love with her. Finally he proposes to her. Gilder, Sr., endeavors to bribe her to give up Dick and leave the city. She refuses and Gilder hires Detective Cassidy (Joe Donohue) to make false charges against her and members of the old prison gang. The charges include the killing of "English Eddie" who really is slain by Carson.

Only for Dick the unscrupulous detective would have succeeded. Dick succeeds in checkmating every move of the detective and the murder with which they are charged is cleaned up by the confession of Carson. Eventually Dick and Mary are married.

"Within the Law" as a legitimate stage production, was played at more than five hundred consecutive performances at the Eltinge Theater in New York City. At the same time there were nine companies on the road, eight of them in the United States and the ninth in London. The gross profits from these nine companies aggregated fifteen thousand dollars a week.

Scenes from the picturization of Bayard Veiller's phenomenal stage success "Within the Law," which will open at the Broadway Theater, New York, on April 29, for a two weeks' run. Alice Joyce and Harry Morey play the leads supported by an all-star Vitagraph cast.

Rennold Wolf, the widely known theatrical critic, in discussing "Within the Law" following the celebration of the 500th performance at the Eltinge Theater, New York City, wrote:

"At this writing nine productions of 'Within the Law' are sending to the Home Office profits and royalties. The gross profits from these nine companies are approximately $15,000 weekly.

"The play is unusual because the return engagements are more profitable than its first visit to new territory. The touring companies visit the same cities two and three times during the season. The piece has been a gold mine to the Eltinge Theater and A. H. Woods might keep the house closed for several seasons and yet be able to show a profit on his tenancy."

FIRST WILLIAMSON RELEASE

Extensive Trade Advertising Campaign Announcing the Unusual and Timely Drama, "The Submarine Eye," Has Been Launched

This issue of MOTOGRAPHY carries the initial advertising for the first submarine film attraction that has been independently produced by the Williamson Brothers. The title of this production is, "The Submarine Eye," and the news that it is ready is of the greatest interest to the entire theater-going public, as well as to the trade.

Indeed, the timeliness of the production is going to be one of its assets, and the foresightedness of its enthusiastic young producers, George and Ernest Williamson, is to be highly commended.

Embarked upon virgin field, without any competition whatsoever, and relying solely upon the resources of their own organization, the Williamson Brothers have been strongly influenced by the great World War in the preparation of this masterly drama; taken partly on land and principally beneath the water. The inverted periscope, from which the story gets its name, points the way to effectual preparedness against skulking submarines and deadly mines, and could easily be adapted to Uncle Sam's defensive warfare.

All of the underwater scenes in, "The Submarine Eye," were taken in previously charted locations among the islands of the West Indies. It required nearly a year to produce, and a fortune was spent in the production. After the picture had been brought North, another small fortune was spent to further enhance its value and timeliness.

A wonderful musical score has been prepared. It is adapted to any number of instruments from piano to an augmented orchestra of sixty pieces. The score provides two themes, one accentuating the love story and the other the deep-sea tragedy. These were especially composed by M. L. Lake, who descended through the Williamson tube to the photographic chamber in the clear waters of the West Indies, for the express purpose of obtaining his inspiration for this unusual music.

In comparison with motion pictures of the "Williamson Brothers Submarine Expedition," and "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," it has been estimated that the earning capacity of, "The Submarine Eye," in the world's market, will not fall short of the two million dollar mark. As both of the earlier pictures have brought in returns exceeding five hundred thousand dollars, this is not an unreasonable valuation.

Marvelous as are the underwater effects, they have not been dragged in by the heels nor allowed to overshadow the excellent continuity of the romantic love story which leads up to a dramatic climax, staged at the bottom of the sea. An excellent cast of motion picture favorites including Barbara Tennant, Chester Barnett, Lillian Cook and Eric Mayne was taken to the West Indies under the supervision of J. Ernest Williamson. The direction was in the hands of Winthrop Kelley with Harold Sintzenich behind the camera.

As to the marketing plans of the Williamson Brothers for this, their latest achievement, in their own exclusive field of submarine photoplays, nothing definite has been given out, but it is understood that "The Submarine Eye" will be exploited in the leading cities of the world simultaneously with its establishment in the principal cities of the United States, and that the Williamson Brothers assure absolute protection to every individual or firm that contracts for the future exploitation of their third sub-sea attraction, by reason of their policy of releasing subsequent pictures at least six months apart.

"The Crisis" Sold

The rights for the state of Illinois for "The Crisis" have just been sold by Harry A. Sherman to an association of Milwaukee business men for a cash price, said to be nearly double the figure at which the Selig photoplay, based on Winston Churchill's novel, was held when Mr. Sherman first began his sensational campaign for the disposal of this famous film.

"The Crisis" is to be staged in elaborate style in a Chicago loop theater during the first weeks in May, and a run extending through the summer is planned. A canvas of the Chicago situation revealed the fact that "The Crisis" is more in demand by both the theaters and the public than any film in the market. The motion picture departments of the various daily newspapers reported that not a day passes without two or three telephone inquiries as to when "The Crisis" is to be put on in Chicago, and two of the largest of the papers told the inquirers that the demands for "The Crisis" exceeded the demands for all other films combined. Then, there are on file in Mr. Sherman's Chicago office, requests from twenty-three of the largest of Chicago's outlying houses for first runs of the film after the finish of a "loop" engagement.

Fatty's New Play

"The Butcher Boy," the first two-reeler made by Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle for Paramount and which will be released April 23 on the open market basis, promises to be the most hilarious comedy in which the rotund screen star has yet appeared.

Reports from the studio, where the picture has been in the making since Mr. Arbuckle's arrival from his triumphant transcontinental journey, indicate that, inoculated with the inspiration of new business affiliations, "Fatty" has out-Arbuckled himself.

The combination of Joseph M. Schenck, his business manager, and "Fatty" Arbuckle gives every assurance of being one of the most important effected in the film industry in a long time, and one that portends much joy for fans.

COMING MUTUALS

Marjorie Rambeau and Jackie Saunders in Unusual Productions Top Mutual Schedule for Week of April 23.

Marjorie Rambeau in "The Debt," a Powell-Mutual production in five parts, portrays a curious role of a woman in an international romance, beloved by a husband, beset by a suitor, tangled in obligations and saved by tragedy.

The exhibitor will find a strong angle for advertising in this picture's expose of "the mother-in-law" problem, its swiftly graphic treatment of a rapidly shifting plot, involving big life questions: "What is the refuge of a wife falsely accused?", "Can illicit love be honorable?", "When does adventuring virtue cross the line to sin?"

The story, while carrying considerable foreign locale is strongly American in character and treatment. Photographically it presents some striking effects in controlled lighting and there are a number of big sets of scenic splendor.

The cast supporting Miss Rambeau includes a number of actors of special note among them: T. Jerome Lawlor, Agnes Eyre, Anne Sutherland, who plays the "mother-in-law," Robert Elliott and Henry Warwick. The picture was directed by Frank Powell and carries the characteristic Powell touches.

Jackie Saunders appears in "The Wildcat," the second of her series for Mutual. This might be called a modern version of "The Taming of the Shrew." Play up the fact that Jackie is again seen in one of her hoydenish roles. This is a comedy-drama with many unusual situations which will bring hearty laughs from all ages in the audience.

"Inside Treachery" is the title of the third chapter of the new Signal-Mutual serial, "The Railroad Raiders," in which Helen Holmes is featured. Have you tried to arouse the interest of all the railroad employes in your town in this serial, which is a real railroad story? It would be wise to send them a special invitation to attend your house on the night "The Railroad Raiders" is shown.

"Shorty Unearths a Tartar," is the title of the fifteenth story of "The Adventures of Shorty Hamilton" scheduled for release on April 23. Arouse interest in the film by such catchlines as: "An Egyptian mummy comes to life and makes Shorty Hamilton her slave." "A crocodile saves a man's life." "Come and see the Welsh rarebit dream of Shorty Hamilton."

On April 27 comes the sixth of the "Jimmie Dale Alias the Grey Seal" stories entitled "Below the Deadline." In this story the Grey Seal comes to the rescue of an old pushcart man who is being robbed of all his savings.

Three Good Laughs

The Strand Comedy for April 25 is "And In Walked Uncle." Billie Rhodes is the featured comedienne in the story which is made up of three love themes.

The Cub Comedy, "The Ransom," in which George Ovey furnishes most of the laughs, will be ready on April 26.

"A Plaster Feud," the Vogue contribution to the funmakers, scheduled for April 28, features Paddy McQuire, assisted by Rena Rogers, John Oaker, Larry Bowes and Harry Huckins.

Topicals Reflect Spirit of the Times

The three one-reel Mutual-Gaumont releases are typical of the spirit of times. The first reel for the week, "Mutual Tours Around the World," released April 24, contains pictures of Moscow, the "holy city" of Russia where the Czars are crowned; Sarajevo, the Bosnian capital, where the present war started; and Brest, the most western fortified seaport of France.

These pictures are particularly timely, Moscow because of the revolt in Russia; Sarajevo because of our own entrance into the European conflict; and Brest, because it may become a United States naval base for operations on the other side of the ocean.

The Mutual Weekly, April 25, pictures all the most important phases of war activity.

"Reel Life," issued April 26, has pictures of "A Tabloid Bungalow," "Red Clay Workers of Barbadoes," "An Altiscope Rifle for Trench Warfare," "Cargo Boats of Tomorrow," an animated view of the future "Metal Spinning," and "Native Industries of the Senegalese in the Soudan."

"Woman and the Beast" Clean

"Our initial state right production, 'The Woman and the Beast' is melodramatic, but clean," states a representative of the Graphic Features, Room 401, 729 Seventh avenue, New York. "We will even concede that it is in the class of so-called sensational films, but there is nothing in it that anybody would be ashamed to see; in fact, it simply deals with a pacifist who showed he could be bold in time of need. It is not a political story, as there will undoubtedly be a flood of political stories dealing with pacifists, but our pacifist is a peace-at-any-price husband who has a war-like wife, and the moral is pointed without the slightest reference to the present political situation of the United States.

"The absolute non-political character of the story can be best appreciated by a screen inspection. Such will prove that our portrayal of the right kind of pacifist contains nothing political and nothing unclean."

Marie Shotwell, who is the star of the feature, made her first picture hit in "The Witching Hour." Then came a triumph in "Enlighten Thy Daughter" and just prior to her engagement in "The Woman and the Beast," a stellar role in Edward Warren's inimitable "Warfare of the Flesh."

Carlyle Blackwell in "The Waster"

What may appropriately be termed a typical World-Pictures cast will appear in a forthcoming Brady-Made production titled "The Waster." Besides Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge, this organization includes Muriel Ostriche, Henrietta Simpson, Johnny Hines, Robert Broderick and Victor Kennard—the last mentioned a famous football star who is making his first appearance upon the screen. Mr. Brady is convinced that he has uncovered a prize in this good-looking young athlete.

Childers Picture Completed

"The Auction of Virtue," the U. S. Amusement Corporation production starring Naomi Childers, has just been completed by Herbert Blache. It is the opinion of officials and the director that this is by far the best picture so far turned out by this studio. It will be released on Art Dramas program.

Exhibitor Holds Laugh Contest

J. H. Michel, manager of the Academy Theater, Buffalo, N. Y., introduced a novelty in his regular weekly entertainment by instituting a photoplay laugh contest at his theater.

Fifteen reels of comedy featuring practically all of the screen comedians of today were shown. The honors of winning the contest were to be awarded to the comedian who provoked the heartiest laughter and received the loudest applause.

Charlie Chaplin in "Easy Street" simply ran away with the show, registering more laughs and applause than the balance of the entire program.

Mr. Michael is quoted as remarking: "I am frank in saying that in all instances in showing Chaplin comedies my experience has been that we are always in for record breaking business."

State Rights on "The Black Stork"

The Sheriott Pictures Corporation has decided to state right "The Black Stork," the picture featuring Dr. H. J. Haiselden, the Chicago physician who allowed a terribly malformed baby to die rather than have it bear the curse of the "Black Stork" through life, from its New York office at 218 West Forty-second street.

M. E. Mazur, general manager of the Sheriott Pictures Corporation, in discussing the picture—which opened recently at the La Salle theater, Chicago, to capacity houses—said that "The Black stork" was not a propaganda picture, but rather a living document calculated to teach as great a lesson as that preached in the churches—moral cleanliness.

Mr. Mazur stated that it was not and is not the intention of the Sheriott Pictures Corporation to exploit pictures which do not have in themselves the appeal to the general public from the amusement standpoint, and if, in addition, a moral lesson was to be taught, that was secondary to the business of the corporation, which is the releasing of pictures which shall produce entertainment for the multitude. Dilating further upon the subject, he said "The Black Stork" takes as its basic principle the fact that malformations, both physical, moral and mental should not form a part of human existence. It is but incidental to the picture that a great moral lesson is taught, but fundamentally the picture has such a great appeal from a dramatic standpoint that it stands out pre-eminently above all the great propaganda pictures that have been released since the history of motion pictures had its inception.

Miss Rambeau Completes Production

Marjorie Rambeau has completed "The Mirror," the fourth of her productions for Mutual which are being filmed at the Frank Powell studios under the direction of Frank Powell.

"The Mirror" is an original story by Clara S. Beranger and deals with theatrical life. Many of the scenes are taken in the restaurants and cafes along Broadway and the atmosphere is typical of that famous thoroughfare.

The cast surrounding Miss Rambeau is practically the same as that which appeared with her in "The Greater Woman," "Motherhood," and "The Debt," including Robert Elliott, Paul Everton, Irene Warfield, T. Jerome Lawlor, Aubrey Beattie, Agnes Eyre and Frank Ford.

Bioscope "ScreeNews" Appears

J. E. Willis, president and general manager of The American Bioscope Company, announces that within the next two weeks that concern will have ready for release a diversified subject of the single reel class. It will be known as the "ScreeNews Magazine" and will carry departments covering educational, scientific, fashion, travelog, comic and patriotic subjects.

With J. E. Willis as editor-in-chief, C. E. Eckels, editing director, V. R. Carlson and Roy Carni, camereporters, and the plant organization of cartoonists and artists, this new American Bioscope idea should be a winner.

William Russell's Next Play

"Shackles of Truth" is the title of the next vehicle chosen for William Russell, the Mutual-American star. This story was written by Julius Grinnell Purthmann, who is also the author of the last two Russell productions "High-play" and "The Frame-up."

In this picture William Russell appears as a young lawyer who is willing to sacrifice his own career to save the honor of his father and shield his mother.

Francella Billington plays opposite Mr. Russell. Others in the cast include Alfred Vosburg, Adda Gleason, George Ahern, Lucille Ward and Frederick Vroom.

Horace ("Kewpie") Morgan is known as the champion heavyweight at Universal City. He tips the scale at 340 pounds and was recently cast to play an important part in Henry McRae's production, "Dropped from the Clouds."

The dance hall scene from "The Guilty Party" is on the left and the other scene is from "Friends in San Rosario." Both are filmed from the stories by the popular O. Henry and are Broadway Star releases on the General program.

Open Booking for Goldwyn Productions

STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT GOLDFISH—OTHER NEWS GOLDWYN

A new study of the unique Goldwyn star, Mae Marsh.

EXHIBITORS will secure all the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation productions on the "open booking" plan.

This statement is issued by Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, who says:

For a second time in a fortnight the exhibitors themselves have dictated a Goldwyn policy. Our first adherence to exhibitor advice was in deciding to own and operate Goldwyn's own branches throughout the country.

Now we decide in favor of open bookings because the exhibitors themselves prefer it. We feel that we have a correct understanding and appreciation of the exhibitors' resentment over being compelled to take many pictures they do not want for the sake of obtaining the few popular stars in a group that they can play at a profit.

Our first steps in the formation of the Goldwyn organization brought to us five stars of a great popularity and individual drawing power. We are certain that each one of these stars can stand alone and have enormous exhibitor appeal.

Being firmly determined to produce only quality pictures of sustained excellence we intend to treat our productions as independent units and so offer them to exhibitors.

We now announce for the first time that we will release a minimum of twenty-six pictures a year. The value to exhibitors of our entry into the field is obvious.

Until now the problem confronting all exhibitors desiring to book their theaters for fifty-two weeks independent of any contract service has been the volume of supply of high-grade productions.

Goldwyn recognizes that there are many excellent pictures being made by other producers operating in the open market, but the trouble has been that there were not enough of them to keep first-class theaters provided with an all-the-year-round supply.

Our solution of the exhibitor problem is found in the fact that we guarantee him at least half of his annual picture requirements. He can, with comparative ease, gather the other good pictures he demands to fill out his schedule.

Aside from the artistic and quality elements which we emphasize in our productions by noted authors and played by famous stars, we are resorting to the best mercantile method in our salesmanship, and that is:

Exhibitors will have the opportunity to see Goldwyn productions well in advance of release and decide, after seeing them, whether they wish to rent them for their theaters. It is, of course, the basic principle of salesmanship in almost all other industries—the principle of selling over the counter to the customer something the customer has seen at close range and examined.

I am confident that the Goldwyn productions will stand up under this close-range test of their values.

You Name This Story

Maxine Elliott's second picture, now being directed by Arthur Hopkins, contains all of the elements of a first class riddle and even when described it will set more people than ever to guessing.

Miss Elliott has an unusual character to portray. She plays a woman who has been the confidant of kings and commoners, has ruled empires, or has sent them crashing to destruction. She has followed in the wake of marching armies. She has sat at the elbows of victorious generals. She has been the inspiration of famous poets and novelists, and has claimed youth, middle age and old age as her own, and once, was written down in the world's permanent history, to excite compassion and charity in the human heart forever.

In this unusual film Miss Elliott's features possess the beauty and sorrow of a Madonna. Pictorially, the film makes a tremendous demand upon your sympathies, and her splendid statue and majesty make an irresistible appeal.

The name of the author is not given by the publicity agent.

French Welcome U. S.—Says Mary Garden

Mary Garden sends her own story of France's demonstration as the United States entered the war. She says, "For a week I have been witnessing sights that I never believed could have happened, even in volatile France. I have been privileged to watch the French people's demonstration in behalf of the United States, their new ally."

Maxine Elliott, noted beauty, now working in Goldwyn productions.

Miss Garden says that the "Star Spangled Banner" is played on every occasion, and "Dixie" challenges the Parisian ear almost as quickly as it does that of the good Yankees in America.

When the United States Senate, long past midnight, passed the war resolution at Washington, Paris thrilled instantly. The radio message came in a few minutes and France realized that her sister republic had cast the die in behalf of human liberty.

Miss Garden continues: "In addition to the work attendant upon relief my greatest pleasure is found in singing to the wounded soldiers—and there are still many wounded coming into Paris. On several occasions since my return here I have intended the writing of an odd work that many women, among them myself, have commissioned themselves to do. The work we have undertaken is to entertain the men home on furlongs, not the officers, but the so-called common soldiers. I have five of these in my home now and will have as many more tomorrow. They are brave and stoical, but utterly and absolutely alone. They do not know whether their wives and children are alive or not. Their families have been herded like cattle and driven into an enemy country to work at whatever tasks their captors designate."

Charles Dalton, a dramatic actor of tremendous skill and capacity, has one of the most important male roles in Goldwyn's first two Maxine Elliott productions. In signing, Mr. Dalton Goldwyn has brought one of the most distinguished and capable players on the American stage to the screen.

Mr. Dalton made his first appearance in this country in "The Prodigal Daughter." Before coming from England he had been in his native land since 1883, and during this time had appeared with many of the notables of the English stage.

Leaving America in 1894 he returned in 1896 to play Marcus Superbus in "The Sign of the Cross." He played this part without interruption for five years. Later he joined Nance O'Neil and was her leading man in, "Magda." This distinguished pair of artists are now reunited again, after an interval of years, in "The Wanderer." His other plays with Miss O'Neil were, "Judith of Bethalia," the "Fires of St. John," "Elizabeth Queen of England," "Hedda Gabler," "The Straight Road" and many others.

Mr. Dalton brings to the screen a magnificent training, a note of dramatic authority and sureness, and a rugged handsomeness that will all contribute to his immediate popularity.

Mae Marsh Leases "Zoo"

Mae Marsh appears in a bird store in her second Goldwyn picture. The realism of the motion picture has reached that point where if a bird store, a steel mill, or a locomotive is needed, the technical director of the picture company will go out and find them.

A New York bird store was transported to Ft. Lee, and set up in the Goldwyn plant. But besides birds there are monkeys, puppies, a juvenile bear and various other pets. The snakes and reptiles were resolutely barred by Miss Marsh, and when you see her playing in the store, attired in overalls there will be no snake to spoil the picture.

Not all of the pets wish to return to New York. A certain monkey has developed a deep sense of affection for Mae Marsh and has retreated to the rafters of the studio, and refuses to return to his cage, even though efforts have been made to starve him into submission. The remarkable part of this affair is that the monkey is a married monkey, and his wife, though showing no particular affection for Miss Marsh, has remained in the rafters with her mate.

So there you are—and there they are. Miss Marsh must either buy both monkeys—or let both monkeys return, and she refuses to separate the couple, and also refuses to buy two monkeys. Meanwhile Mr. and Mrs. Monkey are sitting aloft, in the rafters, and extending their fast even beyond the Lenten season.

Patriotic Universal Films

Never before in the history of our country has there been a period when the patriotic fervor was at such a high pitch as it is at the present day. Preparedness is the topic discussed in all parts of the country and which is uppermost in the minds of all. Every loyal person is doing his best to further patriotism. In the film industry the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is taking the lead among producers in presenting to the public vivid pictorial documents, which teach the ideal that our country comes first above all things.

First among the series of Universal preparedness releases is "Uncle Sam at Work," a complete motion picture of all branches of our government, based upon the celebrated book of Frederick J. Haskin's, "The American Government." It shows the entire working of the army and navy and is presented in eleven episodes.

The Universal serial, "Liberty," in twenty episodes, which has proved one of the most successful and profitable motion picture serials ever released, in which Marie Walcamp is the featured star, is another preparedness motion picture which is taking the country by storm. It realistically portrays our recent troubles along the Mexican border.

J. Stuart Blackton, Jr., Enlists

J. Stuart Blackton, Jr., oldest son of the director-general of Vitagraph and producer of the big national defense film, "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," has enlisted. Young Blackton, who is 21 and a college boy, joined the 13th Coast Artillery Command, at its Brooklyn armory. Young Blackton had been spending the last two weeks at the Vitagraph studio getting up a patriotic film specially designed to stimulate recruiting, called "Preparedness." It is planned to show this film at recruiting rallies throughout the country.

Appreciates Motography

Motography, Chicago:

I take this opportunity to express my appreciation of its department, "What the Picture Did For Me," in particular.

I have several times had occasion to speak to people about this department as it frequently contains illuminating and pertinent comments on the pictures that can be read with profit by all producers desiring to keep in touch with the demands of the business.—Arthur Butler Graham, 165 Broadway, New York City.

BIG CHICAGO PRODUCTION

Sunshine Film Corporation and American Standard on Big Feature—Richard C. Travers and Wm. N. Buckley Directing

What may be considered one of the "big deals" of Chicago's film history in the making has recently been consummated between K. M. Scoville, general manager of the Sunshine Film Corporation, and M. G. Watkins, general manager of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, both of Chicago, and strong believers in that city as a motion picture producing and distributing center. The Sunshine Company is favorably known through its weekly releases on the American Standard Program.

The production, which is now in the making, but as yet without title as far as the public is concerned, deals with the subject of eugenic marriage, but, while embracing it, is not a propaganda.

The story, written by Samuel Quinn, president of the American Standard, was adapted for the screen by Mildred Considine, who is credited with several multiple-reel screen successes. It was considered of such magnitude that the two companies decided to join hands in its making and distribution. The interior scenes are being made in the Rothaker studios. Entire supervision of this production is in the hands of Mr. Scoville, who has had considerable experience in the executive direction of work of this character.

This unnamed production promises to be one of the first magnitude because of the many important details being brought into its making. Richard C. Travers, prominently known on the screen through his five years connection with the Essanay Company, spent five weeks in New York City on research work preparatory to production. At the same time his co-director in the venture carried on a similar work in Chicago.

Through the active work of these two men, access to several institutions of national prominence has been gained, as the finished picture will show.

Then, too, the experience Mr. Travers has had in the medical profession is serving him now in great stead. He is a graduate physician and did most of his interne work in the slums. Furthermore, he knows conditions surrounding cases parallel to that forming the basis of this production.

The producers are to be complimented for securing so capable a team of directors, together with the co-operation of many prominent physicians, including some from the Chicago City Health Department. Mr. Buckley will be remembered through his active work with D. W. Griffith, as assistant director on "The Escape," produced in 1914, and a like position he held with Famous Players in the production of "Esmeralda," "Mistress Nell," "Dawn of a Tomorrow" and "Cinderella."

The finished production, title of which is to be announced next week, will be handled entirely on the territorial rights basis by the American Standard, under the direction of Mr. Watkins, who is personally known to most of the states rights men throughout the country. Release will be made early in May. A rapid sale of the entire world's rights is predicted because of the fact that two territories have already been arranged for by buyers, purely on the strength of the story and the showing, on the screen to them of a number of completed scenes. Embodied in the production are scenes from Chicago's leading loop cabaret spots.

The making and exploiting of this big feature by these two Chicago companies, each of which are enjoying a rapid growth, will add to Chicago's position as a producing and distributing center.

Wallace MacDonald with Vitagraph

Wallace MacDonald, popular juvenile, with a host of friends at the Pacific Coast photoplay studios and clubs, has completed his engagement with the Famous Players, New York, and is now in the midst of his first co-starring vehicle, an O. Henry story entitled "Vanity and Some Sables," being produced at the Flatbush studios of the Vitagraph Company.

J. Edward Hungerford has been engaged as scenario editor for the Pollard Picture Plays Company, and will hereafter write the photodramas in which Margarita Fischer is starred. "The Devil's Assistant," the last Mutual release in which Miss Fischer was featured, came from the pen of Mr. Hungerford.

EXHIBITORS' CONVENTION

Organizations Appointing Delegates to Big Chicago Show, July 14 to 22—Remarkable Exposition Committee of Prominent Film Men

The exhibitors all over the country are turning their attention toward the coming National Exposition and Convention to be held by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America at the Coliseum, Chicago, July 14 to 22.

The news comes of exhibitors' organizations in several states holding meetings to elect delegates for the seventh big annual show.

Ludwig Schindler, the exposition director, has started all of the machinery of the exposition going early and prospects are splendid for a bigger and better show than the picture industry has ever before seen. Manufacturers, supply men and others who take space in the Coliseum will benefit more than ever this year, because of the fact that the convention is to be held in the same building, which will mean that the exposition will be visited by every man who attends the convention and that the exhibits will be seen not once, but several times by each person.

It is not too early now to begin laying plans to attend the big annual affair of the industry between July 14 and 22. It will be many times worth the expense to every film man who has any desire to keep up with the procession. Information regarding the exposition can be had through the headquarters at 1416 Masonic Temple, Chicago.

The following prominent film men have been appointed on the exposition committee:

Joseph Hopp, Wm. E. Heaney, Alfred Hamburger, Robt. R. Levy, Geo. D. Hopkinson, John H. Frundt, Max Schwartz, M. S. Johnson, M. S. Ludick, Schaefer Bros., Chas. Schaefer, Chicago Cinematograph Co., Kedzie Amusement Co., Boston Theater Co., Madison St. Theater Corp., John J. Hodgson, Automatic Amusement Co., I. E. Berkson, M. and S. Katz, H. C. Miller, John Haag, Balaban Bros., Paul Sittner, H. Schoenstadt, Verne R. Langdon, Andrew Karzas, John Bobeng, W. D. Burford, S. H. Selig, Samuel Levin, Louis Zahler, H. E. Newell, Thurn & Both, F. H. Franke, Mrs. M. McFadden, Miss Anna Kesner, Chas. Stuart, Fred Hartmann, H. A. Hill, Theo. C. Eichenbaum, Jacob Cooper, Samuel Gold, Chas. Abrams.

Chicago Reel Fellows Active

The Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago is planning to hold a big beef steak dinner at its next meeting, which will be on April 27. This affair will be open to film men in general and promises to be an enthusiastic affair. There will be a special program arranged for the occasion.

At the last meeting of the club on April 13, secretary A. E. Hamburg resigned on account of pressure of other duties, and Jack Haag, of the Band Box Theater, was appointed to take his place. There is no doubt in regard to the ability of Mr. Haag to fill the secretary job in an efficient manner. He is already issuing a series of letters to film men regarding the club.

A committee on club new by-laws has been appointed, consisting of Harry Miller, N. J. Watkins, Jack Haag and E. Schwartz.

Black with Ethel Barrymore

Prominent in the support of Ethel Barrymore in her forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "The Greatest Power," is W. W. Black, who has the part of Duncan. "Bill" Black has appeared in any number of Metro productions, for the most part at the Popular Plays and Players studio. He has been in many Famous Players, Fox and Edison pictures, and before that was a favorite figure in musical comedy. He sang in "Little Nemo," "Naughty Marietta," "The Candy Shop," "King Dodo," and others, excelling in bluff Western parts. "Bill" Black is the original "bad man from the Bad Lands," but in Miss Barrymore's photodrama he has entirely reformed.

Enid Bennett in "Happiness"

End Bennett, the lately-discovered star of the Ince-Triangle forces, will make her next appearance on the screen, when she is presented by Thomas H. Ince in a new Triangle-Kay Bee comedy-drama by C. Gardner Sullivan, entitled "Happiness," This vehicle constitutes her third performance before the camera since Ince recruited her from the speaking stage several months ago, and it is said to be her supreme achievement. "Happiness" tells about a sad little heiress and a red-blooded collegian, who opened the portals of her palatial prison and smashed the fetters that bound her to unhappiness. Its scenes are laid in a fashionable boarding school, where "Doris Wingate," the heiress portrayed by Miss Bennett, is sent, and where her amusing romance with a sterling young man from New England is born. Beginning with Miss Bennett's introductory scene, the play is replete with delightful humor and rare philosophy.

Exciting Scene in "The Snarl"

What is known as the most dangerous street intersection in Southern California served as the setting for a scene in "The Snarl," the Triangle-Kay Bee play by Leona Hutton and Lambert Hillyer, in which Thomas H. Ince presents Bessie Barriscale as star. It is the crossing at Sixth and Alvardo streets, Los Angeles, and was selected by Raymond B. West because it actually presents danger to the motorist.

The scene depicts an accident, in which Miss Barriscale, as an opera singer about to make her debut, is injured by a passing machine as she attempts to wend her way through the traffic. In the manuscript the instructions were simply to pick out "any busy corner," but this did not suit West. He insisted upon staging the thrilling scene at a realistic spot.

Warren Production Shown

Edward Warren gave a special trade show of "The Warfare of the Flesh," the first of a series of big state right attractions to be released under his own trademark, at the Broadway Theater, New York, on April 19. This is the production that has been heralded for the last four weeks and because it marks Mr. Warren's debut as a manufacturer-producer-director, has created considerable interest in the trade. It has been in preparation twelve weeks. The staging, it is said, is very elaborate and the cast is one of the most distinguished ever assembled for a single feature.

Along about May 1 Mr. Warren will start on his second attraction. He has just signed a long lease on the Life-Photo Studios, where so many William Fox attractions have been staged.

A five-reel feature entitled, "Back to the Primitive," has been started by Director Reynolds and his Universal Company.

Cornering the Popularity Market

BY WALTER E. GREENE

President of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation

WHEN the grocer orders his stock for the coming season his first care is to obtain articles that are in the greatest demand by his customers; commodities that are most popular among the patrons of his store. Everyone appreciates the fact that he would be foolish to stock up a supply of goods that are unknown and endeavor to create a demand for them when he could easily sell articles that are already established in the minds of his patrons.

An so with the exhibitor. In planning his stock entertainment, why should he obtain a picture for which he will have to create a market, when he can get a picture that is in great demand by his patrons before he even announces it? The exhibitor who books some other picture on a day when he could show a D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks or George M. Cohan subject is much the same as the grocer who does not have on his shelves articles that are in demand by his customers.

Every Picture Standard

Every photoplay that is released through the Artcraft Pictures Corporation is an established article; a commodity of entertainment that the people really want. As a result of its affiliations with the biggest names in the industry, Artcraft is in a position to offer the exhibitor a picture for which it is unnecessary to create a demand. The exhibitor does not have to say who, for instance, D. W. Griffith is. Every person knows that he is the greatest genius the motion picture has ever known.

Nor does he have to go into details as regards Douglas Fairbanks. Never has a male star taken such a hold upon the public as the inimitable "Doug" who, although widely impersonated, is daily adding to his wonderful popularity among the vast army of motion picture patrons regardless of race, age, creed or belief.

The same applies to "America's Sweetheart." And as for George M., there never has been one before him and there never will be one after him. George M. Cohan on the screen is as unique a figure as he is on the stage, and his instantaneous success as a motion picture actor is recognized by everyone in and out of the trade who has seen his work before the camera. Collectively these names represent the greatest coalition of individuals of supreme popularity, that something which brings the shekels to the box-office window.

Thus Artcraft is easily the most important factor in this gigantic enterprise so far as controlling the popularity market is concerned. Real popularity such as is evidenced in the case of any of these big names can only be gained through unusual talents and merit. Hence it is safe to say that Artcraft is in a class by itself as regards the greatest collection of the best the screen has to offer.

Making Film History

As an instance, the greatest picture that Mary Pickford has ever appeared in, "A Poor Little Rich Girl," was recently released by Artcraft. Never in the history of the motion picture has such reports been received on a photoplay from houses large and small. This picture does not merely involve the matter of breaking house-records. It is bringing about that which everyone in the industry wants to see, namely, longer runs. Exhibitors who have booked this film have immediately arranged for extended runs. If a demand for Mary Pickford pictures had to be created it would be many years before such a volume of requests for extended showings evidenced themselves and Artcraft would mean no more than any other film organization.

In Miss Pickford's newest picture for Artcraft, "A Romance of the Redwoods," this wonderful artist is associated with Cecil B. De Mille, creator of "Joan the Woman." The combination of Pickford and De Mille, the famous director-in-chief, is but another step toward the carrying out of our policy of the biggest and the best in films. This association means a greater satisfying of the public demand than ever. When the public thinks of rubber heels it thinks of O'Sullivan's, when it wants soda crackers, it asks for Uneeda Biscuits and when it thinks of the best in motion pictures it pictures the very persons who are affiliated with Artcraft.

Man on Cover in "Single Code"

The double standard of morality which Jane Addams denounces as "the greatest curse of Christendom" is vigorously attacked in "The Single Code," a startling five-reel morality drama, product of the David Horsley studio, starring Crane Wilbur, with Florence Printy as the wife. This play is the second of a series of five Mutual-Horsley features. It will be released on April 16 by the Mutual Film Corporation.

The world problem has been more widely discussed in the editorial columns of American newspapers and in the pages of American magazines than any other before the public within the last ten years, and sentiment with regard to the equalizing of moral responsibility as between the sexes—compelling the man to share equally with the woman social ignominy that results from offense against the moral code, has undergone a vital change within the period named.

The characterization is one that brings out in striking fashion society's careless acceptance of the male rounder as a matrimonial eligible—the keen competition between ambitious mothers of marriageable daughters to throw them into the arms of men whose position and wealth assure their wives social and financial positions.

New Triangle Girl

Winifred Allen, who will be co-featured with Jack Devereaux in "The Man Who Made Good," second Triangle picture to be completed at the new Yonkers studio, has aroused the interest of Allan Dwan by her clever work, and it is said that she will be retained for other roles under Dwan's personal supervision.

Miss Allen was born in New Rochelle and after graduating from the local public schools, studied for some time at the Art Students' League. Her father was a New Englander and her mother Irish, but Winifred proudly insists that she is all Celt without a trace of the cold Puritanic blood of her paternal ancestors. Both of her parents died while she was still in school, and she and her sister took a studio together in New York. Work was now a stern necessity and Winifred sought an engagement as a motion picture actress. Before joining the Triangle forces, she had played opposite William Elliott in "When We Were Twenty-One," with Jack Pickford in "Seventeen" and with Lou Tellegen in "The Long Trail."

Winifred Allen is only 4 feet, 11 inches in height. She is a brunette of vivid coloring and sparkling hazel eyes as you can guess from the picture over there.

Chicago Exhibitors Meet

The Chicago local branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America are still hot and heavy after the evils of the deposit system.

At its meeting on April 13 the members of the league delegated still more powers to its committee on deposits and the fight will be continued until some definite results are accomplished. This, it is expected, will be soon.

President Joseph Hopp presided at the meeting in his usual efficient manner and some matters of minor importance were discussed. The members are all behind the coming convention to be held in Chicago July 14 to 21 and the affair promises to be a whopper as a result of the efforts of the convention committees and Manager Ludwig Schindler working in close co-operation with the league itself.

Lee A. Ochs, national president of the M. P. E. L., was present at the meeting and told some of his experiences on his recent western trip.

"The Black Stork" in Chicago

"The Black Stork," starring Dr. Harry J. Haiselden, and vividly setting forth in pictorial dramatic form the theories of the famous Chicago surgeon, has been successfully launched in Chicago, Cleveland and Cincinnati, in all of which cities it is in the second week of its runs. Dr. Haiselden addressed the audiences in both Cleveland and Cincinnati at the launching of the photoplay. At the LaSalle Theater, in his home city of Chicago, the surgeon has delivered several ten minute addresses, telling of the abuses he is seeking to correct, and showing how tainted heredity will affect the nation in the present war crisis.

This ostrich thinks it's a bird of paradise—and no wonder. It's supporting Olive Thomas, the new Ince Triangle star, formerly in the Follies. In the center is Bill Hart in "The Desert Man," and in the circle, Winnifred Allen, told about in the story above.

Industry's Attorneys Meet

The attorneys representing many important film companies, who have been recommended for appointment as members of the new legal and legislative committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, met at the City Club yesterday for the purpose of perfecting an organization and the consideration of several matters which had been referred to the committee.

Nathan Vidaver, counsel for the World Film Corporation, was elected chairman of the committee upon which the following attorneys have been invited to serve by President Brady: Albert H. T. Banzhof, D. W. Griffith Enterprises; I. S. Chadwick, Ivan Film Productions Company; Paul Cromelin, Cosmofotofilm Company; Arthur S. Friend, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Samuel M. Field, Mutual Film Corporation; Siegfried F. Hartman, Universal Film Manufacturing Company; E. J. Ludvigh, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; James Cowden Meyers, Paralta Plays, Incorporated; J. Robert Rubin, Metro Pictures Corporation; Gustavus A. Rogers, Fox Film Corporation; Walter N. Seligsburg, Triangle Distributing Company, and Louis L. Levine of Brooklyn and Judge A. P. Tugwell of Los Angeles, directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

The attorneys were the luncheon guests of Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association, who outlined the purpose of the committee and placed before it subjects which are proposed for immediate consideration and action.

Fairbanks in Los Angeles

After being banqueted in New York, Chicago and Kansas City, while en route to Los Angeles, Douglas Fairbanks, the Artcraft actor-producer, has arrived in sunny California.

"Doug" is preparing to start immediate production on scenes of his second Artcraft starring vehicle, "A Regular Guy."

"Doug" Fairbanks, who has been termed the smile doctor of screenland, when interviewed after his arrival in Los Angeles, said:

"Glad to get back to California, where I can have my bucking broncho and breathe some real fresh air. I'm a fanatic on the open air idea—a regular gypsy proposition."

Dexter Opposite Mary Pickford

Appearing opposite Mary Pickford in her latest picture, to be released by Artcraft Pictures on May 14, is Elliott Dexter, the well known leading man whose many characterizations in Paramount pictures have made him a favorite among screen patrons.

Here's a quintette of advance views of the high-powered Artcraft dynamo, Douglas Fairbanks, in his first Artcraft play, "In Again, Out Again."

Arline Pretty is the vivacious lady playing and marrying opposite Fairbanks in his new picture. Exhibitors who have already booked this are excusably proud.

"PICTURE INDEPENDENCE WON"

Noted Motion Picture Patents Company Defeated by Universal in Long Hard Fight Over Monopoly Patents

The Supreme Court of the United States, at Washington, handed down a decision on April 10, which is of vital interest to the industry. It marks the independence of the motion picture exhibitor from the monopoly which formerly said: "You run our films or you don't run any films."

The decision is final and it means the victory of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in the famous Latham Loop fight. On August 31, 1914, the re-issued patent on part of the original Edison patent on motion picture machines expired, and the entire industry expected that some ingenious plan would be devised, whereby the Motion Picture Patents Company could continue to exercise the boasted licensing power over all the exhibitors, distributors and manufacturers of moving pictures in the United States. In anticipation of the patent running out they had entered into an agreement with the Precision Machine Company, whereby they licensed it to use in the manufacture of their machine the patents which they owned and controlled, and to sell the machine with certain restrictions as to its use.

The first intimation which the film world had of this further attempt to perpetuate a monopoly by which they had forced thousands of exhibitors to pay them a royalty on their right to run a moving picture show, came in the shape of a letter to an exhibitor who was using Universal service, threatening an injunction because the exhibitor was using a machine which infringed on the Latham patent.

At the same time a letter was sent to the Universal Film Exchange which had supplied Seventy-second Street Amusement Company with the film to which the Motion Picture Patents Company took exception. These two letters, and similar ones sent to other exhibitors, caused consternation in the trade.

On March 18 a bill of complaint was filed against the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the Universal Film Exchange, and the Prague Amusement Company, charging them as defendants. Judge Hough, before whom the original case was brought, directed that the complaint be dismissed on the ground that the limitation on the use of a patented article is invalid.

The Universal Company had been successful twice in defense of its position, when it was apprised that the Patents Company was carrying the case to the Circuit Court of Appeals. The Universal Company carried the case through successfully, and has continued to fight it since.

Now the fight is over. The Supreme Court made its decision on a question which has been the subject of several more or less conflicting decisions. This case seems destined to establish a precedent by which a number of other cases not at all concerned with motion pictures will have to be decided. The cost has been tremendous, and every penny has come from the treasury of the Universal Film Company. Its lawyers, Stanchfield and Levy and Wetmore and Jenner, fought the case from the start in the face of the best and most expensive legal talent the Patents Company could employ, and they have been uniformly successful. They have not made a single mistake in the masterly conduct of the case and they have secured a decision which cannot be overruled and cannot be appealed.

It seems logical that unless the Universal had won this decision, every motion picture company started since 1914 would either have been forced out of business, or else compelled to conduct business under the dictation and pay tribute to the Motion Picture Patents Company, and the Universal has saved the industry all of this taxation.

Victory for Sunday Pictures

Here is another decisive victory for Sunday pictures. This time it is Key West, Florida, and the hero of the story is Juan Carbonnel, manager of the Monroe Theater of that city.

Certain reformers brought the matter into court and the judge gave a sweeping decision in favor of Sunday pictures and the Monroe Theater. The Key West newspapers printed one solid page giving the trial and decision in full. It also ran the following editorial:

SUNDAY PICTURES WIN

We publish in full the decision of Judge W. Hunt Harris on the Sunday movie case that was tried before him. The decision is an able one. It deals with all phases of the question. It is beyond doubt a correct one. The argument made by Attorney Busto for the defense in this case is one of the best that has been heard for some time in a Monroe County Court House, not only from a reasonable standpoint but from a legal one.

The Monroe Theater will open its doors today and the funds taken in by the box office, not in part but as a whole, are being donated by the management to the Key West Nurse corps. Juan Carbonnel, the owner of the theater who has just been tried for keeping his place open on Sunday may not stand high in church circles but he is certainly practicing Christianity in its highest form. Benefits are easily given when a sufficient portion of the funds are being retained to make a performance a paying proposition. But when the manager of a theater, in this commercial age, furnishes his house, his orchestra and a high grade film to a cause it is another matter indeed. We make our best bow to Mr. Carbonnel and his Sunday show.

Mr. Carbonnel is certainly to be congratulated on his standing in the community. His co-operation with the people of his city is a good example for other theater men who desire to make their positions secure.

Approve Barring of Nude

Judging from the wide approval of the action of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures in issuing its bulletin barring the nude from motion pictures, public opinion is strongly in favor of this step. It has received letters from many persons including public officials, having to do with the regulation of motion pictures, supporting its action in this direction.

"I cannot commend too highly your action to discontinue the practice of passing pictures showing the nude, and I feel that it is a step forward in the elevation of the motion picture business for the producing companies to co-operate in this action. The final results cannot but be a commercial benefit to the producers and a moral benefit to the public," says W. L Percy, Chairman of the Atlanta Board of Review of Atlanta, Ga.

House Peters Leaves Morosco

House Peters has just completed his contract term at the Morosco Photoplay Company's Los Angeles studio, and while resting is considering offers from several large western producers. It is rumored, however, that Mr. Peters may finally decide to build his own studio, produce his own plays, and release them under the "state's rights" plan.

"HOW UNCLE SAM PREPARES"

The Training and Schooling of the American Army for Active Service is Shown in Screen Action by Noteworthy Film

Military experts have given their assistance in the production of a novel preparedness film, entitled, "How Uncle Sam Prepares."

Captain Charles Kimball, of the Hanover Film Company, producers of the picture, states: "This picture is different from any of its kind. It had preparedness for its theme, but instead of preaching 'get ready,' it shows how the country should and is getting ready."

"How Uncle Sam Prepares" is a five-reel production which shows the nation's fighting forces in every possible phase. The picture was made under the actual supervision of militia or regular army officers at every stage, and is now being advanced by the government as one of its best recruiting agencies.

The film has been taken over a period of months, starting at the time of the mobilization of the National Guard for duty on the Mexican border last summer. It shows every branch of the army in work and schooling, the scenes coming in natural sequence.

There is no red-blooded American who will not be stirred by this picture, with its visualization of what the men of our army are going through in order to fit themselves properly to defend the country's honor. The scenes are complete to the final detail, and show that the United States has at command men who will live up to the record of the American Army in the past.

Because of the big demand for the film Captain Kimball and Samuel Grant, his associate in the Hanover Film Company, have decided to dispose of it on a state rights basis. Already the New England rights have been disposed of and the picture is being shown at the Tremont Temple Theater in Boston.

The film shows a number of preparedness scenes never before exhibited on the screen. The submarine chasers which the government has built to combat the U-boat menace are shown speeding at forty miles an hour, in the waters off Marblehead, Massachusetts.

Captain Kimball is a former army man. He was attached to the Fourteenth Infantry N. G. N. Y., under General Grant, during the Spanish-American War. Prior to that he had been an Indian fighter under General Miles. Because of his military experience Captain Kimball had many novel ideas for a preparedness film when he first planned "How Uncle Sam Prepares." He also has big ideas for the exploitation of the production.

Men and women, and especially those who have relatives in the service, or expect to have members of their families enlist and fight, should by all means see this film, for it will show the care taken to put recruits into proper physical shape to endure the campaign. It will also make many things clear to those who will follow the movements of the army through the press accounts.

BILLIE BURKE IS BACK

First Production Will Be "The Mysterious Miss Terry" for Famous Players-Lasky—Under Two-Year Contract

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that it has concluded a contract for a period of two years with the celebrated dramatic artist, Miss Billie Burke, by arrangement with Florenz Ziegfeld whereby Miss Burke will be seen in a series of productions to be made in either the Famous Players or Lasky studios.

This notable contract was closed by Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, according to plans arranged by Jesse L. Lasky before Mr. Lasky left for his trip to the Western studios. It is so arranged that Miss Burke will do her photoplay posing in the summer months. Her screen work will consequently not interfere with her regular seasons as a dramatic star, and she will open in a new play September 5 under Mr. Ziegfeld's direction.

During the term of her contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Miss Burke will not appear in photoplays under any other management whatsoever. Although Miss Burke's celebrity as a Broadway dramatic star is foremost in the minds of all her admirers, it will be remembered that she has already appeared to good advantage on the screen. Her enormous success in the production of "Peggy" is particularly notable and worth recalling in view of the still more ambitious efforts which she is now about to make.

Miss Burke's first vehicle will be "The Mysterious Miss Terry," a delightful and whimsical photoplay, the scenario of which has been written by Gillett Burgess, who by the way becomes now a photoplay author for the first time. The story details the experience of a very charming and self-reliant young woman of great wealth who is weary of her surroundings and who takes an extremely novel method of finding a truly noble and disinterested man worthy of her love. Miss Burke is to begin work at the Famous Players studio very soon. The first production will be directed by J. Searle Dawley.

BLACKTON SPEAKS

Producer and Supervisor of Vitagraph's "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," Visits Big Theaters at Presentation of Unusual Spectacle.

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, director-general of Greater Vitagraph, and who is responsible for the excellence of the war preparedness picture, "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," which was screened under his direct supervision, has been forced to decline invitations to make addresses at the opening performances of "Womanhood" for which exhibitors all over the country are clamoring.

So great was the demand for the services of Commodore Blackton, not only as a producer but as a public speaker, that he was persuaded to make preparedness speeches at the opening of "Womanhood" at the Broadway Theater, New York; Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia; the New Theater, Baltimore, and the Strand Theater, Washington.

At the Washington opening, Commodore Blackton and the picture met with a wonderful reception, which was repeated at Baltimore. The Washington opening looked more like some official government function with nearly all of officialdom present. Not only was official Washington present but nearly every patriotic society was represented by a goodly number of the membership.

Among the societies represented were: Daughters of the Confederacy, Society of the War of 1812, Sons of the Revolution, Sons of the American Revolution, Children of the American Revolution, Colonial Dames, Legion of Loyal Women and numerous of the more recently formed patriotic and preparedness organizations.

Advance bookings of "Womanhood" are tremendous, surpassing by many hundred percent the advance bookings of the "Battle Cry of Peace," which is acknowledged to have been one of the biggest money makers exhibitors ever booked.

Manager D. Huff, of the New Theater, Baltimore, expressed himself as venturing into the realm of high finance when he booked "Womanhood" for a two-weeks' run in his big house.

"I never paid so much money for a picture before," he said, "and I am just a little skeptical."

On the fourth day of the run in his house Manager Huff wired Manager Walter W. Irwin, of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E.:

"Playing absolutely to capacity notwithstanding largely increased admission price. Everybody says 'Womanhood' greatest picture yet made. Congratulations."

"Sally-in-a-Hurry," Vitagraph Blue Feature, starring Lillian Walker. Released April 16, replacing "Her Secret" on Greater Vitagraph's program.

Chicago Censors Censured

Major Funkhouser, chief of Chicago's censor board, is undertaking a "clean up" of the censorship evils, which culminated in a recent resolution of the Chicago board of education censuring the city censors.

A big shake up in the censor board is expected and the second deputy is considering suspending several members of the board as a disciplinary measure.

Private investigation conducted by Major Funkhouser has convinced him that there is justification for complaints that objectionable films have been passed through by the censor board.

The laxities extend back for some time, it is said, to the time when Chief Healy ignored two women who had passed at the head of the list and gave the promotion to Wilber F. Willis.

Major Funkhouser has been aroused by reports of his investigators that Willis and L. L. Pryor, a member of the board have frequently taken dinner with Harry Igel, city hall negotiator for several big film companies.

Mastbaum Houses Book O. Henry's

Following the announcement that the Strand Theater of New York would play the entire O. Henry series now being distributed by General Film Company, the exchanges of this company report big bookings from various parts of the country. The Stanley, Palace, Great Northern and Family Theaters of Philadelphia and the Colonial Theater of Atlantic City, all Mastbaum houses, have booked the series and John H. Kunsky in Detroit has just closed for first run for the O. Henry's at his Madison Theater.

The Man Inside the Booth

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

How to Be an Operator

I am a young man employed by a man who runs a picture house and is thinking of opening another one. He has promised me the job of operator in it, that is, if I learn. Would you kindly tell me whether or not you could teach me or what course must I take. Let me know whether you can teach me or not. Would like to learn as early as possible. S. L., Georgia.

In regards to your learning to be an operator, my advice is this: Get a position, either with the man that now employs you, or with some other manager, where there are two machines in the booth, as an apprentice or helper. In my opinion that is the only way for a man to learn.

You can get several sets of books on electricity that will be of great help to you. One of these sets is Hawkins' Electrical Guide. You can write to the different manufacturers of projection machines and they will be glad to forward instruction books on their machines. These books instruct on the care and repair of the machines. By working with an experienced operator and applying your spare time to these books you can master the operators' craft and in my opinion that is the only way that it can be mastered. No doubt you have seen advertisements of different schools that guarantee to make an operator out of you by the correspondence route, but take my advice and save your money and time.

Get into some booth with a man who knows what he is doing and he will teach you more in six months than a correspondence school will teach you in a life time. I do not say this to discourage you, but to be frank with you. This department is conducted for the help of managers and operators and if at any time I can be of any assistance to you or any other reader I will be only too glad to render that assistance. As you go along with your work, and questions arise, do not hesitate to write me and I will explain them to you. I have had boys who were working in the booths with operators complain to me that the men that they were working with would not show them anything, or explain anything to them.

Whenever you come across an operator of that caliber you can rest assured that he is not much of an operator. No first class mechanic is afraid of his job, and when you come in contact with the man who will not impart what little knowledge he has to another, then just put him down as one who has not much knowledge and is afraid of what little he has.

To Replace Worn Sprocket

Will you please tell me how to replace a worn intermittent sprocket on a No. 4 American Standard Picture Machine? I have the new sprocket but have never put one on and would like to know just how to go about it.—T. F. G., Idaho.

To replace an intermittent sprocket proceed as follows: Remove the gate by loosening screw No. 525 and pull gate and spindle off to the right. Next remove the lower sprocket, film chute and gear by driving taper pin out of sprocket No. 453, then drive taper pin out of gear No. 454 and pull spindle No. 452 off to the left. In driving pins use a small steel punch. Be sure and drive the taper pins the right way. Remove the film slide and cradle No. 437 by loosening screws No. 501, screws No. 526 and screw No. 527 and the parts will come off.

To remove star and spindle No. 401, bushing No. 402, intermittent sprocket No. 403 and bushing No. 404, loosen screws No. 509 holding cap No. 497 and No. 498, and the star, spindle and bushings may then be lifted out. In replacing same be sure that the spindle carrying star is set exactly square with the aperture. This may be accomplished by turning bushings Nos. 402 and 404, which are eccentric, until the star hugs the cam and opposite sprocket teeth are exactly the same distance from lower edge of strips for film slide No. 438. This is important, since if one slide of the intermittent sprocket is lower than the other, it will necessarily do most of the work of pulling down the film and that will not only damage the film but cause that side of the sprocket to wear faster than the other side.

Another way to set the star and cam is as follows: On the two bushings will be found a scratch mark running lengthwise on their outer circumference. These scratch marks should be kept parallel or level with each other. These scratch marks may be seen on the inner ends of the bushings next to the intermittent sprocket.

Plans for Projection Booth

H. H. A., Louisville, Kentucky—Your letter in reference to plans for a projection booth at hand and in reply would say that I would advise you to consult with your architect and have him visit several of the local theaters and he can get some very good pointers from the booths in these houses. While in Louisville I found several good booths and several very poor ones.

The booth is the most important fixture in your whole theater, and the man that is in charge of the booth can either make your business a success or a failure. Give him good equipment and a decent place to work in and then you have a right to expect good projection and he will feel like taking an interest in your business, but on the other hand put him in a small cubby hole with no room to work in and poor ventilation and you cannot expect good results.

I am glad to say that most of the booths that I visited in Louisville were very good and the operators were above the average. The best booths I visited were the booth at The Shelby, at Oak and Shelby streets, with E. W. Clay in charge, and The Ideal, at Twenty-third and Market, with Gilbert Bowling in charge. I found a nice large booth with good ventilation at each place. Both operators were careful men and the projection on the screen showed the result of their work. Mr. Clay is one of the oldest operators in the city and is in charge of two machines that are over two years old and look like they were put in yesterday. Mr. Bowling is the youngest operator in the Local there and his equipment was in the best of shape. In looking over the different booths I would advise you to visit these two among the rest and I am sure that both managers and operators will be glad to give you any information that they can to help you out.

Visits Motiopraph Plant

While in Chicago this week the editor of this department visited the plant of the Motiograph on the invitation of Manager Spahr, and with Hahn as chaperon, was shown through the factory. Spahr tells me that they are working overtime and are behind in their orders. They have made several changes in the Motiograph, one of which is in the condenser mount and is a great improvement over the one formerly used.

Operators who have complained about the condenser mouths on the Motiograph will have no further room to kick from now on, as the new one is one of the bast on the market. Several other improvements have been made on the head and lamp house and the other makes of machines will have plenty of competition from the Motiograph from now on.

Chicago Operators' Ball

On visiting the offices of the Chicago Local No. 110 I found Brother Collier, secretary-treasurer, in charge, and he reports that No. 110 is in the best shape that it has been in in the last three years. I was extended an invitation to attend the seventh annual reception and ball given by Local No. 110 on Wednesday, April 25, at the Emerald Moving Picture Company studio. The Local is making great preparations for this ball, and among the novelties will be a picture taken at 10:30 P. M. under the personal direction of Frederick J. Ireland, Emerald's president. It will be completed and shown on the screen the same evening. There will also be several sketches, one by Brothers Horn and Johnstone, who will repeat the comedy that they played at the Cleveland convention entitled, "While I got your watch, I lost my pocketbook," and one by Brother Morey Cohn, who will present his famous sharp shooting act, "He shot at a theater but hit a skirt." Brothers Armstrong, Malloy, Havill and Collier will render several vocal numbers accompanied by the Jazz Band. Brothers Phil Upp, Hanniburg and Goldburg will relate some of their road experiences.

Here's a Unique Equipment

While in a small city the other day I discovered an outfit that caused me to stop and study. On going into the booth, which was made of wood, I found a kitchen table in one corner with an Edison Exhibition Model head fastened at one end of it and a lamp house nailed down behind it. At the place where the film should go down to the take-up a hole was cut through the table and underneath the table they had a hole cut through the floor. I asked one of the managers, "What's the idea?" and he explained to me as follows: "We run the film through the hole in the table and floor and my partner winds the film up in the ticket office." I visited the ticket office and found the partner selling tickets with one hand and rewinding the film as it came from above with the other. He had a carpenter's horse with a crank end of a rewind fastened to it.

MUSIC FOR THE SCREEN

Special Score Is Written for Vitagraph's Feature, "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," by S. M. Berg

The impressive story of "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," coupled with the colossal production given it by Vitagraph required something of extreme class in the music, and at the initial public showings of "Womanhood," in New York, Philadelphia, and Washington, the warm applause testified to the inspiring musical interpretation presented with the picture.

This device of preparing a musical setting for motion pictures is the most novel of modern professions. The advanced method of staging a picture performance has created the demand for ability in this line, and the Vitagraph pictures have been musically reinforced by S. M. Berg, a New York composer and musician, who is the pioneer in the musical profession as it applies to the film. This capable musician briefly stated in an interview with him, "That in the task of synchronizing a musical setting for 'Womanhood,' he felt he was doing his bit for America."

The task of synchronizing musical selections to be played along with the projection of the picture, is one of mystery to the uninitiated. The musical expert and an assistant sit in the dim projection room, with pads of paper and a stop watch under the solitary hooded desk light, while the picture is run off, and they make numerous notations. The expert dictates to the assistant various notations to be made, the latter simultaneously recording the exact time in seconds that each scene of each situation remains on the screen. Every printed subtitle in the picture is also recorded, and is retained in the score as a cue to the musician. Often additional titles are written into the score as cues, as, for instance, when a change of action or a climax occurs in the midst of a scene to suggest a change of music. A draft score is then written out and played, and trimmed or expanded to fit the time of the picture. Particular attention was paid to all the themes or motifs at the suggestion of Commodore J. Stuart Blackton himself, who has always realized the psychological affinity between music and the action, and who was one of the first to encourage the interpretation of pictures with music.

Here's Something New

It isn't very often that we hear of a film concern refusing to take money. However, this is what happened in the case of some Paramount-Arbuckle comedy contracts made in Chicago.

The Chicago office had been notified that the minimum price for these comedies would be thirty-five dollars per day. In order to get special service on these a number of big exhibitors in the city gladly signed up at higher rates, up to as high as forty-five dollars. These signed and certified contracts were returned from the headquarters in New York to the Chicago office because more than thirty-five dollars per day had been accepted on the contract. The Chicago branch had not been notified that $35 was to be the maximum as well as the minimum price.

The whole thing goes to show that Paramount is surely on the square with the exhibitors.

NAVY RECRUITS BY FILM

"Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," Is Strong Factor in Gaining Enlistments—Pershing Requests Film for Recruiting Purposes

The Navy Department has borrowed the services of Harry T. Morey, the Greater Vitagraph Star, in the war preparedness picture, "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation." He is stimulating interest in enlistments.

Mr. Morey started on his strenuous campaign tour last Monday, when, accompanied by a regular recruiting officer, he toured the streets of New York, making twenty-minute speeches at many congested points, addressing crowds at twelve points during the day. In all, he spoke for about two hundred and twenty minutes and was so hoarse at night that he could not make a sound louder than a very poor whisper. Notwithstanding this fact, Mr. Morey started out early on Tuesday morning to continue his work for the country.

"Womanhood" has just closed a remarkable three-week run at the Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia, where it played to a top price of one dollar and a minimum of twenty-five cents. Notwithstanding that Holy Week by showmen is acknowledged to be the poorest box office week in the year, and it was the last week of the run at the Chestnut Street Opera House, the theater played almost to capacity.

Credit for this remarkable showing during Holy Week is thought to be due to the manner in which Manager J. S. Hebrew of the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. exchange in Philadelphia advertised the $1,000 prize contest for the best essay to be written on "preparedness." Through the co-operation of the Philadelphia public school authorities, Manager Hebrew distributed five hundred of the heralds advertising the contest to seventy of the Philadelphia public schools. The principals of the schools saw that the heralds were distributed in each class room. As a result of this advertising the matinees were crowded with school children.

Every night of the Broadway run prominent preparedness speakers addressed the audience during the intermission following the running off of part four. On the night assigned to the Military Training Camps Association, following the regular "Womanhood" performance, the two reels owned by the association showing the work of the organization of actually making soldiers out of business men at the Plattsburg camp was shown.

Army and Navy night the theater was packed with soldiers and sailors, the rank and file of both branches of the service, as well as hundreds of commissioned officers. It appeared as if every man able to get leave attended the performance. A special request was made that still another night be assigned to the army and navy, but the schedule was filled and the run could not be extended owing to the booking arrangements of the house. In an effort to accommodate the army and navy officials, Greater Vitagraph offered a fabulous sum to rent the theater for one night.

Probably the most remarkable opening of the big preparedness picture was in the Strand Theater, Washington, on Sunday, Aprily 8. Tom Moore, owner of the house and widely known as a live showman, had nearly all of official Washington present, including many of the members of Congress. In the audience two of the "lame ducks" who refused to support President Wilson's war resolution were seen. They remained throughout the eight reels of their own arraignment.

Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin, who led the filibuster in the Senate, also saw the big preparedness picture, but refused to comment upon it, although in the scenes where Americans were mowed down and when the American Joan of Arc faced the foreign squad which left her lifeless, the Senator from Wisconsin was seen to clench his hands and compress his lips.

General Pershing, U. S. A., the hero of the recent invasion of Mexico, who although surrounded by hostile Mexicans, brought his insufficient command out of the wilds, asked that "Womanhood" be screened for him by the Dallas office of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., in order that he might be better prepared to use the picture to get re-enlistments of his troopers, many of whose terms are expiring.

All of the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. branch exchanges throughout the country report tremendous inquiries regarding the big war spectacle.

Ruth Stonehouse and her company of Universal players have finished the picturization of "A Lovable Thief."

Glimpses of Balboa's remarkable new serial, "The Twisted Thread," featuring Kathleen Clifford.

REMARKABLE BALBOA SERIAL

"The Twisted Thread," Featuring Kathleen Clifford, Will Not Be Released Through Pathe—Distribution Arrangements Announced Later

H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, is authority for the statement that the new Balboa serial, "The Twisted Thread," will not be released through Pathe.

In speaking to a representative of MOTOGRAPHY, Mr. Horkheimer said:

Our new serial, "The Twisted Thread," far surpasses any of our serials to date. I am not yet ready to announce its channel of release, but the arrangement has already been made. I will only say that the serial will be distributed through the exchanges of the most powerful organization in the world, barring none, and that it is their first serial release.

I cannot give you the date of "The Twisted Thread's" first release, but it will be preceded by at least five months' newspaper and billboard campaign. The appropriation for this advertising approximates $300,000. This will give the exhibitors a flying start in booking the serial. It is fifteen episodes in length, and contains adventure, romance, mystery, thrills and is up to the minute on war material. These elements of interest and suspense combined with excellent production, make "The Twisted Thread" the best serial we have yet produced. Watch for it. We are willing to give $1,000 to charity if the press critics do not pronounce it the superlative in serials.

The Balboa Amusement Producing Company is the best known and most successful producer of serials in the industry. They have to their credit the successful serials: "The Red Circle," "Who Pays?" "Neal of the Navy," "The Grip of Evil," "The Neglected Wife," "Who Wins?" and now their latest production "The Twisted Thread," much of which is already produced and ready for distribution.

Kathleen Clifford is featured in this masterpiece. She is a star of great personal charm, beauty and daring, and comes to the screen with the advantages of a long and successful stage career. Supporting her are Gordon Sackville, Neil Hardin, Ethel Ritchie, Cullen Landis, and Bruce Smith.

Essanay Reopens Niles Studio

Essanay has re-opened its studio at Niles, Cal., and has launched into the production of a series of photodramas of the red-blooded West. George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, took this step following a careful study of the present problems of exhibitors. His decision was that the popular demand for pictures of this type was steadily growing, instead of decreasing.

For the past three weeks, an army of carpenters, electricians and property experts have been at work rejuvenating the huge studio at Niles, which has been closed for more than a year. In addition to practically rebuilding the structure, new properties and modern electrical appliances have been installed. The studio was formally opened with elaborate ceremonies which were attended by many motion picture celebrities and officials of the town and state.

In this series Mr. Spoor announces that he will endeavor to give the public a conception of the West different from anything yet placed upon the screen. This does not mean, he added, that the pictures will be lacking in thrills or settings less picturesque than those which the average photoplay patron is accustomed to view. But these thrills and real Western settings will be incorporated into stories of startling originality.

"The Deemster" Praised

The remarkable new film play, "The Deemster," is now showing at the Broadway Theater, New York City. The captivating Marion Swayne plays an important role in the story, which is taken from the novel by the celebrated author, Hall Caine.

The New York American says: "The spirit and genius of Hall Caine, running through two generations, permeates the current attraction at the Broadway Theater, for yesterday the photoplay of 'The Deemster' was presented there, with the great novelist's son, Derwent Hall Caine, in the title role, and with the clear evidence of the father's endorsement shown in an autograph letter 'flashed' before the drama films were unrolled. The entrancing and gripping story of 'The Deemster' is too much a household word to be repeated here, and Hall Caine's later works have become too extensively popularized by the Hearst publications to need any exposition at this moment."

Rupert Julian is completing "A Dime's Worth of Philosophy," with Mignon Anderson, Emory Johnson and Zoe Rae.

EDGAR LEWIS PRODUCTION

Powerful Character Drawings Make Edgar Lewis Score Again—"The Bar Sinister" Attracts Unusual Attention at Broadway Showing

Dealing with the absorbing subject of race prejudice, Edgar Lewis' new production, "The Bar Sinister," was given a special trade showing at the Broadway Theater, New York, on April 18.

Several unusual circumstances have caused those engaged in the manufacture and distribution of motion pictures to show a keen interest in the success of this latest Edgar Lewis offering. First of all, "The Bar Sinister" follows so closely the launching of "The Barrier" that the question "Can he do it again?" is uppermost in the minds of those who considered that picture remarkable. Then the fact that "The Bar Sinister" follows out his much discussed contention that the success of special productions is not dependent upon a star, has attracted the attention of those in every angle of the business. Every part is strong and there is no star to monopolize the scenes.

Also, "The Bar Sinister" is the first production of a director who, having a conviction, had the courage to back that conviction with his own capital and started his own producing company with the sole idea of making artistic pictures with such a powerful appeal that the name of a prominent Broadway actor or actress would not be necessary to box office success.

The story selected for the first Edgar Lewis Production was written by Anthony P. Kelly and is a powerful heart interest drama laid in the South. Mr. Lewis cast his picture in New York, selecting many of the artists who worked with him in "The Barrier," Mitchell Lewis, Hedda Nova, Victor Sutherland, Jules Cowles, W. A. Williams, W. J. Gross and Florence St. Leonard having prominent parts. He then took his complete company south and used the turpentine stills of Thomasville, Ga., as the background for many of his most important scenes.

Mitchell Lewis as Ben Swift in "The Bar Sinister." Ben is but one of the many unusual and remarkable characters in the production. There are many types that strike home with a powerful human appeal.

Boston Against State Censorship

The legislative committee on mercantile affairs, of Boston, has reported against a bill for state censorship of pictures. The bill was the subject of a hearing at which the need of censorship was discussed, on account of the fact that many sex films are now being shown.

Motion picture interests were supported by real estate and other business interests of Boston, in their claims that pictures could be censored properly under the present system, without the necessity of the state undergoing further expense.

The bill provided for a board, to be appointed by the governor. All films were to be viewed by the board, in much the same manner as films now shown on Sunday are censored by the state police. Those for the bill are to take the fight to the floor of the house, four of the committee having dissented from the adverse report.

Sunday Showings in New York

A bill to legalize motion picture exhibitions on Sunday, known as Senator James J. Walker's bill, was reported favorably by the Senate Codes Committe of the New York legislature, by a vote of five to four. The bill was amended in the committee to provide for motion picture shows on Sunday in cities of the first class, without restriction as to the house.

In cities of the second and third class, theaters are allowed to give performances after one o'clock Sunday afternoon, and in other parts of the state they are only allowed to open after two o'clock. Those in favor of the bill believe it will pass the senate with twenty-seven votes.

Entire Dutch Village Built for Ince

The degree of absolute reality achieved in Triangle-Ince productions is to be witnessed in the Dutch village now being erected under the direction of Thomas H. Ince at his Culver City headquarters.

This unique community will furnish the scenes of the new play written by J. G. Hawks, in which Bessie Barriscale is to be starred. How much this village will cost, no one knows, but advance estimates were put at $15,000.

A large canal has been dug, lined with heavy water-proofed fabrics. Water will be turned into this from the huge tank supplying the studios. On either bank have been built the houses which will be photographed during the action of the play. The difference between motion picture scene construction and stage construction is well illustrated by this. The timbers, the houses, and the streets are all as solid and substantial as if they were for actual use.

STAR RIDES IN MID-AIR

Pearl White Does Her "Bit" to Stimulate Recruiting—Rides Steel Beam to Top of New York Skyscraper

Pearl White, Pathe star, did her share and aided the Navy to arouse interest in enlistments when she rode a steel beam from the street level to the top of a new skyscraper which is being built on Forty-second street in the heart of New York. As her beam swung out over the street, high in the air above the crowd, she scattered tiny flags and printed appeals to the young men of the country to enlist.

Those scoffers who say that the deeds of daring performed in the films by the stars are generally done by means of "doubles" would have been convinced that Miss White, at least, was an exception, if they had been present. The beam was only about 14 inches wide and was suspended by a single chain from the arm of a derrick at the top of the building. The wind was blowing a gale and as the beam rose higher and higher it twisted and swayed in a way calculated to make the observer entirely content to be on the solid ground.

A half dozen sailors and two officers from the Navy Enlistment Bureau were present and attached their recruiting banner to the beam before the ascent. When the beam reached the street again after the return trip Miss White made a little speech in which she pointed out the need of young men in the Navy and begged her hearers to enlist. Lieut. Bryant of the Navy Enlistment Bureau later reported several applications from men in the crowd.

Paramount Contracts for Arbuckle

A remarkable display of confidence in the Paramount organization and in "Fatty" Arbuckle has been shown by the exhibitors of the country during the last three weeks, for before the first Paramount Arbuckle comedy, "The Butcher Boy," has been released there have been more than 2,000 contracts signed, of which one hundred and fifty will be first runs.

This unusual demonstration in the confidence of Paramount and Arbuckle is unprecedented in the sale of pictures, and stands as a monument of successful attainment in business. Immediately after the whirlwind transcontinental trip Mr. Arbuckle took, coming east to join Paramount, he began working on two pictures. He had spent weeks in selecting the proper stories he wished to picture for his new associates, and when he announced that he had chosen "The Butcher Boy" for the first production and that it was the best ever, he created in the minds of thousands of exhibitors the absolute desire to have the picture, in fact the series of pictures, for the exhibitors realized full well that when Arbuckle said it was his best, he meant nothing more or less, and that, prone as he was to prophesy, he would not have issued such a statement unless it was the whole truth.

SCHENECTADY EXHIBITOR FINED

Victor Bergstrom of Majestic Theater Will Resort to Court of Appeals for Decision on Sunday Operation of Pictures

Victor Bergstrom, manager of the Majestic Theater of Schenectady, New York, around whom the fight on behalf of Sunday films has been waged for weeks, was convicted recently by a jury in the police court of violating the Sunday observance law by operating his theater on December 10 last. He was fined $5.

Bergstrom, immediately after his conviction, announced that he would carry his case to the Court of Appeals.

Thus, after several months of more or less watchful waiting and marking time in the case while all the test cases were tried, the motion picture industry is finally to have a chance to bring their arguments to the attention of the highest tribunal of justice.

In case the latter decides against them, there will still be the legislature, and it is expected a new law will be brought into the statute books legalizing shows on the Sabbath beyond any chance of misinterpretation.

Bergstrom was convicted before Police Justice Marvin H. Strong after two theater proprietors had been acquitted by juries in Schenectady police court, on charges of operating theaters on Sunday.

"Pokes and Jabs" Popular

An unusually large number of inquiries from exchange men in all sections of the country, was the recent announcement by the Jaxon Film Corporation that its single reel, "Pokes and Jabs," comedies had been withdrawn from the General Film Company program, and would hereafter be distributed on the open market.

As yet, no contracts for franchise rights have been closed. It is the intention of the Jaxon Company to arrange for the distribution of its pictures throughout the entire country at the same time. Arrangements have already been completed, however, for representation in a large territory, and it is expected that the company will be able to announce its exchanges for the whole country in a short time.

One reason ascribed by the officials of the Jaxon company for the demand for its "Pokes and Jabs" pictures, is the entrance of America into the world war. It is an axiom in the show world that in times of national stress, financial or otherwise, people turn for amusement and recreation to comedy, both in pictures and in legitimate productions.

Bronson-Howard Fox Scenario Head

George Bronson-Howard, the well-known author and playwright, has taken charge of the scenario department of the William Fox Film Corporation. This is another step taken by Mr. Fox to make his productions the best that brains and money can produce.

Already Mr. Bronson-Howard has distinguished himself as a playwright, novelist, short story writer, musical comedy librettist, dramatic critic, war correspondent in the Russo-Japanese war, captain in the Chinese army, and inspector in both the Chinese and Philippines customs. He has also been a reporter on a dozen newspapers from San Francisco to London and a member of the editorial staff of half a dozen magazines.

Youngsters' Programs Succeed

By William T. Noble
Special Correspondent for Motography.

It was several months ago that the Collegiate Alumnae and Parent-Teachers' Association at Kansas City, Missouri, arranged with a picture theater to give Friday night programs of films especially selected for children and young people. The theater manager did not enter the arrangement without trepidation. But the first Friday night dispelled whatever doubts he had as to the box office receipts. The number of admissions was larger, considerably larger, than the average Friday night number.

Another motion picture exhibitor was persuaded to offer clean pictures with his Friday night program. He, too, found it good business.

Now there are eight motion picture theaters in the resident districts the Friday night programs of which are selected by the Collegiate Alumnae and Parent-Teacher Association's committee, from lists furnished by the theater managers. The results have been such as to win special comment in the March bulletin of the Affiliated Committees for Better Films, which is affiliated with the National Board of Reviews.

Six other motion picture theaters soon expected to join the parents' night movement.

Another object of the joint committee, which is scarcely less emphasized that the "better pictures" aim, is to keep public school pupils, so far as possible, from attending picture shows on other nights than Friday. Most all of the members of the committee say. We wish parents to aid our work for clean films by urging motion picture theater managers to sign up the agreement for the selected Friday night programs.

Wharton Companies at Work

One of the Wharton companies has returned from Saranac Lake where they spent four weeks working on "The Great White Trail," which will be the first of the Wharton super-feature releases. The company is headed by Doris Kenyon, who is supported by Thomas Holding, Paul Gordon, Hans Robert, Edgar L. Davenport and Mrs. Charles Willard.

The interior scenes are being taken at the studios at Ithaca and Director Leo D. Wharton expects to finish the studio work within the next four weeks.

A two reel comedy entitled "Below Zero" has just been completed at the studios and will be released at the same time as the first feature.

Several very prominent stars and well-known writers have been engaged for the production of the releases to follow.

Tenor Becomes Picture Player

Henry Hallam, formerly a favorite tenor in light opera, has been engaged to support Viola Dana in Metro-Columbia productions, and will be seen in East Indian parts in her next two photoplays, "God's Law and Man's," a screen version of Paul Trent's novel, "A Wife by Purchase," and "Lady Barnacle," by Edgar Franklin, which will appear in The All Story Weekly simultaneously with its release on the Metro program.

Endorses "Poor Little Rich Girl"

Unqualified endorsement of the Artcraft picture, "A Poor Little Rich Girl," which was shown at the Rex Theater, Jackson, Mich., recently was given by Mrs. A. E. Bulson, president of the Jackson County Federation of Women's Clubs, who declares the play, in which Mary Pickford takes the leading part, is one which should be witnessed by every parent in the city of Jackson.

John Sainpolis Joins Apollo

John Sainpolis, for years one of the most prominent leading men on the American stage, has been signed by the Apollo Pictures Corporation, to appear in features on the Art Dramas program.

The actor's first appearance with his new company will be in "The Mystic Hour," a psychic photodrama to be released May 10.

Mr. Sainpolis' latest screen appearance was in the Paramount production of "Sapho," in which he played the leading male role, opposite Pauline Frederick.

He has been appearing in leading and star roles on the screen and stage for over seven years.

High Cost of Production

Some idea of the expense entailed in the mere mechanical production of a Triangle feature may be gathered from the accompanying picture of Enid Bennett, showing the young Ince star surrounded by 50,000 feet of rejected film that was exposed during the taking of her first two pictures, "Princess of the Dark" and "The Little Brother."

None of this footage appeared in either of the features. It was all deleted under the supervision of Director-General Ince, to give place to the perfect exposures deemed worthy of release on the Triangle program.

Perhaps it is not generally known that in making a first-class screen play the various scenes are sometimes photographed as many as a dozen times from different angles. Finally, only the very best exposures are retained. It is the duty of the supervising director to see that none but the most striking scenes are included in this final version. Here is where the element of good taste and selective judgment plays such an important part.

The film stock, which is quite expensive, is of course a complete loss, once it has been exposed. This is one reason for the high cost of modern screen production.

No one can say that this little Australian girl is not "in the movies" now. She is Enid Bennett, Ince star, and the film shown is the 50,000 feet from her first two productions that went into dramatic discord as being below the Ince standard.

"MOTHERS OF FRANCE"

The Marseillaise Sung by American Artists at Unusual Society Showing in Philadelphia—Foreign Consuls Attend.

World-Pictures Brady-made is an institution to which the solution of unusual problems seems to possess no very serious obstacles. For example, the possible usefulness of a number of accomplished prima donnas to a motion picture producing organization might appear to the ordinary view a somewhat obscure if not wholly insoluble enigma.

Of course, the primary value of a prima donna who can act effectively for the screen is easily apparent, as in the cases of Miss Geraldine Farrar and others. But the utilization of the rare gift of song in an art that is strictly dumb is quite another matter—yet not impossible to World-Pictures.

This concern, it transpires, recently arranged to loan "Mothers of France" to the American Ambulance Field Service for four exhibitions at the Metropolitan Opera House, Philadelphia, as a help toward raising $135,000 for extending and maintaining the service along the French battle front.

Dispatches were sent to Miss Kitty Gordon and Miss Alice Brady inviting each to render the inspiriting anthem at two of the "Mothers of France" representations in Philadelphia. Both artists accepted with alacrity, to the end that Miss Brady sang on Thursday and Friday evenings, and Miss Gordon rendered the song at the Saturday matinee and evening showings.

The English colony in the City of Brotherly Love, not to be outdone by their neighbors, invited Kitty Gordon, their beautiful countrywoman, to a supper and dance for Saturday night, arranging an entertainment upon a most lavish scale in her honor—so that the stay of both the World-Pictures songbirds was in the nature of an ovation.

Meanwhile, the preparations for these events helped to concentrate public interest in the showings of "Mothers of France" to an extent which practically assured an advance sell-out of the entire house for the full series. The boxes for the most part had been bespoken by their regular holders in the opera season, making it a matter of extreme difficulty to provide suitable accommodations for the French, Belgian and British consuls and their respective staffs when they signified a desire to attend.

New Universal Brand

A new brand of feature photoplays will be offered for release through the Universal exchanges under the brand name of Butterfly Pictures. These releases will be five reels in length and will be produced by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company at their studios in California.

It is the intention of the Universal officials to present only the highest type of photo-drama under the new Butterfly trade mark. The stories for these productions will be by noted authors and scenario writers entirely. The casts for the pictures will be selected with unusual care for the fitness of the actors assigned to portray the roles which they interpret, and the pictures will be directed by leaders in this branch of the film profession.

Butterfly Pictures will be advertised extensively in the trade journals, newspapers and nation-wide billboard space will be taken. The first of the Butterfly features will be "Eternal Love," a five-part romantic drama, in which Ruth Clifford and Douglas Gerrard play the leading roles, and which will appear May 7.

Alice Brady in "Darkest Russia"

The current release of World-Pictures Brady-Made bears the exceptionally timely title, "Darkest Russia," and is the screen version of a stage drama which enjoyed a remarkably successful career throughout the United States and Canada. The spoken play was written by H. Grattan Donnelly and Sydney R. Ellis, and it was everywhere regarded as a particularly graphic and faithful reflection of the oppressive conditions which prevailed in the Czar's empire—conditions which continued to exist until the recent revolution.

Alice Brady in "Darkest Russia."

In the motion picture drama Alice Brady personifies a young Jewish girl who is loved by the son of rich and powerful parents in Petrograd. Several drunken soldiers pursue this girl into her home, and when her aged father seeks to defend her from their caresses, he is shot to death by one of their number.

This outrage fills the Jewess with resentment and she refuses to play an air in honor of the Czar. She is publicly punished for this by the noble who is giving the entertainment. The son of this noble loves her and subsequently the lovers are taken as Nihilists, though neither is actually of that creed, and they are sent to Siberia. They escape. They are captured in an abandoned hut and are about to be executed when the father of the young man halts the execution and gladly consents to the union of the lovers.

Sharp pictorial contrast is afforded between the scenes of affluence and splendor in Petrograd and the wretchedness and squalor of the Siberian mines, while the long flight in the sledge over the snowy roads adds a picturesque out-doors feature which is exceedingly effective.

Farrar at Actors' Fair

Geraldine Farrar and Alma Gluck, operatic stars, and Julia Marlowe have given their pledge to Daniel Frohman to serve at booths during the Actors' Fund Fair which opens at the Grand Central Palace, New York, on May 12. Miss Farrar is to sing "The Star Spangled Banner" on the opening afternoon of the bazaar.

VITAGRAPH GETS FICTION PRIZE

Picturization of "The Judgment House," "Wolfville" Stories, and Another George Randolph Chester Offering to Come

Some more splendid fiction is about to be filmed by Greater Vitagraph following its recent production of such classics as "The Enemy," "The Girl Philippa," "Arsene Lupin," and "The Captain of the Gray Horse Troop." The formerly announced policy of President Albert E. Smith of securing the best work of the best authors for the public to which they have endeared themselves is being pursued steadfastly. Announcements now made include a brilliant array of material for the picture lovers of the country.

The most splendid book written by Sir Gilbert Parker, powerful weaver of red-blooded romance and magically human character, "The Judgment House." Every reader of Sir Gilbert Parker's works knows this book as the one of outstanding dramatic value. An impressive production of this story will be given with a cast that will be chosen with extreme regard for interpretation.

Equal in significance is the undertaking to screen the strong western dramas that exist in the Alfred Henry Lewis stories, the "Wolfville" series. These stories are gems of their kind—each being full of the sharply silhouetted American character which attains its most picturesque development in the breezy expanse of the boundless West. Filming these will begin May 1. The star chosen is Harry Morey, hero of "Within the Law," "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," "The Courage of Silence," "Whom the Gods Destroy," and such famous earlier releases as "My Official Wife." These pictures will be produced at the Western studio of Greater Vitagraph at Hollywood, Cal., whither Mr. Morey will journey soon, remaining there until the series has been completed. It will break up for the time being the great team of which he was a member with Alice Joyce in feature and special feature releases. Antonio Moreno, who has been at the Western studio for several months doing star parts, will return to New York to resume his work at the Brooklyn studio as a star.

Exhibitor to Handle Art Dramas

Southwestern Art Dramas, Inc., has just signed contracts with Josiah Pearce and Sons, of New Orleans, whereby the Pearce firm will become the exclusive distributors of the Art Dramas program for the state of Louisiana.

Josiah Pearce is one of the best known exhibitors in the southwest. He is the owner of many large theaters in New Orleans and other cities. He was formerly in the exchange business.

This arrangement will enable the southern exchanges to give much better service to all the theaters in New Orleans as well as for the entire state.

This is the third big deal which has been put through by Art Dramas in two weeks. A fortnight ago Sol Lesser contracted to handle the program for the western states, and last week Sanford and McHenry, incorporating as Southwestern Art Dramas, became the southern distributors. These three deals are adequate proof of the fact that the policy of the company, "star stories without the inflated star," is based on sound business reasoning, and fills a long felt want in the motion picture world.

Crowds See Train Wreck

More than two thousand people gathered in Highland Park near Pasadena, California, one Sunday to watch J. P. McGowan stage a wreck for the sixth chapter of "The Railroad Raiders," the Mutual-Signal serial.

A Pullman car was hooked on behind a local passenger train and hauled down the Salt Lake line at more than forty miles an hour. As it reached a sharp curve, it was cut loose from the train and shunted off the right of way down a forty-foot embankment. It rolled over a couple of times and collapsed in a heap at the foot of the hill.

So realistic was the scene of the wreck and the later scenes of the wrecking crew at work drawing back the debris to the track, that many passersby stopped their machines to inquire how many were hurt and offer their autos to take any injured passengers to local hospitals.

For picture purposes there were two men killed, but in reality no one received a scratch.

"High Play" Great Success

The star, the director and the author form a trio which promise a one hundred per cent production in "High Play," the Mutual-American feature released April 9.

William Russell is the star and "High Play" might be called a typical Russell story. In it there is plenty of action and a big hero role for William Russell. He appears as John Servier, vice-president of a big New York bank. His adventures include clashes on the market, a complication of affairs in a gambling house, two love tangles and a run on the bank—to say nothing of the murder plot which happens along incidentally.

Edward Sloman is the director, who so recently distinguished himself with "My Fighting Gentleman," the highly successful first picture of the recent costly series of Russell productions. Julius Grinnell Furthman, of the American Film Company's staff, is responsible for the story and scenario. Francelia Billington and Lucille Young fairly divide the honors in the supporting roles.

"High Play" is a story of society, finance, love and mystery. A murder, a financial crisis in a great bank and conflict between rival sweethearts of the hero, are among the threads upon which the action is strung.

ANN PENNINGTON COMES BACK

Ziegfeld "Follies" Star Will Again Appear in Famous Players-Paramount Pictures in Patriotic Play "The Boy Scout."

Ann Pennington, the popular little Ziegfeld "Follies" star who created such a sensation on the screen when she made her motion picture debut in the Famous Players-Paramount picture "Susie Snowflake," has returned from a long tour upon the stage and will again star upon the screen under the auspices of the Famous Players.

It was at the close of the "Follies" season in 1916 that Miss Pennington decided to make her motion picture debut and arrangements were completed with Mr. Ziegfeld by which she was to join the Famous Players forces and to star in the productions of that company until the opening of the "Follies" in the fall, it being specified that Miss Pennington's motion picture activities were in no way to interfere with her stage career.

The production upon which Miss Pennington will at once begin work is "The Boy Scout," a patriotic picture which was written especially for her. It will show the little screen star in an entirely different light upon the screen and will at the same time strike a new note that is uppermost in the minds of us all at this time.

The career of Ann Pennington is one of the most interesting in stage and screen history. A native of Camden, N. J., she won a reputation as a dancer and actress in the little amateur shows in which she took part in her native city. Her fame soon spread across the river to Philadelphia and she was invited to participate in several amateur performances in the Quaker City. Then she began to study stage dancing and later joined the "Red Widow" company, making her professional debut in that play. She appeared in several other companies, then was picked for the "Follies." The success which Miss Pennington won on the stage was more than duplicated upon the screen and the productions in which she starred nearly a year ago are still being enthusiastically received upon the screen. The date of release for "The Boy Scout" has not yet been set by Paramount but work upon the production will begin at the Famous Players studio within a very short time.

Novel Features in "Silent Master"

Robert Warwick's second Selznick-Picture, "The Silent Master," is now complete, and was shown privately to the Selznick Department heads last week. It will be released in a few days, and it is expected to create a real furore among exhibitors, because of its numerous novel features. Harry Rapf, president of the Warwick Film Corporation, has staked heavily upon the success of this picture. In addition to engaging Leonce Perret, the noted French director, as head of his producing department, he recruited his cast from such screen and stage notables as Olive Tell, Anna Little, Donald Galaher and Henri Valbel. Besides the array of important players supporting Mr. Warwick, the production boasts a variety of unique phases.

The plot combines adventure among the desperate criminals of Paris, the mystery of the secret court, and the romance that is always associated with the French capital.

In the advance publicity an interesting stimulant to curiosity has been employed in the form of a triangular symbol, with a skull, balance and a large S. This is the crest of the Court of St. Simon, around which the action of the story is built. Everything possible has been done not merely to produce a picture which will draw well, but which will appeal to exhibitors because of the numerous angles from which it can be advertised.

"Deemster's" State Right Register

State rights buyers are evincing much interest in the great Hall Caine photoplay, "The Deemster," which had its initial New York showing at the Broadway Theater, New York, to a crowded house.

Prominent buyers who called at the Arrow Film Corporation's offices in the Times building and either closed or opened negotiations for the big Hall Caine feature were: B. Amsterdam, president of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia, who bought the rights to "The Deemster" for Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia; E. V. Johnson of Turner & Wahnkin, 942 Market street, San Francisco; Mr. True Thompson and father, of Dallas, buyers for Texas and a group of southern states; E. R. Hass and Sidney Miller of the Hy Art Film Co., Washington, D. C.; M. M. Feeley for Wichita Feature Film Company, and H. P. Wolfburg of Pittsburgh. A number of big western buyers were in communication with The Arrow Company by telegraph and mail.

Petrova's First Paramount Picture

Ever since the announcement that the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co. had engaged Madame Olga Petrova to star in its productions, speculation has been rife as to the nature of the celebrated Russian actress's first Paramount picture.

It is now announced by the Lasky company that Madame Petrova will make her first appearance under its management in "The Undying Flame," a dramatic story of ancient and modern Egypt in which Madame Petrova plays first the daughter of a Pharoah, and then, in the second part of the story, the young daughter of an English army officer.

"War Doesn't Affect Business"

America's entrance into the war will in no way harm the motion picture industry and indications are that the business actually will be benefited by present conditions, according to Frederick L. Collins, president of McClure Pictures, who had just returned from an extended trip to the Pacific Coast. "Manufacturers on the coast are not planning to let up in the slightest degree because of the war," Mr. Collins said: "I find that the same condition exists in New York."

Manning Manager of Horsley Studios

Norman Manning has been appointed manager of the David Horsley Studios to succeed John Jasper, and will take up his post immediately.

Mr. Manning is one of the youngest film executives in the business but despite his youth is recognized as one of the most efficient in his line of work. He has been associated with film concerns for the last four years, his last connection being with the Horkheimer studios as business and studio manager.

Director Jack Conway is rapidly completing "Hands Up," a five-reel feature, at Universal City.

"Sleeping Fires"

Famous Players-Paramount in Five Parts. Released April 16. Reviewed by George W. Graves

IN THIS drama Pauline Frederick gives an excellent portrayal of a woman within whose breast the unquenchable mother love burns, and we suppose this is what the title alludes to. The mother love this time is pitted against an unworthy husband who is determined to divorce her, despite her religious convictions on the subject, that he may take his secretary into his home. In order to get his wife to acquiesce, he attacks her at a vulnerable point—through the child. The story is basically conventional, yet it registers with telling effect since Pauline Frederick's emotional powers score in every scene. It all makes good entertainment more because of the delightful work of the star than the appeal of the story, which is not unusual, at least to the steady theater-goer. In support of Miss Frederick are a number of popular Paramounters, the list including John Saipolis, Maury Stewart, Thomas Meighan, Helen Dahl and Joseph Smiley. George Middleton, a dramatist of note, is the author, and this fact might be used to advantage by the exhibitor who thinks his patrons will appreciate it. Settings and photography come up to the long established Famous Players standard. While "Sleeping Fires" is not extraordinary it is entirely up to the Famous Players standard in production. It is bound to please the not too jaded theater chair renter.

Law turns to love.

Edwin Bryce, in love with his secretary, treats his wife shamefully. At last unable to bear up against the tide of his cruelty she leaves him, but her religion precludes divorce. She knows, however, that there is no chance of her being custodian of the child except through divorce. At the time she needs a friend, Gray, a young lawyer, turns up and promises to assist. Rumor is abroad that Gray is her lover and this is a feather in her husband's cap. Mrs. Bryce finally kidnaps her child, only to have it clandestinely seized again by the husband. On her second trip for her child she encounters first the mistress-secretary and then her husband. A struggle ensues and Bryce is accidentally shot. Because of the rumors concerning Gray things look bad for Mrs. Bryce. How the truth comes out in court and the unwritten law prevails provides the dramatic ending.

"The Lonesome Chap"

Pallas-Paramount Drama in Five Reels. Released April 19. Reviewed by George W. Graves.

A TREATMENT consistent with life is given to a story of splendid entertainment qualities in "The Lonesome Chap," featuring House Peters and Louise Huff. Especially well drawn is the depiction of a man who, sure that his love is hopeless, fails to shake off his self-imposed sentence and see the not at all obscure truth of the matter. The story is of simple construction, treating of the nobler things in human nature, not the depraved, and thus makes good clean entertainment without dependence on "problem" developments. The story unfolds smoothly, without ever becoming tiresome; quite to the contrary, one never loses interest in the human people who make up its characters and the paths their ignorance and doubt lead them into. Again it is seen that "love is blind." There is a well-sustained note of pathos which makes the happy turn at the last moment all the happier.

House Peters has a part which is much more natural and satisfying than some of his recent parts have been. The popular screen personality plays this role with elegant true-to-life restraint, giving an altogether satisfying rendition. Louise Huff, playing opposite, makes her role exquisitely human. Besides being charming to the eye, Miss Huff's comings and goings on the screen are fraught with the naturalness requisite for a true portrayal. The recognized popularity of the stars and their fitness for the roles assigned to them in this are points the exhibitor can use in advertising to advantage. In the cast also appear John Burton as "Doc" Nelson, a very picturesque character, Eugene Pallette and J. Parks Jones.

On the eve of his wedding Stuart Kirkwood's fiancee is snatched from his arms by a man named George Rothwell. No sooner has Peggy made a successful elopement with Rothwell, however, than the mask of deceit is lifted and she beholds the man, or rather, brute, as he is. She tries to escape from him, and both fall over a cliff to their end. While risking his life in saving some miners from peril, Victor D'Armand sustains injuries from which he dies later. Stuart Kirkwood, the owner of the mine, agreeing to protect D'Armand's daughter, Renee, takes her into his home. On her return from school a few years later Stuart discovers he is madly in love with the girl, but so sure is he that his passion is without a hope that he effectively covers it with a cloak of indifference amounting to coldness. George Rothwell, Jr., the son of the man who had shattered Stuart's first love, becomes deeply enamored of Renee, not knowning the circumstances of his father's death. When he finally learns the latter, through a friend of Stuart's, he comes to the mine owner and tells him that he understands and intends to depart from the region at once. But Stuart, however, just as manlike, and willing to make a sacrifice, tells Rothwell that he need not suffer for his father's sin and that if Renee loves him he will not stand in their way. Renee, broken-hearted, confides to Stuart's pet dog her miseries, how Stuart treats her like a mere child and is blind to the fact that she loves him. She tells the dog in plain terms the state of her disappointed heart and Stuart, coming up at the moment, hears all through an open door. Almost stunned he takes the girl in his arms and so it is seen that Stuart's "whiteness" is amply rewarded.

"A Jewel in Pawn"

Ella Hall in Five-Reel Bluebird Photoplay. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

ELLA HALL again has a childish role in this picture and interprets it in her usual fashion, which delights her followers. The nature of the story makes it a fitting subject for family and children's programs. There are a number of unusual and appealing elements in the offering, which will entertain most audiences. The career of a little girl, left in the care of an old pawnbroker while her mother returns to her old home to ask aid, forms the theme of the play. A number of interesting characters enter the story, and there are pathetic and humorous incidents. The production, under the directing of Jack Conway, is satisfactory. The acting is very good. Walter Belasco as Aaron Levovitch, and Antrim Short as Jimmie, the newsboy hero, have important roles in support of the star. Others in the cast are Mrs. Maie Hall, Jack Connolly, George Pearce and Marshall Mackaye.

The play, while not extraordinary, is a good average offering, especially fitting for the neighborhood house. It holds the interest and is pleasing. A noticeable amount of padding toward the end of the play is its chief defect. The photography and settings are good.

The Story: Nora Martin is growing to young womanhood in the unwholesome environments of the tenements to the grief of her mother, who has known a better existence. For the sake of her daughter Mrs. Martin resolves to go back to her father, who had disowned her when she married against his will, to beg him to take care of Nora. But Mrs. Martin has no money for the journey and nothing to pawn. At last the old pawnbroker suggests that the mother leave Nora in "pawn." Mrs. Martin dies shortly after reaching her father's home and before she can reveal the whereabouts of her daughter. So Nora grows up as the daughter of the old pawnbroker. Jimmie, a little newsboy, also is added to the household.

Some time later a reporter writes a "human interest" story about the pawnbroker and the little girl left in "pawn." This is read by Nora's wealthy grandfather. From it he believes that the child may be his granddaughter. Nora's resemblance to her mother confirms this belief, and he takes her away.

While Nora is in school, Jimmie becomes a newspaper reporter. And when the two are grown-up, Nora finds that she cares more for Jimmie than for the men of conventional society. So the two are married at the home of the pawnbroker. Nora's grandfather is angry but eventually forgives them.

"Pass the Hash, Ann"

Latest Offering in Essanay "Black Cat" Series. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

TAKE equal portions of humor, surprise and romance, whip briskly into a sparkling, frothy mixture, light enough to be amusing but substantial enough to hold the interest, this seems to have been the recipe according to which "Pass the Hash, Ann" was concocted. The patrons to whom it is served will, we believe, like the taste. It will be enjoyed by audiences of every class.

Marguerite Clayton and Edward Arnold have the leading roles. Miss Clayton has a style of role unusual for her, as the servant in a boarding house, and enacts it very pleasingly. Direction and photography are good.

The Story: Jack Channon, having inherited a fortune from his uncle, finds a life of idleness unexciting. Just for a lark, he returns to the boarding house where he lived before he became wealthy. He has always been interested in Ann, a waitress at the boarding house, who is an unusual type, and finally he asks her to marry him. A mysterious stranger tries to kidnap Ann and prevent the marriage, but the lovers elude him and are married.

Soon after the wedding, Ann announces that she has invited her parents to visit her. Unpleasant visions of the class of people to which her parents doubtless belong trouble Jack, and he is greatly surprised when he finds himself being introduced to a haughty couple evidently of position and wealth. Ann explains that she has been masquerading as a servant in order to study the "lower classes."

"The Easiest Way"

Selznick-Clara Kimball Young Drama in Seven Parts. Reviewed by George W. Graves

EUGENE WALTER'S stage as transferred to the screen by Albert Capellani deals with a phase of life which always requires delicate handling not to give offense. Certainly the way of least resistance taken by many a stumbling woman through circumstances or choice in rare cases is not an agreeable thing to contemplate of itself, but in this picture the weakness of human nature and the inevitable course of things is portrayed with such trueness to life as well as delicacy that a drama of no little power has been constructed. In the first part of the story is this interpretation of human frailty especially convincing. We can understand how a man will forgive a woman almost anything if he sincerely loves her, and are in full sympathy with this forgiveness. However, if the man has it in his nature to forgive once we wonder why it is that he spurns the woman the second time under exactly the same conditions, especially since he has left her exposed to temptation. Yet, in view of the fact that human nature is often inconsistent, many will accept the turn of events as herein pictured as not being unnatural. On the whole, the story paints the aspect of life with which it deals in true colors; therefore the moral value of the film is indisputable, since it removes all the veneer from a sin that is a scourge of the race.

The woman who takes "the easiest way" has one's sympathies to a large extent up to the time she gives out in the hard fight to prove worthy of the man who has awakened the noblest instincts within her. We would have had more admiration for her had she held strictly to her decision no matter what the cost. However, what she does is perhaps truer to life than what she might have done—a case of the sacrifice of the heroic side of a character for the side that might be asserted in the majority of cases in life. Clara Kimball Young acts this part with her usual sincerity and feeling, communicating the emotions of the character to the audience with sure methods. Apart from her splendid acting, however, some may contend that she is not just the utterly unsophisticated type intended by the author. Joseph Kilgour gives a lifelike, polished rendition of his part, that of the "refined sensualist," while Rockliffe Fellowes and Louise Bates both distinguish themselves with flawless portrayals. The star, together with these three, afford all the talent in one picture that any audience can expect. The work of the rest of the cast is in keeping with the high standard of that of the principals.

Albert Capellani has maintained the proper atmosphere at all times, making the picture more impressive through sets which are not stagey, unique photographic effects, lighting, etc.

As interesting and dramatic entertainment for people of mature years, "The Easiest Way" can be depended upon as something out of the ordinary. To children, however (at least, so we hope), it will be a deep mystery.

The story tells of an actress who has to pay the price for her success. Before entering into her bargain with the wealthy man who has financed the show, however, it has been understood that if at any time she wishes to leave him she is free to do so. The time comes when she meets a reporter and falls deeply in love with him. She goes forth to battle with the world alone, while her lover seeks his fortune in the gold fields. At last, in desperation, Laura pushes aside her high decision and returns to the wealth and plenty of Brockton, the millionaire. Her lover, finding that she has gone the wrong road the second time, refuses to hear explanations of any kind and literally "throws her over" in a sensational scene. The result is that Laura, deserted by her lover, and soon after by Brockton, becomes a derelict, a woman "going to Montmartre and to hell."

"When Love Is Blind"

Florence La Badie in Thanhouser-Pathe Drama. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

AN ordinary production which may appeal to audiences which like simple, sentimental tales without any close connection with real life is this latest five-reel Thanhouser play starring Florence La Badie. The story, by Agnes Johnston, lacks the humor and human touches which characterized her previous plays. The production, under Frederick Sullivan, sets forth the story clearly and the acting of the cast, headed by Miss La Badie, is good. As a whole, the feature is of average value. It depends upon its pathos rather than suspense to hold an audience. It is best suited to a neighborhood house.

The Story: Eleanor Grayson, the daughter of an artist, becomes blind when a child. Her father dies shortly after. When she grows to womanhood, she is loved by a young musician, Lester Burton, who is unhappily married. He takes the girl to a specialist and has an operation performed which restores her sight. Then they separate. Eleanor has inherited her father's ability and becomes a brilliant artist.

Later, after the death of his wife, Burton seeks Eleanor. She is engaged to a man she does not love but refuses to break her promise. Circumstances place Eleanor in a compromising situation and her betrothed refuses to trust her. The engagement is thus broken and Eleanor married Burton.

"The Whip"

Eight-Reel Paragon Production of the Raleigh-Hamilton Play. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS story of the turf is highly colored with the sensational. In fact its paramount thrilling scene is one which disputes the championship of any of the most astonishing hair-raisers yet to be recorded on the long celluloid, and this because the thrill itself is not only handled with excellent spectacular effect, but the proper suspense has been engendered prior to the crash—and no one will question its being an honest-to-goodness crash. Which alludes to the screening of a train wreck—the train wreck whose realistic presentation on the stage of the Manhattan Opera House in New York was the cause of enthusiastic comment on the part of all who saw the stage play at that theater. The melodrama, by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, had its first run at the Drury Lane Theater, London.

The wrecking of a box-car by the Saratoga Express just after its precious burden in horse-flesh has been removed "in the nick of time" is such a genuine sensation that if properly advertised it alone should entice curious crowds into the theater, for there is little doubt at this well-advanced day in picture annals of the public's fascination for this sort of thing. After the race horse and its jockey have been removed by the rescuers, the fast express swoops down upon the box-car and throws it into the air with terrific impulsion. The locomotive then becomes derailed and flounders off to the side in a cloud of escaping steam, while one or two cars it is hauling assume the inevitable grotesque misalignment to the tracks. It is all there except the fearful detonation—a stupendous spectacle, as well as a rare angle on the idiosyncrasies of railroad collisions. Most of your patrons have seen the remains of such collisions after they have cooled off, so to speak. It will please them to witness just how it happens.

Of course, this smash-up is only a small part of the eight reels. The bulk of the footage leading up to the climax concerns itself with properly whetting the appetite of the spectator for "what's coming," arraying the unsympathetic characters sharply against the objects of his sympathy, so that the timely escape of the horse for which he has grown to nurse a secret fascination, and the safety of its owners, will mean something to him. The story is not so convincing that it loses the semblance of being a story. However, by the majority mind it will be adjudged adequate for the purpose of entertainment and for basing a rapid-action picture of the hunt, the race and the great out-doors. A fox hunt in the opening reel is practically a complete visualization of the noted song "A Hunting We Will Go." All of this is entirely unusual and refreshing. A subdevelopment in the story later transpires within the sombre enclosure of the Eden Musee "Chamber of Horrors," and the adventures of the two unfortunate girls who are trapped in this uninviting place at night may remaind many of the disturbed dreams they dreamt the night of their visit to the Musee.

The picture is another tribute to Maurice Tourneur's sense of the beautiful, though of necessity not so much so as some of his former productions. The talented director's skill, too, in engineering thrills is also apparent. Another of these pulse accelerators, by the way, is the wreck of an ungovernable automobile which tears away with its driver down a steep and crooked incline. The brake-bands had been deprived of their utility by the villain, or rather, the villain's tool.

Alma Hanlon and Irving Cummings do entire justice to the roles of the lovers assigned them and Paul McAllister, as the weak-minded villain has a number of good scenes. The role of his partner in society depredations is ably taken by June Elvidge, who has this sort of role well in hand. Jean Dumar handles her part, particularly the scene where she is found in a compromising position by her brother, with splendid appeal and holds down her half of the beauty claim with Miss Hanlon. Others in a well-selected cast are Warren Cook, Alfred Hemming and Dion Titherage.

"The Whip" is being shown at present by The Whip Motion Picture Co., Inc., at the Park Theater, New York.

"Sweetheart of the Doomed"

Triangle-Ince-Kay Bee Drama in Five Reels. Released April 8. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THE work of Louise Glaum as an adventuress who atones for her sins, in this is the most noteworthy thing about the film. She is kept in the center of things all the time, her splendid characterization quite justifying it. The story, in the attempt to feed the popular demand for timely subjects, turns out to be a rather elementary plot with a finish which will seem to many far-fetched. In the endeavor to propitiate for her wanton ways of the past, Honore, the notorious adventuress, turns a "sweetheart of the doomed," holding the dying men in the hospital in her arms and allowing them to think she is their sweetheart if they are delirious, and pretending to love them individually if they are not. Much of this has the appearance of representing that a soldier is content to accept vicarious love at the last moment, inasmuch as his wife, sweetheart or mother cannot be present.

Reginald Berker succeeded in surrounding the picture with a fine atmosphere and this has much to do with lending a note of conviction. Charles Gunn, Thomas Guise and Roy Laidlaw are other players in the cast. The picture has some good dramatic situations and it cannot be said that it will not suit the majority of people. But this is not a film of marked individuality, nor is it exceptional in any way. It makes an attraction of lukewarm interest altogether.

"War on Three Fronts"

Kleinschmidt's War Pictures Released Through Selznick. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THESE six reels of film contain plenty that is interesting concerning the mechanical side of war and much, too, that is abhorrent and gruesome in the extreme, although these intimate bits were taken, of course, with the rest, as matters of government record. Otherwise it would be inexcusable to put the sacred intimacy of a soldier's dying fall before the public in the name of entertainment. Mr. Kleinschmidt, the American war correspondent who took these remarkable views from the Austrian side on three firing lines, the Russian, Servian and Italian, faced the danger of death in a number of instances in order to get sensational, close views of the fighting.

A man in the trenches sinks into a huddled heap within twenty feet of the camera; another is blown to atoms by a bursting bomb at a greater distance. A whole line of men ordered to advance under heavy fire swept on and gained their point, but not until the rapid-firing guns had mowed down dozens of them in their tracks. The charge is not shown, but its grim effects—a quantity of the dead—are shown in huddled disarray in the straight line of their attack. This gives an idea of the rapidity with which the machine guns do their work. These are practically the only excessively gruesome scenes in the picture, and that they suffice will be the verdict of most any audience.

Some of the interesting phases of the war as shown in this film are the pulling up of mines; the shelling of an aeroplane in the skies (the machine came down unharmed); a number of dizzy views from an aeroplane, showing bomb pits and the dismantled dwellings of the city of Belgrade, Servia; the method by which the proper range is telegraphed to the bomb-throwing guns from a balloon a number of miles in the rear of the trenches; and some views of a submarine submerging and coming to the surface.

At this time it is undeniable that these pictures are against the sentiment of our country, and it seems that the exhibitor might do well to think twice before he books them. While the film has the advantage of showing what horrors are to be evaded through an impregnable state of preparedness, it may also be translated with a different significance by all-American audiences.

"Builders of Castles"

Edison Five-Reel Drama Released Through K. E. S. E. April 16. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

MADE some time ago, this offering is handicapped by technical faults now generally overcome in screen plays. The stilted style of acting, combined with an apparent effort to "register" effects, and the choppy, disconnected method of presenting the story are distinctly of another day. The title of the play is pleasing and at the outset it appears that a rather unusual theme has been chosen, the dangers in various get-rich-quick schemes. But the atmosphere of gloom which envelopes the story, and the slow, unrealistic method of telling it kill the spectator's interest. Also the religious element is too much emphasized to appeal to the modern audience.

The play is lacking in reality and in humor. The characters are broadly drawn, the villain being the suave, slinky sort, the heroine a spiritless, helpless type, except in the last act when she escapes from her captor in a melodramatic fashion, and remainder of the cast are typical of their stations, with a mysterious "Stranger" added to personify the religious element.

Audiences which like melodrama and which like vice and virtue drawn definitely in black and white may like the offering. Patrons educated to modern picture standards will either be annoyed or amused at the unreality of this.

The Story: Gittens (Marc MacDermott) is the head of a swindling scheme by which unsuspecting persons invest their savings in the hope of "owning their own homes." When a great many people have invested, Gittens robs his own company, but lays the blame on his partner.

The effect of the loss of the money on the various characters is shown. Marie, a girl engaged to marry a rather priggish young minister, loses all her money. Gittens, who is interested in her, manages further to separate her from her fiance and at last gets her into his power completely. "The Stranger," although his wife had died from the shock when her money was lost in the investment scheme, consoles and aids the sufferers. At last Marie secures evidence against Gittens. He is brought to justice, some of the wrong done is righted, and Marie and her lover are reunited, the latter having learned through "The Stranger" the true meaning of his profession.

"The Page Mystery"

Five-Part Peerless-World Mystery Drama. Reviewed by George W. Graves

CARLYLE BLACKWELL, Arthur Ashley and June Elvidge feature in this interesting story of mystery which, on the whole, provides very good entertainment. There are a number of surprise turns which add zest to the story's telling, these being well handled. Things begin to get complicated when, near the high tide of events, we find two people on the trail of the villain with loaded revolvers, and one more having reasons to be on his trail. We see two revolvers fired at the culprit and the mystery is, which shot took effect? Add to this the fact that all the known evidence points to another and we have a mix-up that will hold the attention of the average spectator.

Most of the action takes place at a mountain lodge, a veritable beauty spot in the mountain snow, and these snowy backgrounds afford chances for wonderful specimens of artistic photography. Some of the outdoor amusements of the members of the house party are not at all out of place inasmuch as they are not allowed to occupy too much footage. The interior scenes are made so fascinating that the attraction and livableness of the place and its surroundings are sure to captivate the next-to-nature advocate. The direction of Harry Knoles aimed at realism and seldom went wide of the mark. June Elvidge steps out of her habitual heavy character and assumes the opposite type with conviction and charm. Arthur Ashley makes a very unlovely character all the more hateful, and so fulfils his duties. However, either due to the director or himself, some of his scenes have a little tinge of the theatric. In showing that he is very well suited to his part, Carlyle Blackwell proves that it was well suited to him. Frank R. Adams deserves credit for a story which is not hackneyed in its development and which meets the main requirements of acceptable screen entertainment.

"The Railroad Raiders"

Chapters Two and Three of the Latest Signal-Mutual Serial. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE impression of unusual value which the first installment of this serial gave is confirmed by chapters two and three. The quality of the production is of feature standard in story, acting and directing, while the photography, especially in the scenes of the trains at night, is beautiful enough to be especially advertised.

The story is more realistic than the usual serial plot and for this reason the thrills are more genuine and the interest more intent. The excellent direction, by J. P. McGowan, causes the play really to live. The daring stunts of the players, especially Leo Maloney's from-window-to-window journey outside a swiftly moving train, add punch to the tale. The various characters in the play are well depicted.

The Story: After Helen's father has been unjustly convicted and sent to prison, Morton Webb, head of the division, gives Helen a position as his secretary. Webb neglects business for dissipation but Helen's gratitude makes her try to aid him. When a special train, carrying English nobility, is to come over the division, Webb gives Burke, his assistant, charge of arrangements. Burke is a crook and plans to steal the jewels the party is said to be carrying. He has imitation jewels made and substitutes these for the real, which he steals and throws from the train to a confederate.

A few minutes later the special is held up and robbed by the gang of railroad raiders, led by the former station master. Through Helen's bravery, the gang is routed and the jewels are recovered. Helen sees in the gang the man who resembles her father and realizes the plot through which her father was trapped. But the man escapes. Lady Melrose, owner of the jewels, discovers that those recovered from the gang are imitations.

Through a blunder, Burke's confederate did not receive the real jewels and they are lost. Later a section hand finds them and, not knowing their value, gives them to his little daughter. Helen sees and takes them. She gives them to Webb, urging him to recover his position, lost because of his carelessness, by returning them to the owners. Burke sees Helen and Webb with the jewels and as the chapter ends, arranges for their arrest.

"Skinner's Bubble"

Essanay-K. E. S. E. Sequel to "Skinner's Dress Suit." Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

AS enjoyable as "Skinner's Dress Suit," that's really all one need say about this picture to an exhibitor who has seen the first "Skinner" story. The unusual success of that comedy-drama made the announcement that a sequel was to be offered of great interest. Its boxoffice value has already been established, for anyone who saw the first story will wish to see the second. Only the question of quality remained. And a view of this picture settles that.

Harry Beaumont, who directed "Skinner's Dress Suit," is the author as well as the director of "Skinner's Bubble." The second offering is of the same quality as the first and contains the same delightful humor and character drawing, and a story as refreshing and human as the first. It is a further triumph for Mr. Beaumont and for the cast of characters, especially Bryant Washburn and Hazel Daly. It is a picture any exhibitor can book and advertise strongly, confident that every patron will enjoy it to an unusual extent.

The Story: Skinner, his head a bit turned by his first success, decides to go into business for himself. He believes himself a future Napoleon of finance. Honey, his wife, does not doubt this, but she does not like to give up the little suburban home for a city apartment. Nevertheless, the Skinners move to the city, Honey saddened as the home is dismantled and the house listed for sale.

that Skinner fears ruin. However, when his former partners call, he bribes the office boy and the stenographer to appear unusually busy, and by various ways convinces them that he is succeeding. As a result, they offer him an opportunity to return with added prestige to his old firm. He accepts, and he and Honey move back to the suburban home without any regrets for their fine city dwelling.

"How Uncle Sam Prepares"

Five-Part Topical Produced for Hanover Film. Released States Rights. Reviewed by George W. Graves

A TRUE film of the hour, this interesting, educational and patriotic collection of pictured data showing in detail many branches of the vast movement of preparation now under way throughout the country, should be a success anywhere on the soil of the Stars and Stripes. The picture preaches but little; the silent eloquence of the scenes is more forceful. These pictures do not dwell upon the necessity for the country's awakening, but show how it is awakening in a way to make every one confident that Uncle Sam will be perfectly able to take care of himself. The picture contends for universal military training, but it has not been constructed mainly as an argument for anything. It is just a methodical, comprehensive review of the country's military and naval activities at the present time with especial respect to the training of raw recruits.

At the beginning is a sort of prologue showing Uncle Sam's awakening and his attentive listening to the solemn counsel and warning of our brothers across the sea. Then begins a brief review of the country's prosperous industries at the present time, followed by the actual scenes of preparation. They include the making of camp, field bakery, horse training, bayonet exercise, hardening soldiers to exposure, signal practice, maneuvers of field artillery, the attack of a machine gun company, loading pack mules, etc., etc. Some very interesting views are given of one of our battleships manned entirely by naval reserves, men from the ranks of clerks, factory-owners, merchants, bankers, etc. An unusual scene is the erecting of a portable wireless apparatus in record time—65 seconds.

In a striking way the film shows the unity of thought and purpose throughout our land by a little sketch showing a Southern colored mammy sending her son forth as her husband went in the Civil War. The colored people, too, are shown enlisting.

"How Uncle Sam Prepares" cannot help being a success.

Ince Makes Naval Training Film

Thomas H. Ince, with a corps of directors and camera men, has been working on a film at the United States Naval Training Station on Goat Island, in San Francisco Bay. The film is to be presented to the United States Government as a patriotic gift, to assist in recruiting.

The picture shows in complete detail how a civilian recruit is trained to be an able seaman. Captain Durrel, in command of the training station, and the entire station, acting under instructions from the Navy Department, suspended the regular program for a week, and provided apprentice seaman by sections, companies and battalions, to illustrate the various phases of training.

The film also shows how recruits are trained for trades. The scenario was developed by Ince himself, in consultation with government officials.

A BUSINESS MAN'S FAVORITE

MANY are the film "fans" among New York business men whose tastes in the matter of film drama makes them as discriminating, as finicky, and as critical as women, and they have their favorites of the films just as frequently. One of these New Yorkers, a typical American business man, with an appetite for pictures, boasts as his idol and favorite the Vitagraph star, Harry T. Morey.

He tells why he likes Morey, giving reasons which no doubt fit the case of other Morey admirers, who have not stopped to analyze their preferences. This man's ideas about actors will be a guide to the exhibitor who has bait out for the busy business man.

"There isn't anything of the theatric about Harry Morey," he declares. "If there ever was, he has got rid of it most effectually.

"Women and children and girls of the giddy age no longer constitute the motion picture audiences. The hard-headed man of business and the working men are as fond of good movie shows as the women.

"The screen people act as they do in real life. We don't have to listen to the mouthings of the bad actor, nor the simperings of the lackadaisacal society snip. On the spoken stage, you get some of the rottenest specimens of declamation and the most unnatural inflections of speech imaginable. The picture saves us from all of that rot.

"Harry Morey is the one man who especially attracts me to the moving picture show. Whenever I see his name on the poster outside the theater, and I have the time, I go in to see the play. I am sure to see some interesting or thrilling episode enacted as it would be in real life, with no extra frills about it to detract from the genuineness of the scene.

"He is always there with the goods. He is a big, strong fellow with a manly face, and you realize that he is a real man, every inch of him, and just the right sort to do the things you see him do. There are others, I know, but Morey catches me every time.

"Everything that Morey does, he does well. The wonderful acting of Harry Morey in the role of Captain Waverlike is quite the best thing I have see that this very capable actor has done for the camera.

"Morey is a big man physically and mentally. I know how to judge men, even in pictures. There is nothing of the namby-pamby about him. They say he likes the outdoors; he rides horseback, swims, motors to keep himself in condition for his duties on the stage. You see, I know all about my favorite actor. I read all the stories about him, just as I go to see all his pictures."

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

Shirley Mason has received word from Johannesburg, in South Africa, of the marriage of her sister, Edna Flugrath, to Harold Shaw, well known here as an actor and photoplay director. Mr. Shaw has recently completed a twelve-reel spectacle for the London Films, Inc., with Miss Flugrath heading the cast. By way of a honeymoon, Shaw will take his bride to India to film another extra reel picture, followed by a third feature to be made in China. Mrs. Shaw hopes to return to America to see her sisters, Miss Mason and Viola Dana, in about three years if nothing interferes with her plans.

William D. Taylor is returning to his old love, the Morosco-Pallas studios, where Frank Garbutt, millionaire and business genius, and Charles Eyton, old time theatrical man and sportsman, hold sway.

"Big Bill' Blaisdell, well known in vaudeville, is making his screen debut via Balboa studio.

There are interesting coincidences in the similarity of names at the Balboa studios, for instance: William Bertram and Bertram Bracken (both directors); Ruth Roland and Roland Bottomley (both stars); Harry Harvey and Harvey Leavitt (director and construction chief, respectively). None of these people are related except by being members of the Balboa "family."

Robert Thornby, well known motion picture director, has been added to the staff of the Lasky studio.

They have let Mae Murray out of jail and she is expiating her past sins by becoming a nurse in her next Lasky-Paramount picture.

The past record of Roy McRae, technical director of the Western Vitagraph studio, consists of eight years' stock acting and co-assistant directing, three years at Universal City as assistant and technical director, and some time at the Vogue-Mutual studio.

When William Duncan took his Vitagraph company up to Mount Lowe to make exterior scenes for the "Hearts of Flame" serial, he was unable to take to the peak the big horses used at the studio and expected to use those already up there. Then he remembered that his own horse had white stockings on its hind legs and a tiny white star on its forehead, while his mountain steed wore stockings in front and a full black-face. However he remedied this with a pail of kalsomine by painting out its fore-heels, putting white stockings on its rear legs, and giving it a white face and flecked hide.

William Garwood, who plays opposite Mabel Taliaferro in the Metro-Rolfe production, "A Magdalene of the Hills," was formerly an actor-director with Thanhouser, Majestic and other companies, but has decided to concentrate his efforts on acting.

"The Feast of the Dreams," an early Indian rite, including a picturesque dance in which large numbers of people are used, is reproduced in the Metro-Yorke screen version of Robert W. Chambers' novel, "The Hidden Children," starring Harold Lockwood and May Allison.

When Herbert Brenon was cutting his Selznick-Picture, "The Eternal Sin," in a theater in Atlantic City one morning, a passerby dropped in and watched the story unfold. When the picture was finished he approached Mr. Brenon and said, "Here's the money, there was no one at the door. It is the best picture I have seen in this theater yet." Brenon took the dime.

William Calhoun, who plays the role of chief of detectives in "The Great Secret," the Bushman-Bayne Metro serial, is an inventor as well as an actor and has ten patented inventions to his credit. He is also an artist in oils and water colors and has exhibited in the art galleries of Chicago and San Francisco.

"The Cure"

Mutual-Chaplin Comedy Released April 16. Reviewed by George W. Graves

ANOTHER two reels of joyous slap-stick, employing a number of old "gags" but a greater number of new ones fresh from the garden of foolish growths, "The Cure" is a worthy successor to "The Rink" and "Easy Street," not to mention the long line of Chaplin's other laugh-getters. The picture commences quietly and politely but works up to a veritable whirlwind of laughter as the cure, not that intended by the officials at the health resort, lays its irresistible hold on the inmates of the institution. And a queer institution it is—the kind that only can be thought of in terms of the moving picture slap-stick. This particular abode of the infirm has within its four walls all of the comforts of home together with many health-resorting torments. There is everything from the salle de turkish bath to the marvelous fountain whose waters are supposed to cure drunkards.

Two more full measures of joyous slapstick.

The major part of the comedy centers around the troubles that follow an accidental introduction into this fountain of various intoxicants. The whole assemblage within the four healing walls become victims of the mysterious mixture, even our friend Charlie, who, thinking it is only water, makes the great sacrifice of drinking it "for her sake." Perhaps the most enjoyable comedy stunts transpire in the Turkish bath—the way that Charlie slips through the fingers, as it were, of the broad-chested rough-neck who is about to beat him into a pulp on the marble slab, brings down laughs from all corners of the house.

The revolving doors, the black-moustached and black-eye-browed giant with the gout, the circle of straight-laced prudes, the water tank stuff, and "the girl" are some of the elements entering into the action. Edna Purviance as the girl scintillates with her usual brightness and the support is good as usual.

That Charlie Chaplin has not forsaken acrobatics nor lost any of his former alertness is shown in detail by the film. The picture is up in every way to expectations, and it can be honestly predicted that "The Cure" is a sure cure for the blues.

"Birth"

Five-Reel Educational of Eugenic Film Co. Released State Rights. Reviewed by George W. Graves

"BIRTH," a remarkable educational picture now showing at the Eltinge Theater to audiences composed of adult women exclusively, is a film of high purpose and pure motives. Its mission is to teach mothers and near mothers the care of the young from the moment of birth to the age of six, how to avoid disastrous mistakes, and how to bring the infant successfully through the months of delicacy into robust, healthy childhood. The picture is not a drama; it has no story whatever. It is simply a series of carefully directed pictorial lessons leaving out nothing that the mother should know. Mothers and mothers-to-be who hope to preserve the instruction given would do well tc approach the film with pencil and paper. It is something which needs to be studied and heeded.

Apart from the scientific instruction, however, there is the entertaining side of the picture, which every lover of children will glory in. The film is alive with the big-eyed, happy faces of infants. In the nursery adjoining the New York institution where the whole picture was filmed are presented many interesting phases of the care of the young approaching the age of six, but these are not as interesting, nor are they as vital, as the elaborate pictures showing the proper and natural care of infants.

"Birth" is all of a conscientious and painstaking "presentation of sanctity and duties of motherhood." It is another demonstration of how educational pictures can accomplish what educational books cannot.

"The Butcher Boy"

Arbuckle-Paramount in Two Reels Released April 23. Reviewed by George W. Graves

FATTY ARBUCKLE'S first Paramount is a winner. It has even more laughs than the most sanguine hopes of the slap-stick "bug" had probably cherished. The scene is laid in a country meat shop and grocery store with plenty of steak and sausages on hand, flour bags (throwing size) nearby, high shelves built for ruthless demolition, and all the other things needful to put the place in a state of full preparedness. Mostly every object in sight figures in the foolish comedy "business," a large part of which is refreshingly novel even for this brand of comedy. A molasses barrel well to the front of the set figures largely in the proceedings, as the more suspicious ones will prophesy the moment they set their eyes on its innocent form. A very queer contrivance which gets the laughs is a coffee grinding outfit operated by the footpower of a dog running on a treadmill. Fatty's dog in a later scene shows that he can register expression as nicely as the rest of them, and perform the other duties of an actor.

After the grocery store is wrecked by the terrific battle transpiring therein (effects of bursting bombs being secured by small-size flour bags which whiz in all directions), the action moves to a boarding school, where we have Fatty dressed in girl's knee dresses. Ludicrous situation follows ludicrous situation in this productive setting and Fatty finally gets the girl he has been tirelessly pursuing.

After the star himself, Al St. John comes in for a round of applause. He doesn't keep any laughs from Fatty, but he makes plenty for himself. Among his accomplishments are some funny stunts on a bicycle. Josephine Stevens is a lucky find for the part of the girl, and "Buster" Keaton makes his first appearance in pictures a praiseworthy one. Without resorting for a moment to the vulgar, "The Butcher Boy" is a continuous round of laughs from start to finish. If the Arbuckle comedies keep up this pace some of the other slapstick makers will have to look to their laurels.

Fatty Arbuckle's first Paramount has more laughs than the most sanguine hopes of the slapstick "bug" had cherished.

National Theater Tax Proposed

MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY FIGHTING NEW YORK TAX MEASURE

SECRETARY McADOO has recommended a bill at Washington placing a tax of ten per cent on theatricals in general. This tax, while applying to the whole field of amusement, is especially important to the motion picture industry in the face of the present state levy being considered at Albany.

The tax is collectible through the stamp system and it will be required that to every theater ticket sold either for motion pictures or any other branch of the amusement field a ten per cent stamp must be affixed.

The measure has, as yet, only been recommended for the consideration of Congress and has not been introduced through the regular channels, but it is almost certain that it will meet with the opposition of theatrical managers throughout the country.

The attitude of the film trade has not yet crystallized into a definite expression of opinion. However, it has already been stated through the National Association, in regard to the Albany levy, that no fight will be made against any federal war revenue.

Fight Against New York Tax

Two hundred of the most prominent men in the motion picture business appeared in the New York State Senate Chamber on April 20, when the Senate Judiciary Committee heard arguments on the bill introduced by the Wheeler Joint Investigating Committee.

They attacked the bill as being unjust and discriminatory; as branding members of the film industry as "outlaws" and as one not alone of taxation but of regulation. They argued that it is unconstitutional, in that it would create an arbitrary authority to govern the destinies of the business, in contravention of the constitution of the state.

The film representatives claimed that instead of the taxation measure raising an annual revenue of between $125,000 and $175,000, as the Wheeler Committee asserted, it would impose a yearly levy of approximately $700,000 on the trade.

Film Men Show Statistics

The fight against the measure was opened by a statistician, who gave evidence that instead of taxing the industry only $125,000, as asserted, the proposed measure would mulct it of fully $700,000 annually, and that if other states were to follow the lead of New York it would mean a $5,000,000 annual tax and the collapse of the business. He also pointed out that this probably was the first time in history where any business was to be taxed on gross profits.

It was shown that, under the present bill, the commissioner could at his pleasure put any motion picture concern out of business by revoking its license. His agents could invade the studios of the producers at will. He would have the absolute power to decide what was not to be shown on the screen. And there would be no appeal from his decision.

Mr. Littleton and Attorney Gustavus A. Rogers, appearing for the Fox Film Company, charged that the proposed act was unconstitutional and would never hold in the courts. Mr. Littleton showed that the policy of establishing such an "oligarchy" over a legitimate business as is proposed in the bill presented by the joint legislative committee to investigate the motion picture business was abandoned by the state years ago.

Senator J. Henry Walters presided at the meeting.

Adolph Zukor told the committee that the producers were already taxed to the limit. He said that they were paying taxes to the federal, state and city governments and that it was about all the producers were able to stand.

Unheard of Regulation

Martin W. Littleton said:

Under this act, the commissioner would have the right to say who should do business and who not. I submit this would be something unheard of in the history of this state. Do we need to be told that you men will drop the plan?

This bill creating the new department would leave every one at the mercy of this commissioner and from his decision there would be no appeal. It would turn over to one man the sovereignty that belongs to the legislature. One man would be substituted for the state.

Peter Brady, representing the Allied Printing Trades, charged that an attempt was being made by this new plan devised by the joint committee to take the amusements of the poor away.

"Why don't you make the rich people pay?" he asked, "instead of making the workingman pay this tax, the moving picture houses are the workingman's theater and he will have to bear the tax in the long run."

William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, made a speech against the bill, declaring the motion picture industry would not fight any tax that might be imposed upon amusements in general.

"You are asking us the equivalent of 10 per cent on our gross profits," Brady said, "taxing us on productions regardless of our losses, yet you seem favorably inclined to accept a bill recently brought before you taxing the net profits of corporations only 3 per cent. If that is not indicative of discrimination, then what is it?"

Defense of the Bill

Former Senator Harvey D. Hinman, special counsel to the Wheeler Investigating Committee, who aided in drafting the present measure, presented the arguments for the bills. He asserted that, notwithstanding the statements by men of the industry that they were not making money at this time, there were many firms which were becoming wealthy through their big profits. He quoted figures that were presented at the investigation in New York, but he did not endeavor to mention the firms whose books were sadly covered with deficits.

At the conclusion of his argument, Senator Hinman informed the Senate Judiciary Committee, of which J. Henry Walters of Syracuse, a Republican, is chairman, that there might be some provision in the measure which would stand revision. He added that if this measure is not acceptable, some bill should be drawn which would impose a tax on the industry.

CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENCY

David G. Rodgers, Prominent Exhibitor of Minneapolis, Throws His Hat Into the Ring—Against Instruction of Delegates to Convention

"I am firmly against the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest or any of the state branches that are affiliated with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America instructing their delegates to the July Chicago Convention.

"This savors too much of old line politics.

"The men that introduce the old time tactics might think that they are building up a machine in a new manner, but believe me it is too much like the ward healing, gum shoe politics of long ago.

"The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America is a trade organization and should completely eradicate petty politics.

"Every state league should send its delegates uninstructed.

David G. Rodgers, of Minneapolis, candidate for the presidency of the M. P. E. L. of America, at Chicago Convention election.

"If they haven't confidence in the ability and integrity of their delegates they should not send any delegates."

These are the convictions of David G. Rodgers, chairman of the convention committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest.

Mr. Rodgers has been approached by many prominent exhibitors, not only in the northwest, but throughout the country, and pressure has been brought to bear upon him until he has finally decided to be a candidate for president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America at the Chicago convention in July.

A campaign committee was organized for Mr. Rodgers and to this committee will be added prominent exhibitors throughout the country from time to time. Thomas J. Hamlin, editor of Amusements, has been appointed chairman of the publicity committee for the David G. Rodgers' campaign.

Exhibitors that deplore petty politics or domineering, selfish tactics, have determined to center upon Mr. Rodgers as the ideal man for this important position, according to Mr. Hamlin.

Chicago Theaters Show Mutuals

EXHIBITORS HOLD CONVENTION

Northwest Exhibitors Gather at Minneapolis for Grand Picture Ball—Attended by Stars from Several Prominent Studios

There will be a three-day convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest, in Minneapolis, Minnesota, beginning May 1. Conventions will also be held in Des Moines, Iowa, April 27 and 28 and in Fargo April 29-30.

The three-day convention in Minneapolis is scheduled for Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday and there will be two business sessions a day at the West Hotel and three strenuous nights of entertainment, which is reported to be free. A Broadway cabaret, a big banquet, and a grand ball with motion picture stars in attendance will be features of the occasion.

Rose Tapley, the popular Vitagraph star, has already wired Manager Howard that she will be in Minneapolis for the three days, and George Spoor has announced that he will transport some Essanay stars to Minneapolis for the Grand Picture Ball.

At least one hundred and fifty North Dakota exhibitors are expected at the Fargo meeting, which precedes the Minneapolis Northwest Convention Sunday and Monday. President Hartman of Mandan and Secretary Burch of Valley City expect a very successful meeting.

The officers and committees of the Minneapolis convention will occupy quarters at the West Hotel before the convention, to make the preliminary arangements of the convention schedule.

There are two hundred and fifty theaters in good standing represented in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest. In the twin cities the fifty personal members represent eighty theaters out of the one hundred and twenty theaters in Mineapolis and St. Paul. The actual personal membership in the Northwest corporation is one hundred and forty-one, although two hundred and fifty theaters are represented throughout the six states. One member owns eight theaters.

Outside the Twin cities the membership runs as follows: Fifty-one members from Minnesota, each representing from one to three theaters. Eleven personal members in Wisconsin, each representing from one to three theaters. Eleven members in South Dakota; nine members in North Dakota; three members in Iowa; one personal member in Upper Michigan and one personal member in Montana. This is actually a deplorable state of affairs and demonstrates that there is strength in localizing. In other words, the various states represented in the Northwest corporation should organize separate state leagues and develop them thoroughly. These state leagues could then affiliate direct with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. There should be an attendance of at least one thousand exhibitors in Minneapolis next May 1-2-3, from the six states, prepared to organize strong state leagues.

David G. Rodgers, chairman of the 1917 convention, predicts that "the convention at Minneapolis will be the most successful ever held and that there will be more exhibitors present than were here during the last three conventions combined."

Fred Herrington, national organizer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, will be there as will also President Lee Ochs.

Big Film Shipment

What is said to be the largest shipment of finished film that has ever been sent from a manufacturing plant was forwarded to New York last week from Universal City. The shipment consisted of sixty-seven reels of a variety of photoplays from one-part comedies and dramas up to five-part dramas and comedy-dramas.

Universal is filming "A Soldier of the Legion," a feature production with Irene Hunt.

SWEET DREAMS

THE following P. A. story gets the prize this month:

"William N. Selig has granted the use of a large plot of ground in the rear of the Selig studios, Chicago, to the Selig actors and actresses. The players recently decided to till the soil, grow potatoes and to sell the crop for the benefit of the American Red Cross fund. The stars report early in the morning and both men and women can be seen armed with spades, hoes, and garden rakes, cultivating the ground preparatory to planting seed potatoes. The news of the action of the Selig Stock Company in Chicago has spread to the Pacific Coast studios. Mr. Selig has granted permission to his Los Angeles stars to raise potatoes if they so desire. Next week Tom Santschi, Bessie Eyton, Vivian Reed, Eugenie Besserer and other stars propose to start raising 'garden truck.'"

As we remarked in the patch of persiflage before, one of the best things the Chicago Pathe office ever did was to get a Bunn on.

The Pathe market place in the Mallers building has given way to extensive Pathe parlors in the Consumers' building, and everybody is glad to see business booming.

Erin go prosit!

Hal Cooley tells a good story of the time when he first went into pictures. He was appearing in khaki costume and was full of dignity and nerves. His cup of joy brimmed over when he overheard an old lady remark to a friend, "Oh, dear, Madeline, do look at that boy scout! Isn't he the cutest thing!"

May Irwin is one of the few stars of the speaking stage who declines to be lured away by the movies, unless—but let May tell it.

"Movies?" she repeated after an interviewer, "I did one movie and it was so fierce I swore never again to face the camera. You know I idealize art. You know how sacred to me are the traditions—every single tradition of the glorious footlights and the sanctified realm of the theater, and you ask when I'm going to desert these ideals for the camera. You ask me when I am going to leave behind me the memories, the recollections, the hallowed walks of the legitimate, that I have slaved for, the legitimate which saw me wax fat in purse and waistline. You ask me when I am going to leave this and pose before a tintype box?"

"Yes, yes," he said breathlessly. "When, when?"

"When, when?" she repeated. "When somebody offers me enough money."

DOG GONE YOU BILL!

Below are a couple of the stanzas of a paprika poem received a few days ago by Bill Hart. They say the author is a perfect lady but we don't believe it. She's a perfect woman—

"I like you when you bite your words in two.
I like the way you wear a cartridge belt;
And when you bring an automat to view
There's daylight going through some devil's pelt.

"You're just delicious when you swear and drink,
And scowl into your liquor, or look sad;
Or roll the mean white of your eyes,
And think, and swear "carrambo!" and look hellish mad."

1917 Exposition to Outdo All Others

MANAGEMENT APPEALS TO EXHIBITORS—DELEGATES ELECTED

EVERY year the story goes out that the annual exposition and convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will be larger than any that has been held before. That story has always been true, because the conventions have grown steadily and rapidly.

And it is true to a greater extent this year than ever, that this year's exposition will far outdo any other in the history of the industry.

As practically everybody knows, the 1917 show will be held in Chicago, July 14 to 22, inclusive. Ludwig Schindler is the exposition director and he with his committees have started the machinery going at a swift pace to make the coming show something that will surprise the whole industry, even those who are familiar with the successes of the expositions held in the past.

Every live exhibitor in the United States, if he can possibly be present, will come to the Chicago show and will take away a thousand benefits which will more than make up for the time and money he spent. The same is true of those connected with every other branch of the industry.

Organization a Necessity

Many important changes in the industry were taken up at the last convention, and progressive steps in all the branches have been the outcome of its action. Now, if ever, the industry must have organization. It is confronted on all sides by evils in the form of unjust taxation, censorship, and many others too numerous to mention and in order to meet and defeat these evils the action must be taken by one big, strong unit which will include each state in this union. The League in New York, Indiana, Illinois and Pennsylvania has strength, likewise in other states, but what the managers wish to have at the coming convention is a representation from every state from Maine to California. The directors of the big show say to the exhibitor:

"If you are an exhibitor in a state that is not a member of the National League, it will be well worth your while to attend the coming convention. We want to meet you. We want to know what you are up against in your home state and town, and what is more we want to help you. You may say that you have gotten along all these years without a league.

"The United States has also gotten along with a very small army and an inadequate navy, but now in time of danger we all agree that the $7,000,000,000 would never have been voted—the 10% or 15% tax on your receipts would never have been though of if we were in a state of preparedness that would make any foreign power think twice before they tramped on Uncle Sam's toes. Organization means Preparedness and should be the watchword of every exhibitor."

Exposition and Convention Together

The manufacturers are very much pleased to know that the exposition and convention are to be held in the same building. It means that the exhibitors will be able to attend the exposition, meet the manufacturers and still attend to their convention duties.

Ludwig Schindler is in New York and working hard on the exposition. His reports are very encouraging and the manufacturers are anxious to secure choice locations for the coming show.

Stars to Be Present

The stars are also very anxious to learn all the details of the coming exposition and are hoping to arrange their business plans so that they may be in Chicago during July.

Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge and Robert Warwick are sure to attend as the Selznick-Pictures Corporation is planning on an elaborate exhibit, and Mr. Selznick has promised to have all his stars present.

Delegates to Convention

The M. P. E. L. of Illinois has appointed the following list of delegates to the National Convention and alternatives:

Joseph Hopp, Chicago, chairman; William E. Heaney, Alfred Hamburger, William J. Sweeney and Peter J. Schaefer, Chicago; G. M. Lutterell, Jacksonville; W. W. Watts, Springfield; Dee Robinson, Peoria; Edward Kunz, Springfield; C. J. Law, Pana; F. H. Franke, Chicago.

CHICAGO DELEGATES

Robert H. Levy, I. Berkson, John Haag, Paul Sittner, John Frundt, George D. Hopkinson, M. S. Ludick, Fred W. Hartman, Louis Zahler, Sid Faller.

ALTERNATIVES

Abe Balaban, Chicago; Mrs. M. McFadden, Chicago; Joseph Trinz, Chicago; Julius Alcock, Chicago; Fred W. Schaefer, Chicago; W. Bradley, Ottawa; William Sauvage, Alton; A. Siegfried, Decatur; Harold Johnson, Jacksonville; Max Schwartz, Chicago; Sidney Smith, Chicago; John Bobeng, Chicago; N. S. Johnson, Chicago; Harry C. Miller, Chicago; Charles Stewart, Chicago; D. L. Schwartz, Chicago; M. M. Ruben, Joliet; Walter Johnson, Chicago; Sid Selig, Chicago; W. E. Burford, Aurora.

Remember, you should be there, too. Lay your plans now to be in the big bandwagon in Chicago, July 14 to 22.

Theater Gains Recruits

Thirty recruits enlisted in the navy at the New Theater, Baltimore, during the week of April 8, while "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," Greater Vitagraph's preparedness picture was having its first seven day run of a two weeks' booking.

Army and navy officers spoke at every performance during the week, addressing their appeals chiefly to the women in the audience, asking the women to do nothing that would prevent their male relatives and friends from enlisting. In answer to this form of appeal one woman appeared on the stage and announced that she had made her two sons enlist and that she was sorry she had no more sons to give to her country. The other woman said she had enlisted her only son.

One young woman who witnessed the opening performance volunteered her services as an impromptu recruiting officer and in the six following days had persuaded three young men to enlist.

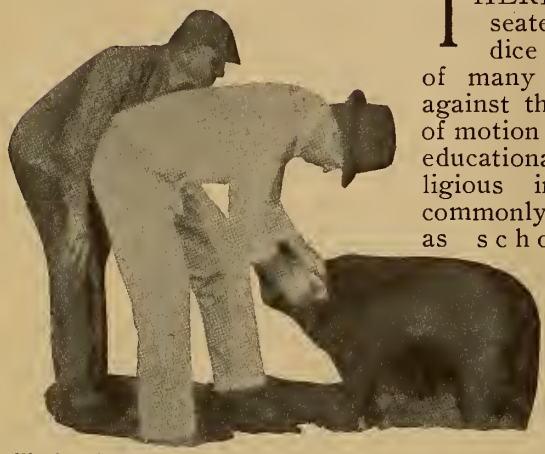
The gross business done at the New Theater during the week of April 9 is said to have been the largest ever done in a picture house in Baltimore.

The Nestor Company at Universal City is filming "The Dark Deed" in one act, featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, with Edith Roberts as ingenue.

School Pictures and Theater Pictures

BY C. A. REHM

Secretary Atlas Educational Film Company.



Would Miss Hog's vaccination scene thrill your audiences?

THERE is a deep-seated prejudice on the part of many exhibitors against the showing of motion pictures in educational and religious institutions, commonly spoken of as schools and churches. The exhibitor who fights against this movement is fighting his own best interest, and if he would co-operate instead of opposing, not only he, but the motion picture business would be benefited.

If the average exhibitor had an accurate conception of how many people there are who really have never seen a motion picture, and could not be reached through any other method but the school or church, he would boost the proposition just as hard as he is fighting it now.

Would Your Patrons Enjoy Hog Post Mortem?

A thrilling drama with a hog playing the leading role and the subsequent sacrifice for science, the post-mortem, etc., for the punch, wouldn't be much of a head-liner for any theater. Still as long as hogs are raised, the farmer needs to receive instruction as to the proper and improper methods of combating cholera, and what better method can be used than by means of motion pictures in rural schools?

Does the use of such kind of pictures stimulate or hurt the theater business? Analyze carefully and there is but one answer. The main trouble is that real educational pictures are actually scarce, and while most educators concede the great value of the motion picture for educational purposes, they are not able to get the kind of a program they really want, hence they pick out an assorted program and run an entertainment, so to speak.

Eighty-seven per cent of our impressions we get through the eye, visual instruction is being adopted wherever possible, and for the very fact that pictures are such a power in the educational field, nothing can keep them out of the school. Then, again, if a church runs one or two pictures on Sundays, surely no one can say that this is going to satisfy the taste for moving pictures. On the contrary it will help to make "fans" out of people who have heretofore been so prejudiced that they wouldn't be seen in a picture theater.

The manufacture of animal serum is a typical subject for a real educational film.

Educational Reels Should be Distinct

C. A. Rehm, secretary Atlas Educational Film Company.

A great many good scenic pictures or animal studies are connected up with comedies or something just as far away and these split reels, of course, are about the best the school can get, and in most instances if plenty of educational subjects were to be had, the school would not endeavor to enter the entertainment field.

It seems therefore, that if the producer would keep this in mind and keep the educational reels strictly separate, and if the exhibitor would co-operate with the schools in helping them get educational films, the exhibitor would soon reap his reward in increased patronage. When the time comes that the school or church can and will stick pretty close to educational and religious pictures, the business on the whole will see a tremendous increase.

Typical Educational Subjects

Here are the subjects of some educational films that are really educational, and could not possibly be confused with any idea of general entertainment: Scientific hog raising, showing the control and prevention of diseases of the hog; corn, its germination, cultivation and growth; the same of wheat and other grains; how onions grow; bee culture; poultry culture; the dairy industry; animal husbandry, showing the results of scientific breeding, studies of diseases, etc. These are some of the educational films produced or to be produced by the Atlas Company, and are typical of what really educational subjects are. These, of course, would never interfere with business at a theater.

Films Hit by War Censorship

PACIFIST AND UNPATRIOTIC FILMS CENSORED

WAR censorship of films has already started in Pennsylvania, and the first picture to be barred is the million dollar Ince production, "Civilization." The federal authorities are said to have objected to the showing of the film, on the ground that by means of its graphic illustration of the horrors of war, it is detrimental to recruiting. The federal authorities are reported to have said that it terrified men who might otherwise become soldiers and sailors in the present war with Germany.

The censorial group at Washington is said to be placing the ban on a number of other pictures which have cost millions of dollars in the aggregate. The understanding is that they are telling the various state boards of public safety, moderatists and pacifists which pictures to bar, and the list which has been given the Pennsylvania board of censors and those of other states includes "War Brides," "The Battle Cry of Peace" and "Patria," in which Mrs. Vernon Castle is the star.

"Womanhood" Used to Recruit

The Greater Vitagraph Feature, "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," has not been barred from showing in Pennsylvania or in any other state. On the contrary, this picture is being used by the officials of the army and navy as a means of gaining recruits in many localities. "Womanhood" is an actual portrayal of what would probably happen along the entire "Atlantic Seaboard" should the United States be attacked, and for that reason it is much easier to persuade men who have seen it to enlist than to talk with those who have no conception of what war might really mean to the United States.

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, of Vitagraph, said: "The film was planned in co-operation with the military authorities of the country months ago in order to bring the unprepared state of the country before the people in a forcible manner. The fact that the military authorities of the United States have offered to station recruiting officers at theaters during the performances of 'Womanhood' proves beyond all doubt that they know 'Womanhood' is an argument for preparedness and increased enlistments. For this reason it is certain that military authorities will do nothing to prevent the showing of this film."

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Greater Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., said: "'Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation,' is far from being included within the ban evidently placed by the national government upon certain pictures which, in the government's estimation, would hinder rather than promote recruiting.

"'Womanhood' has the endorsement of every patriotic organization in the country. The National Security League, the Navy League, the Daughters of the American Revolution, and all of the other patriotic organizations of like character are receiving the duplicate record of each booking.

"No man in this country seemed to realize so thoroughly our danger after the termination of the great European war if we were not prepared, as Commodore Blackton, and more than a year ago he began to work upon, 'Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation,' with the sole view of arousing the American public to the necessity of preparedness.

"The exhibition of this picture means not only the showing of a splendid film, but it is also a national duty, and is so recognized by the government."

Discloses Submarine Horrors

It is not quite clear why "Civilization" should have been selected as the first film to be barred in the campaign against war pictures. "Civilization," more than any other film treating upon the world war, discloses the horror and inhumanity of the ruthless German submarine attacks upon passenger ships. The film, although produced before the war began, shows the reasons why we are at war with Germany. Even though it is done in a dramatic and romantic manner, it reveals the cruelty of the U-boat attacks and makes clear the reasons why President Wilson and congress entered into war with Germany.

The Ince Corporation, producers of "Civilization," profess ignorance as to the reasons why the film would hinder recruiting. Indeed, the producers feel that it shows very strongly the need of immediate enlistment in the army and navy on the part of all able bodied men.

J. Parker Read, Jr., of the Ince Corporation, said: "We do not wholly understand the scattered objections to 'Civilization.' At least it is the most complete and final motion picture argument against submarine attacks on unarmed ships that has yet been screened."

The purchasers of state rights to "Civilization" have invested over a million dollars in addition to the original $1,000,000 or more which the picture cost.

Pennsylvania Censors Active

Pennsylvania, prompted by the Federal Board of Censorship, has started to stop the showing of many honest and sincerely conceived feature films. There is no sure way to estimate the amount of money which has been invested in state rights for such films as "Patria," "War Brides," "Womanhood," or "The Battle Cry of Peace." They are all capital attractions, and all are designed to treat the war in a dramatic manner, but still to inspire patriotism. However, if the federal censors decide that they will discourage recruiting they will be stopped without question, regardless of the amount of capital involved. In times of war it is criminal to argue for pacifism, according to the government, but just the same it appears that a small group of precisionists at Washington, influencing the public safety departments of various states, is able to prevent the showing of many valuable and educational films. Not only to prevent the showing, but also to negative their value.

Some time ago, in anticipation of the severance of relations with Germany, and the probable declaration of war that would result, the Ince people began to reconstruct "Civilization" with the idea of revealing clearly the world objection to Prussianism and the coming of universal democracy. New pictures were made at Fort Lee and adjacent locations in order to demonstrate still further the purposeful patriotism of the work. The spirit of the picture might be called "Fighting for Peace," for that is exactly what the Allies are doing, and the film undertakes to show why. In its new significance the film loses nothing of its original force, beauty and tremendous appeal, but in addition it is to be made the most intensely patriotic picture of the year.

Ridicule of War Considered Unlawful

The government has advised every board of censorship, and every state board of public safety in the United States that motion pictures which discourage patriotism, or which make enlistment in the army or navy objectionable or ridiculous, must be suppressed. Such propaganda as "I didn't raise my boy to be a soldier," and all of the pictorial material which ridicules warfare, derides and minimizes citizen duty, lampoons war itself, exaggerates the hardships of campaign or promotes the preaching of "peace at any price," will be debarred from showing on the screen by federal, state and local rulings.

Still, nobody knows why "Civilization," the most illustrative and convincing film argument against submarine activities, should have been made the target of state censorship, even in Pennsylvania. The basic motive of the picture is the fundamental reason for our present war with Germany, the unlawful and unprecedented outlawry of the submarine warfare.

Motion picture producers are puzzled by this act of censorship for every producer is undertaking to film something patriotic, and "Civilization" is, above all, patriotic. It is very difficult for a producer to understand just what is considered suitable and patriotic material, for every one who is trying to manufacture moving pictures today desires to help the United States in every possible way to obtain recruits. And every producer believes that it is not only necessary, but is desirous of finding out the sort of film which is most approved of by recruiting officers, and which will still present dramatic and pictorial possibilities. It is not sufficient to merely make a picture which says "Join the Army," and shows the news features of the present crisis, but the drama, which stimulates the emotions and arouses firm conviction on the part of a possible recruit will be produced soon. "Civilization" shows the very reasons for the war, and should make every American citizen determine to do his part.

Pittsburg Police Arrest Exhibitor

"The Battle Cry of Peace" has been barred from the screen by the police of Pittsburg. Theodore Cosman, the proprietor of a Pennsylvania avenue picture theater, was arrested and held for court on a charge of high misdemeanor by Alderman Sullivan a few days ago.

He was arrested by the police after a disturbance which nearly became a riot, when he was distributing handbills which advertised "The Battle Cry of Peace," which he was exhibiting at his theater. The police claimed that the handbills were being distributed for the purpose of preventing enlistments.

Foreign Born Join in Attack

Cosman was really in serious danger from the mob when he was arrested. Foreign born and Americans alike were joining in an attack upon him for passing out the handbills. Just whether the bills actually contained any material which protested against enlistments or hindered the recruiting agencies is not known. According to Cosman the bills were merely advertisements of the film and contained no pacifist propaganda whatever and were not intended to cause any unpatriotic sentiment. On the contrary, he said that at each exhibition of the film he had displayed a slide bearing a facsimile of the American flag and had instructed his orchestra to play the national airs. There is nothing whatever unpatriotic about "The Battle Cry of Peace," for it is a strong sermon on the need of universal and patriotic service on the part of every American. Cosman is the second prominent Pittsburg man held for high misdemeanor in Pittsburg since the outbreak of the war. The Reverend W. A. Prosser was the first.

TWO ST. LOUIS MEETINGS

Managers' and Exhibitors' Association of St. Louis Volunteers to Contribute to the Needs of the American Government in This Crisis

The Theater Managers' and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of St. Louis had fifty-one active members and all officers present at the last meeting. President Joe Mogler held the chair. There being no objections the minutes of the last meeting were approved as read.

A special meeting of the Association was called to consider the action of the musicians in raising the scale of their wages 10%. The chairman recommends that in accordance with the resolution adopted unanimously on April 14, 1917, the Association cannot do otherwise but sever all relations with the Musicians' Mutual Benefit Association, if they attempt to raise the present scale of wages.

The chair was authorized to appoint a special committee to take charge of the dispute with the musicians, make the necessary arrangements for the execution of the bonds and to have full authority to appoint a competent attorney to represent the Association in this matter.

The Association moved to express in writing to Mr. Barney Rosenthal, manager of the Universal Film Company, the Association's sympathy and condolence in his sorrow and bereavement by the loss of his mother.

At a meeting held April 13, 1917, all officers were present. C. B. Moore, of the Plymouth Theater, was elected to membership and the federal tax on theaters was discussed. The chairman of the organization committee stated that the committee unanimously recommends that the Association join the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

At this meeting the Association passed a resolution that the Association is willing to do its share and contribute to the needs of the Federal Government in this crisis, that a taxation on a certain amount of tickets is impractical and expensive and if any further taxation is decided upon, the Association favors a small increase of the present existing federal war tax.

A motion was carried instructing the secretary to express to Edward Dustin that the Association would be pleased to see him back as manager of the Pathe, and if Mr. Dustin considers this position desirable the Association will be pleased to do anything that he might think advisable to help this appointment.

The following telegram was received from Mr. Ochs: "Triangle abolished deposit system, circulate good news, see trade review." The Triangle is the first one to see the injustice of the deposit system, and we have no doubt that it will not be long until other exchanges fall in line.

Director Reynolds and his Universal company have commenced a five-act picture, "Back to the Primitive."

Theaters Offered as Recruiting Stations

THE army, the navy, home-defense emergency aid, Red Cross and other organizations of patriotic men and women of Philadelphia are in need of recruits for the many units of service that they represent, all of which will be active in case of war with Germany, and strenuous efforts are being made to fill all ranks of the active fighting line and those who will be for home defense in hospitals and engaged in other duties for the nation and for humanity.

One great handicap the officials have encountered in this work has been the lack of proper places where stations for recruiting for all branches of the service may be established during the busy hours of the morning particularly. To overcome this obstacle in a great measure, Stanley V. Mastbaum, managing director of the Stanley Company, considering it a part of his duty to the city and nation in this crisis, has offered use of everyone of the houses that the Stanley Company directs for the purpose of securing recruits during the early hours of the morning; in fact up to the period when the doors open for the performances. Mr. Mastbaum in speaking about this matter said:

From the early hours of the morning until shortly before noon, there are thousands of people passing most of the theaters that the Stanley Company directs and during that period of time I believe that many men and women can be persuaded to enroll in this conflict if recruiting is done at once. Army and navy men, representatives of the home defense, force of Red Cross or any similar organizations, are welcome to use any one of these theaters during the hours that I have suggested and our employes will be instructed to render all the aid that they can to such recruiting parties. All that will be necessary for the officers in charge of this work to do will be to get in touch with me at my office in the Palace Theater building, where the main offices of the Stanley Company are located and the theaters they desire will be placed at their disposal immediately.

It is stated that officers of the army and navy and their officials, who are working hard to have this city fully prepared in case of any emergency, will accept Mr. Mastbaum's generous offer and many new recruiting stations will be established all over the city. The list of theaters which are included in Mr. Mastbaum's offer are as follows: Stanley, Arcadia, Palace, Alhambra, Great Northern, Rialto, Regent.

People's Theater in Montana

The Montana Amusement Company, of which Frank T. Bailey is the president, has opened the People's Theater at Butte. Tom F. McDonald, who has been manager of the American Theater in Butte, is in charge of the house. Two acts of vaudeville will be shown along with Paramount and Greater Vitagraph productions. The theater seats twelve hundred, and has a ladies' lounge furnished in exquisite style. A prize Persian cat and a gold fish in the lounge make it unique. There are large dressing rooms for the performers, shower baths, and other up-to-date features. Lady ushers are employed. Seven thousand were present at the opening performances. Mayor C. H. Lane was introduced and made the dedication speech. Change given out for the first week was in new money, direct from the mint at San Francisco. Twenty young ladies called up everyone in the telephone directory, in order to advertise the opening date. Flowers given to each lady in attendance the first day made for success.

"The Rialto," on the corner of Main and Park streets, 100 feet east of the People's, seating capacity 1200, will open soon.

New New York Theater to House 3,012

Plans have been filed yesterday for B. S. Moss' new million dollar theater at 181st street and Broadway, New York. Excavating and leveling is now in progress and construction of the building proper will be under way in six or eight weeks.

The new Moss Theater, which will be located on Broadway and 181st street, New York. It is to cost nearly one million dollars.

The theater, which will be devoted to high class entertainment, the same as the other theaters under Mr. Moss' control, will be opened about Thanksgiving Day, 1917, and will be named after a United States President, as in the case of Moss' Jefferson and Hamilton Theaters. The name has not yet been determined upon but conjecture favors the Wilson Theater. The theater will be two stories high, taking in 150 feet on Broadway, 200 feet on 181st street, 170 feet on Bennett avenue, and 201 feet on the north, an area of thirteen city lots. Two large and spacious entrances, with Italian marble, will open on Broadway and another on 181st street. The capacity will be 3,012.

The interior of the house will be in French Renaissance, with the coloring in old rose, French grey, ivory and gold. Furnishings of suppressed and tasteful splendor will be in evidence throughout, and every comfort of modern ingenuity will make itself felt. The exterior will be white tile beautifully ornamented. The seats will be large and comfortable, and arrangements for the rest rooms and other comforts have been amply provided for and will be furnished and decorated in keeping with the interior of the house.

Particular attention has been paid to the heating and ventilation of the theater and a scheme has been devised whereby the atmosphere will be changed every two minutes, a volume of fresh air being pumped into the auditorium equal to the number of cubic feet of air contained in the theater.

Exits are particularly provided to dismiss a capacity audience in two minutes. Owing to the large space covered by the building the last row of seats will not be further away from the stage than the center row of the ordinary sized house. A cooling plant of the latest and most improved type will be installed, making it possible to maintain an agreeable atmosphere under all weather conditions.

There has been a great demand for store space, but Mr. Moss has decided to get the building underway before any leases are finally consummated, as it is his determination to have nothing but a select class of tenants in the stores and portions of the Broadway building.

Not alone have the patrons comforts been provided for, but the artists "back stage" will have dressing rooms and conveniences, along with a library and a gymnasium, bringing to the player the ease and comfort of his favorite club. When three shows a day are given, as will be the policy of the new house, the actor is in the theater the greater part of his working time, and Mr. Moss feels that all these comforts will be reflected in the performer's work before the audience.

Arrangements have been made for a large symphony orchestra with one of the best known musical directors in the country. A pipe organ, said to be the largest built, will be installed.

Kentucky Gem Opens

The Gem Theater of Maysville, Kentucky, which was closed since early last summer on account of being involved in bankruptcy proceedings, was reopened on Monday, April 9, the day following Easter. The opening of the Gem was welcomed by a large number of Maysville people, who always enjoyed visiting this popular playhouse.

The new management is composed of Lloyd M. Salter and Mr. Walter Baughman, both of Circleville, Ohio. They are not new in the motion picture business and assure Maysville people that they will show good pictures all of the time. They have installed a new projecting room, steel lined and absolutely fireproof, to conform with the laws of the state of Kentucky. In the booth is installed two simplex motor-driven projecting machines, which will insure continuous pictures, no time being necessary between reels to change films.

A Wurlitzer organ is installed, the first of its kind to ever be used in a moving picture house in Maysville. Organs have become popular in the larger cities of the country for the music and this one will doubtless prove as popular as others have in larger places.

As a safety measure new exits have been arranged on the north side of the building, toward the stage. This will insure better chances of escape should a fire occur.

The picture shown on the opening night of the Gem was "Faith," starring the popular little star, Mary Miles Minter.

Another Mastbaum Theater Deal

One of the largest deals in real estate that has been announced in the West Philadelphia section of the city this year and one which is of vast importance to amusement lovers in all that big section of the district west of the Schuylkill River, is announced by Stanley V. Mastbaum, managing director of the Stanley Company, of Philadelphia.

The transaction, which was made by Mastbaum Brothers and Fleisher, involved the lease by Stanley V. Mastbaum in conjunction with Messrs. Bablosky and McGurck and Alexander R. Boyd, of the Imperial Theater, which is located on Sixtieth street below Walnut, and has been operated as a picture theater by Alfred Greenfield. The building is located in one of the most desirable sections in West Philadelphia, and real estate experts consider it a most valuable property.

While the amount involved in this lease is not disclosed, it is estimated that it will run into a hundred thousand dollars or more.

The Imperial Theater has enjoyed a period of popularity since it was first opened as a motion picture resort and this class of entertainment will continue to be its policy with the Stanley Company personally directing all presentations. The same rules for plays and the conduct of the business of the house that has made all of the Stanley Company's theaters so popular, will apply to the new lessees. Patrons will be given every attention and many new conveniences for their comfort and convenience will be added. In the matter of plays, Mr. Mastbaum announces that only those of the highest class will be presented and patrons will be assured that any picture that is here screened will have its first showing in West Philadelphia here. It is also stated that every attention will be given to bring the house up to the highest standard.

Penal actions against the three picture houses in Frankfort, Kentucky, for operating their shows on Sunday, have been filed in the Circuit Court. Fifteen theater men of Troy, New York, have been brought up for trial on the same grounds. Atlanta, Georgia, is considering an ordinance which prohibits the opening of any picture houses on Sunday for any purpose whatsoever. It is heartily endorsed by the Methodist Ministers' Association. Pullman, Washington, has an ordinance forbidding Sunday performances, which theater men are trying to have repealed, claiming in their protest to the Council that it means a loss to every theater of over $4,000 a year.

The Princess' regular prices are ten cents for matinee and fifteen cents for night performances. The ticket bears seven squares, each labeled with the name and date of showing of one of the "Seven Deadly Sins." These squares are punched at the door. The ticket must be used throughout the series, and is not good for more than one admission to each picture.

Harvey, who has been making an eminent success of the Lomo since he assumed charge. By surrendering of their interests in the Gem Theater to Mr. Xydias, Mr. and Mrs. E. N. Hirsch, who have built up a magnificent amusement business in Hattiesburg, win a long anticipated rest. They have been eminently successful as motion picture operators, and they have won a reputation for progressiveness that has extended far beyond their own town. It is likely that they will make an extended tour before again engaging in business for they have no need of worry as to the immediate future. Meanwhile Manager Xydias will make some improvements in the house and arrange to furnish the best that is to be found in pictures.

The Kansas City film censorship board, under the supervision of F. F. McClure of the welfare department, during March eliminated 2,406 feet of objectionable films from motion pictures shown in Kansas City, from forty-eight reels. One picture was rejected as a whole out of the 384 reels examined.

Declaring that constructive criticism of films offers great possibilities for encouraging taste for good literature and culture, Mayor Van Lear of Minneapolis, Minnesota, has approved recommendations of a subcommittee of his advisory council that a committee on picture censorship be established.

A movement to protest against the character of some of the pictures being exhibited in the moving picture theaters of Little Rock, Arkansas, and to insist upon the formation of a board of censorship to see pictures before they are shown, was started at the monthly meeting of the Ministerial Alliance in the Y. The Department heartily appreciates your patriotic offer, and instructions have been issued by telegram to Lieut. Commander John Grady, U. S. N., Recruiting Inspector Eastern Division, 225 West Forty-second street, New York City, to take advantage of your courteous offer.

Twelve hundred children of Duluth saw the film free, through the courtesy of Thomas Furness, owner of the Rex, aided by the Duluth News Tribune. Free tickets were given out at the News Tribune to the first 1,200 boys and girls under twelve years of age, who called for their tickets in person.

PHILADELPHIA LEAGUE MEETS

Action Taken Against Proposed Measure to Prevent Youngsters from Attending Theaters Alone. Houses Offered for Recruiting

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia voted unanimously to affiliate itself with the Pennsylvania League at the last meeting. This will make the Philadelphia league part of the national organization and application was made at once for the state charter.

Fred J. Herrington, national organizer, stimulated action by the Philadelphia body and outlined the fight against various unjust bills before the legislature. In particular he spoke against the measure which will prohibit a child under sixteen from attending a picture theater without a guardian.

The league passed a resolution offering any theater in the city to the mayor and Home Defense League of Philadelphia for any purpose whatever, in order to aid in arousing patriotism.

The state convention for 1917 will be held in Philadelphia in June and committees will be appointed to take in all the leagues throughout the state. Men known to be the hardest workers and the best boosters will be put on the committees. It is the determination of the Philadelphia league to make this convention one to be long remembered for its novelty, its brilliancy and results.

After the meeting a luncheon was given at which Mr. Herrington again spoke, in order to tell the necessity for co-operation between exhibitors and exchange men. Edwin Meeker, manager of the World exchange in Philadelphia, emphasized the need for perfect harmony in every branch of the industry. Charles H. Goodwin, secretary of the Philadelphia league, was appointed state secretary, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of James Dell.

William H. McElpatrick, the architect, has paid particular attention to the arrangements of the stage, the acoustics and sight lines, and after his many years experience in designing theaters all over the United States, he is convinced that Moss' 181st Street Theater will be one of the most perfect houses of its kind erected in this country.

The Small Town and the Slacker Showman

THE ease with which a raw beginner can step into competition with an old exhibitor, and do considerable damage before he discovers that his figures were wrong, has often been deplored. Just when a theater manager, by careful attention to detail, has gained the good will of his community and established a fair living for himself, some enthusiastic amateur sets up a rival house. He spends too much money for service because he expects big profits, takes the trade away from the first house and eventually runs both of them out of business.

But there is another side to it. There are a good many exhibitors who need that sort of competition to wake them up. A good, stiff jolt in the ego would be the best thing in the world for them. And it is better for them that an amateur deliver the blow; for if a real showman ever tackled them he would put them out for keeps.

The kind of exhibitor we mean generally runs the only house in a small town. He has a monopoly on a population of from three to five thousand. That ought to give him a good income; but it doesn't, the way he runs it. He putters along in a gloomy, pessimistic, listless way, buying film service for ten dollars a week (or maybe seven) and sore because he can't sell it to the people for two hundred a week. Like most unsuccessful men, he figures trade in reverse arithmetic. Because his house will not fill up, he cuts expenses everywhere.

He shows pictures his patrons do not like, because he makes no effort to select his program—claims the exchange will not let him. He rather resents the people's attitude toward his show anyway, and doesn't care much whether they like it or not. If they don't like it they can lump it—which they generally do.

Even such an exhibitor may be a very good fellow, humanly speaking, and have friends. Some of them take him aside occasionally and remonstrate with him. They tell him that if he bought a little better service, and selected it with some idea of what the people wanted, and livened things up a bit, he could do a good business. He replies that his friends do not know the picture business.

Imagine the purchaser of a dozen rotten eggs being told by the grocer, when he protested, that he didn't know the egg business!

The slipshod, unenterprising, narrow, small-town exhibitor is a fair parallel to the old country store-keeper. The cross-roads merchant has always been a romantic figure. We have laughed at his reluctance to interrupt his checker game to wait on a customer; at his hopeless rummaging for goods that he knows he has in stock if he can only put his hands on them; at his dusty windows and his fly-specked showcases and his rusty iron stove that serves as the town cuspidor. But can we, in the name of efficiency and progress, regret it when this old fogy is driven out of business by some spry, clean and orderly young chap from the city? We are sorry for the old man—but we welcome the new spick-and-span store with open arms and pocketbooks.

There are many exhibitors of the kind we have described. Every one of them lays himself wide open to competition. He is, indeed, a constant temptation to a competitor—more of a temptation than if the town had no show at all.

The only exhibitor in a town of three to five thousand ought to get a bigger return on his investment than any other business man in town. He has a better opportunity in many ways than a big-city exhibitor with the same investment. He can build up a more substantial good will. He can reach out farther for his patronage; the country people will go ten miles to a show. He does not have to fight a lot of counter-attractions. Best of all, he can know all his patrons, and become a leader in the community life.

When a man has all these opportunities and then chooses to play slacker, to give as little as he can, to allow the motion picture to become a joke and a by-word in his town, tolerated only because there is no other amusement—when that happens, the sooner there is competition the better. We would be glad to see every exhibitor of that kind either run out of business by a live and wholesome competitor, or else taught such a vigorous lesson in showmanship and opportunity that he would be grateful for it the rest of his life.

Driving a good showman out of business by unfair and ignorant competition is always possible so long as novices can raise money, and should be guarded against by co-operation of the whole industry. But driving a slacker out of business by good showmanship is a work that benefits humanity, and should be encouraged.

Military Censorship versus Civil Censorship

MILITARY censorship and civil censorship are obviously two entirely distinct and different propositions, and have nothing to do with each other. The whole purpose of military censorship is to withhold possibly useful information from enemy eyes. It has no bearings on morals, though it may cover race prejudice. It works, in brief, for the prevention of unnecessary and useless strife and animosity, and not for the alleged uplift of the human race.

The war game is a complicated and highly specialized enterprise, of which the untrained civilian knows little or nothing. Innocently, and with the best intentions in the world, it is possible (though improbable) that a newspaper may print news whose dissemination would be harmful. It is at the suppression or emasculation of such news that military censorship is aimed. Beyond this bare necessity, in justice to a free press and the newspaper man's high sense of duty and patriotism, it should not go. It goes without saying that all publishers will co-operate in the suppression of ill-advised news if they are not hampered in the collection of legitimate and harmless news.

Civil censorship is dictated by no necessity. It is, indeed, the apotheosis of uselessness, since it busies human intelligences at a worthless task, and taxes a worthy industry for their upkeep. There certainly is no evidence of public approval of motion picture censorship.

Yet in time of war the people become accustomed to the presence and the thought of censorship. The military censor unwittingly and unkowingly lends prestige to the civil censor. The reformer, ever alert to seize opportunity, thrives in the atmosphere of authority. There is danger that the recognition of military censorship will give psychological encouragement to the advocate of civil censorship, and that the public in bowing to the one will tolerate the other. For the motion picture censor is not above taking advantage of the situation to press his demand for authority—and the people may not always distinguish between the two.

If ever the times demand the abolition of useless occupation and the universal increase of personal efficiency, it is when the country is at war. In time of peace and prosperity, when society finds time for the cultivation of petty niceties, picture censorship may find excuse if not logical reason. In time of war and strain, when every activity must be directed toward productiveness, the picture censor is on a par with the dancing master and the manicure artist.

Even if picture censorship at its best accomplished a three per cent improvement in morals, which it never has, it would be an extravagance and a luxury which the nation cannot now afford.

Military censorship exists only by military necessity at war time, and we can only hope its conditions will not act to deprive us of legitimate information.

Civil censorship exists only by the toleration of a placid and sybaritic people, at a time when a waste of superfluous labor has no significance. That time is past.

Greater Vitagraph Grows Fast

BIG INCREASE IN BUSINESS MARKS CLOSE OF V-L-S-E SECOND YEAR

VITAGRAPH-V-L-S-E has just celebrated the second year of its organization, with reports of gains in business for the past eight months, said to set a new record in the film industry. These gains are regarded as most significant, when it is considered that since the absorption of V-L-S-E by Vitagraph, the product of that distributing company has been materially reduced in footage. The company has gone ahead substantially, despite the fact that it is releasing approximately 50% fewer features than it did this time last year. Then its product amounted to an average of two feature releases a week, while at the present time it is putting out but a single five-reel picture weekly.

Irwin Makes Statement

Asked how the big gains which the company has made were to be accounted for, Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V-L-S-E said:

"Of course there are a number factors responsible, but I think they may all be summed up into the one prime factor; namely, the efficiency, service and merit which is made possible through the control of the distributing agency by a single manufacturer.

"The absorption of V-L-S-E by Vitagraph has made Vitagraph more sensitive to the needs of the exhibitor, and therefore, caused the production of features of constantly increasing drawing power. It has likewise so simplified V-L-S-E's own operating system that we have been in a position to serve exhibitors more effectively than is possible when a distributing company is the agency for several producing organizations.

"The success which V-L-S-E has attained as the selling department of Vitagraph, shows that the picture industry has grown too big, and the standards of the screen advanced too far, for a producer to work in combination with other independent producers in the distribution of his product.

"Such a co-operative arrangement handicaps the producer, not only in the standardization of his product and in his advertising and selling service to his patrons, but also interposes a barrier between the most direct and sensitive responses to the exhibitors' needs.

"V-L-S-E, since becoming the exclusive agent of Vitagraph, has found it possible to do many things which it had long sought to do, but which were manifestly impractical when it was acting as the selling agent of four independent concerns.

Closer Scrutiny of Pictures

"One of these, as an illustration, is a closer scrutiny of the pictures which pass through its hands. This scrutiny is extended to every Vitagraph picture, weeks before it is put out for release, and has been the means of materially strengthening the product, because the pictures are considered solely from the exhibitors' and public's viewpoint—a viewpoint which only can be gained through a sales organization by reason of its close contact with the exhibitor. Moreover Vitagraph is bending every endeavor and promises even greater co-operation and greater product for our third year.

"Many innovations also have been made in our sales and advertising service, which the complexities of a multi-controlled selling organization make impossible. In other words, we have been free to shape our course to the best advantage of all concerned, and to focus and concentrate the energies which were formerly divided in advancing the interests of four companies upon promoting the maximum results for the patrons of one organization—an organization controlling its entire service from scrip to screen." Mr. Irwin continues:

To take care of our increased business, naturally it has been necessary to expand the organization, with the result that Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. now has twenty-six offices in the United States and Canada, and a greatly augmented corps of representatives and service managers.

In line with its policy from the very first of building a permanent organization, this enlarged organization has been developed strictly through advancement from the ranks. In other words, exhibitors have been given the benefit of the service of an organization in which every employe, from the office boys up, is ever striving to make himself and his company more efficient, because each realizes that his opportunities are limited only by his own efforts.

Salesmen Work With Exhibitors

Salesmen, for instance, work on a system that is an absolutely standardized gauge of each one's efficiency. This system also reacts to the advantage of the exhibitor in that it permits a salesman to give the exhibitor that type of individual personal service "that will help him help himself" most effectively.

This system is based on the principle that a salesman's duty is only half performed when he has sold our goods to the exhibitor. The other half, equally important, is to see to it that the exhibitor resells to his substantial advantage.

In other words, a salesman on our force is not only held responsible for the volume of business he does, but for the degree of success obtained by each exhibitor in his territory.

We approach our third year with the utmost assurance that it will be one of even greater progress for our exhibitors and for ourselves, and we look forward to that further expansion of service and strengthening of our product, through additional innovations which have long been in process of preparation, that will insure Vitagraph exhibitors and Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. permanently at the crest of the wave of even greater prosperity.

New General Sales Manager

Of importance in the recent policy of the General Film Company is the announcement by Harold Bolster of the appointment of Sidney R. Kent as general sales manager. This appointment takes effect at once and signalizes the beginning of an intensive campaign to modernize the sales end of this company.

Mr. Kent comes to General Film from the Vitagraph Company of America, with which he has been connected for a considerable time.

The sales policy of General Film, as reflected in the appointment of Mr. Kent, is to apply to its extensive organization the up-to-date and effective methods carried out in the greatest American business organizations of today. Mr. Kent says that he has no revolutionary ideas to introduce to the film business, but that he expects to mold the sales and distribution of General Film's commodity into the sane and reliable methods that prevail in successful establishments of the same magnitude in other industries.

"I expect to begin an educational work that will include everyone in my jurisdiction from office boys up," says Mr. Kent. "It will be with the end in view that the exhibitor receives the treatment that is his right and the treatment that the client already receives in every other line of business. In many an extended personal canvass of the exhibitors I found room for much improvement in the contact of the motion picture business with its customers. This much for the business in general. Particular attention to the exhibitor is the outstanding motive in my plan. Therefore, the giving of individual service, the insuring of loyalty to clients and the adoption of common sense sales principles that are good elsewhere, ought, if they are a novelty, prove particularly welcome in the film trade."

Earle Williams in "The Hawk"

Earle Williams, who has been industrious lately in powerful characterizations with a mystery atmosphere, is presented in his current release in fully as powerful a role, that of the title part in "The Hawk." This is the famous play which made a sensation on the legitimate stage. Greater Vitagraph secured the film rights especially to cast Mr. Williams as de Dazetta, the gamester who preys upon the gay set of high society, whose ruling motive was love for his pampered, doll-like wife.

SUNDAY SHOWS IN NEW YORK

Up State Theaters Obtain a Temporary Injunction and Reopen. Issue Is Largely Over the Showing of Biblical Films.

Theaters in Schenectady, New York, are being reopened on the Sabbath, after being closed for several weeks. This presents another problem to perplex the authorities in regard to Sunday showings of pictures. The question as to whether Biblical pictures may be shown or not will be argued.

The theaters were unmolested by the city officials owing to a temporary injunction which had been obtained by the motion picture men. The city that forms the center of attention in the new phase of the case is Schenectady, where the first Sunday test cases came to light. The Moving Picture Men's Association of Schenectady sued out a writ preventing the city officials from interfering with their Sunday shows pending an adjustment of the case.

The case at issue involves the question as to whether or not the exhibition of Biblical pictures is within the narrowest construction of the statutes governing the Sunday shows. It is claimed by the Moving Picture Men's Association that Frank Frayne, manager of the Palace Theater in Schenectady, was acquitted of a charge of violating the Sabbath law some time ago on the grounds he had shown Biblical films at his Sunday show.

Frayne was arrested on April 1 after he had opened his theater and his exoneration, it is claimed, opens the door to the showing of pictures of a Biblical or sacred character without interference by the police, regardless of the construction that may be placed on the interpretation of the statutes. The fact the police courts discharged Frayne, the film men point out, is sufficient evidence that such pictures as he was exhibiting at the time of his arrest were in no way a violation of the Sabbath.

The temporary writ, which was obtained from Supreme Court Justice William P. Rudd in Albany, and which was issued particularly to restrain the Schenectady Commissioner of Public Safety as well as the police officials, is returnable before the Supreme Court on April 28, when arguments will be heard to make the injunction obtained permanent. A canvass of the up-State regions, where the fight for Sunday films had been waged, leads to the conviction the general public are aligned back of the movement, while the opposition to Sabbath shows comes solely from the clergy.

Several managers, arrested for allegedly violating the Sunday statutes, have been released by a judge and jury.

Universal to Pay Soldiers

Employes of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company who respond to the call to the colors will not lose their positions. On the contrary, their places at Universal City will be held open for them during the time they are in the service of the government and upon their return from duty under the stars and stripes they will find their former positions ready for them. This welcome news was made known at the film capital in an announcement by H. O. Davis, vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and general manager of Universal City.

Gail Kane in triplicate. She will blossom out on the last day of April in her first American-Mutual play, "Whose Wife?"

GAIN KANE IN "WHOSE WIFE?"

Frohman Star Announced in First of Six Features by American-Mutual. Her First Screen Appearance in Nearly a Year.

Gail Kane will appear in her first American-Mutual production "Whose Wife?" a five part drama, April 30. This is Miss Kane's first screen appearance for nearly a year.

Unusual effort has been put into this picture according to the producers. Miss Kane and her director, Rollin S. Sturgeon, have been at work on "Whose Wife?" at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company for nearly three months.

"Whose Wife" is a picture rendition of a play by Cecil Henry Bullivant, an English playwright and author of note.

"I have seen 'Whose Wife?' on the screen," says President Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation, "and I can give it unqualified recommendation as a picture of particular merit, and I believe one with important value to the exhibitor. It represents a part of what we mean by Mutual's slogan of 'big stars only.'"

Miss Kane was one of the bright and particular favorites of the late Charles Frohman, who launched her in her Broadway career.

Miss Kane's first play under Mr. Frohman's direction was "Decorating Clementina," in which she appeared at the New Theater with Winthrop Ames. She was presented shortly afterward in "As a Man Thinks," by Augustus Thomas, the famous playwright, at the Thirty-ninth Street Theater, New York. Mr. Thomas then selected Miss Kane to star in his "The Model," one of his most successful dramatic productions. Later she appeared with Winthrop Ames in "Anatol" at the Little Theater under Mr. Frohman's management. Chauncey Olcott then chose her to play as leading woman with him in "Macushla." Her next hit was in "Myro, the Adventuress."

George Cohan selected Miss Kane for his Broadway success, "Seven Keys to Baldpate," and later chose her to play in his one serious production, "The Miracle Man." She appeared in the last play produced by Mr. Frohman before he was lost on the Lusitania, "The Hyphen."

Her first venture before the motion picture camera was made when August Thomas induced her to take the leading role in the picturization of "Arizona." She returned to the speaking stage, but the demand of the cinema was too insistent for her and she appeared in several film productions, one of the most successful of which was "The Velvet Paw."

When she signed her contract with Mutual it was decided that only the very highest type of dramatic productions would be chosen for her, and "Whose Wife?" was the first choice. The cast supporting Miss Kane in "Whose Wife?" includes Elizabeth Taylor, Edward Peil, Harry Von Meter, Ethel Ullman, Frank Rickert, Lucille Younge, Robert Klein and Amelia Wilden.

Ten Big Mutual Stars at Work

Ten big stars are now working on productions for the Mutual Film Corporation.

These players, all of whom are well known for their successes on the stage or screen or both, include Ann Murdock, Marjorie Rambeau, Nance O'Neil, Gail Kane, Edna Goodrich, Margarita Fischer, Mary Miles Minter, William Russell, Jackie Saunders and Crane Wilbur.

The Empire All Star was formed to picturize the stage successes of Charles Frohman. Ann Murdock is now at work on "Outcast," by Robert Henry Davies, the great English playwright.

Edna Goodrich will soon start work on "Reputation," by John B. Clymer.

At the Frank Powell studio, Marjorie Rambeau has completed four of the series of sir photodramas in which she is to appear and is working on the fifth. The completed subjects are "The Greater Woman," a picturization of Algernon Boyosen's play, "Motherhood," from the play by Frederick Arnold Kummer; "The Debt," an adaptation of the European success; and "The Mirror," an original story by Clara S. Berranger. Miss Rambeau is now working on "The Dazzling Miss Davison," an adaptation of the novel of the same title by the English author, Florence Warden.

BIG FILM BALL

Motion Picture Industry in New York Attends Benefit for Red Cross.—Patriotic Demonstration Followed by Dancing

Almost every prominent screen actor and actress in New York was present at the "Motion Picture Charity Ball" at Terrace Garden. The ball was given for the benefit of the Red Cross and the charitable nature of the affair resulted in bringing out a much larger crowd than usual. Most of the heads of the local film organizations attended.

Patriotism was the feature of the evening. The hall was decorated with American flags and smaller flags and flowers were sold on the floor during the evening. The guests sang the "Star Spangled Banner" to the accompaniment of the orchestra and this was the biggest demonstration of the evening. Near the entrance to the ballroom a Red Cross booth in charge of a group of nurses in costume was nearly swamped with applications for membership.

The first part of the entertainment consisted of a concert by a symphony orchestra of fifty pieces and led by Hugo Reisenfeld, conductor of the Strand Theater orchestra. The patriotic airs were easily the favorites. At 11 o'clock the dancing began, followed shortly by a military drill by the Peer Fife and Bugle Corps. The dancing then continued until promptly at 12 Roscoe Arbuckle appeared on the floor and gave the signal for the grand march. The march was led by Mr. Arbuckle with Virginia Pearson and Earle Williams with Leah Baird. An attempt on the part of Arbuckle to trip the light fantastic at the close of the grand march was quelled instantly by the other dancers.

It is estimated that there were at least five thousand people present and these showed no disposition to leave early. Every one remained until the end.

The ball was held under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Greater New York, and the men responsible for its success were: Samuel H. Trigger, president; Sidney Ascher, chairman of the floor committee; Isaac Hartstall, chairman of the reception committee; Grant W. Anson, floor manager; Charles Mayer, assistant floor manager; Harry L. Reichenbach, chairman of the press committee, and Samuel Rothapfel, chairman of the entertainment committee.

One plays all the time and the other works all the time. Douglas Fairbanks and Max Goldstine, manager of the Chicago Artcraft office, beaming into each other's genial faces when the athletic star was in Chicago a couple of weeks ago, enroute from New York to Califilmia.

Ziegfeld Corporation Formed

Farsighted business men of reputation have combined to form the Ziegfeld Cinema Corporation, which has just been incorporated under the laws of Delaware with a capitalization of $3,000,000 and which already has clinched valuable options on real estate in Florida and South America, in either or both of which localities it will operate soon as a contemplated cinema colony, to be known as Ziegfeld City, has taken material shape.

Plans to this end are now being formulated, and it is anticipated that the close of the war will see Ziegfeld City a reality.

William K. Ziegfeld is president of the new concern and will maintain in the pictures the artistic standards of the "revue" form of entertainment, which his brother, Flo Ziegfeld, originated in this country.

Mr. Ziegfeld uses music to aid in placing film entertainment on a higher plane, and musical embellishment of the action of his photoplays is to be a feature of all of his productions. He was for years vice-president and general manager of the Chicago Musical College, with the Boston Conservatory the oldest musical institution in America, which his father founded. He gained fame as an impresario by notable productions of grand opera, and opera in a lighter vein, interspersed by dramatic plays that differed from the conventional offerings of the syndicate theaters.

William J. Worden, vice-president and general manager, is well known in the world of specialized business.

Mr. Worden has written extensively for technical publications on business methods and is the author of a textbook on efficiency which has been generally adopted by business schools and won praise from the executive heads of great department stores and other commercial institutions.

Mr. Worden, it might be added, was associated with Mark Hanna in the whirlwind business campaign which resulted in the election of William McKinley. He is one of the incorporators of the Michigan Society of New York City and was for twelve years a member of the board of governors.

C. Ray Houser, who is interested in banana plantations in Nicaragua, and is thoroughly conversant with business conditions in the Antipodes, is second vice-president.

Samuel E. Bailey, for seventeen years treasurer of the Sperry & Hutchinson Company, which has made the trading stamp famous, occupies a similar position with the new picture corporation.

The Ziegfeld Cinema Corporation has leased a floor in the model Yale & Towne office building at 9 East 40th street.

Scientific Film Rental Charges

GOLDWYN PICTURES CHARTING AMERICA TO ESTABLISH PRICES TO SUIT CONDITION

ESTABLISHED precedents of the industry are not to be regarded by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation in attacking the various problems of production and distribution. The latest proof of this is found in the Goldwyn efforts to assemble and codify a system of rental tariffs applicable to each section of the United States, and based directly on sectional conditions.

Experts Study Film Rentals

Since the day of its formation last December, Goldwyn has had a corps of experts investigating film rentals in every section of the country, and the results of this inquiry have been amazing indeed.

It was found, of course, that no such thing as a fixed tariff for film rentals was adhered to by any of the factors now in films. Few rental distinctions were drawn between towns in western Pennsylvania, or Ohio, for example, and towns of the same population in Alabama or Georgia—yet the differences in the types of citizenship are obvious.

The Goldwyn intention is to build productions of a quality far above the average and they will not be in any sense cheap rental productions, but the main intent of the owners of Goldwyn has been to keep the greatest possible distribution of its product and to keep the individual prints of its productions working for the longest possible number of consecutive days, without break or interruption.

Re-chart America on Salesmanship Basis

And this explains the basic reason for Goldwyn's efforts to re-chart America on a scientific salesmanship basis. All cities and towns in all of the film distribution territories are being catalogued for rentals on the basis of actual conditions in the communities themselves. Des Moines or Milwaukee each has a status of its own that is determined by Des Moines or Milwaukee conditions, and the conditions in Dallas, Tex., or Barre, Vermont, are purely local or regional conditions that cannot be approximated or "averaged" by merely striking certain levels for the country at large.

When this gigantic task of price-cataloguing America has been completed Goldwyn will possess a tariff as complete and thorough as are the railroad rate tariffs established by the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Department of Commerce and Labor. No secret is made of the fact that former agents and executives in these two departments of the government have performed this work for Goldwyn.

By establishing and adhering to a system of this kind, the Goldwyn organization, in a measure, will free itself from certain competitive conditions that exist in the industry and have existed from the beginning.

Examples in Other Lines

Leaving motion pictures for a moment to establish outside comparisons, it can be pointed out that while there are several safety razor companies in active competition for popular approval, each with a huge aggregate gross sale, the Gillette razor remains practically without competition, and certainly without a form of competition that makes price-cutting necessary.

Several talking machine companies and several makers of uniformly used articles, like shaving soap, compete with each other on a gigantic scale, and spend a huge aggregate in advertising—yet with little or no bearing on price-cutting.

In other words, they have established standards of quality and standards of price in their trade fields and do not find it necessary to depart from those standards. Those comparisons are explanatory of the Goldwyn purpose and effort.

Without gouging exhibitors for excessive rentals,

Here, for the first time, are Mae Marsh and Robt Harron re-united in a Goldwyn picture. They are the central figures in this photograph and are going over a script with Director John W. Noble. George Hill, Miss Mars 's cameraman is at the extreme right. The other picture shows Miss Marsh in her second Goldwyn production.

without piling on all the traffic will bear in the matter of first, second, third or fourth, or any other "runs," Goldwyn expects to make its productions come within a rental range that will make them universally used throughout the world.

This effort, together with marked evidence of exhibitor approval, accounted for the Goldwyn decision to own and operate its own branches throughout the country and to market its productions on the "open booking" basis. Goldwyn properly felt that no outside factors or regional partners could thoroughly absorb these policies and put them into effect with the sincerity that the Goldwyn owners themselves would.

Goldwyn is not yet ready to cite the differences in its sales, prices, and methods, and those that have been practiced in the past, or to give outsiders the benefits of the costly information it has gathered through high-priced specialists in its employ, but the system itself is obviously revolutionary.

A Blonde Marvel

Marvel Rea is one of the blondest blonds who ever called Seattle "home." She is quite new to pictures, the Mack Sennett-Keystone company being the only one in which she has worked. She is striking to look at and is a splendid camera subject, which means that she will probably make a real splash in the picture pool before she is through.

Like most Keystone girls, Miss Rea is decidedly athletic. She swims and rides and has a predilection for surf boarding, a sport which is quite the fad with Keystoners.

This bewitching little pillar of beauty rises to the height of five feet two and her weight is sculpturally correct. Her eyes are hazel and her hair the color of sunshine and champagne.

Three Selznick Pictures for April

With two successes, Clara Kimball Young, in "The Easiest Way," and Norma Talmadge, in "The Law of Compensation," already on the market as April releases, the Selznick spring campaign has begun.

Four more Selznick-Pictures are rapidly nearing completion, one of which will be given its premier before the end of the month. This will be Robert Warwick's second Selznick picture, "The Silent Master," an adaptation of E. Phillips Oppenheim's brilliant novel of adventure and mystery, "The Court of St. Simon."

In "The Silent Master" Mr. Warwick is supported by two widely known stage and screen beauties, Anna Little and Olive Tell.

Following the release of this new Warwick picture, the Selznick exchanges will present Herbert Brenon's production of Louis Joseph Vance's famous thriller, "The Lone Wolf," featuring the beautiful and talented Hazel Dawn and Bert Lytell. "The Lone Wolf" is sheer melodrama, of the most absorbing character.

The second May release will present that popular young star, Norma Talmadge, in her third Selznick offering, an adaptation of Cynthia Stockley's fascinating story of South African life, "Poppy." The story offers Miss Talmadge an opportunity to display an unusual range of characterization, presenting her first as a child of fourteen and later as a mature woman torn by conflicting emotions.

The latter part of May or the first of June will see the release of the third Robert Warwick Selznick-Picture, entitled "A Modern Othello." This is an original story by Director Perret.

It had been announced that Clara Kimball Young's next Selznick-Picture would be an adaptation of Virginia Terhune Van De Water's story, "Why I Left My Husband." It has been decided not to produce this story and in its place Miss Young will be seen in another modern American story, the name of which is being temporarily withheld.

"King Bee" Releases Play

"Back Stage" is the aptly chosen title of the first two-reel comedy release of the King Bee Films Corporation, of which that past master of the art, Louis Burstein, is the guiding spirit. It is a highly diverting story of misadventure, back of the stage of a country theater. Thither come, "Booked solid" on the time, a strong man, Hawaiian dancers and other entertainers of the public; and the things that happen to them, partly on account of their own inherent propensities for causing trouble, and partly because Billy West and his fellow stage hands seem incapable of keeping out of mischief and resisting strong dring, are ludicrous in the extreme. The director, Arvid E. Gillstrom, keeps the fun going all through the offering. It is clean, honest, logical spontaneous fun and the picture is one therefore, which is assured of winning the favor of exhibitors and the public.

Frohman Corporation to Move

May first will be moving day for President William L. Sherrill and the executive staff and general offices of The Frohman Amusement Corporation. On the aforesaid date the Frohman Corporation will bid goodbye to the offices at 18 East 41st Street, which has housed that organization for more than three years, and will set itself forth in a spacious suite covering the entire northern part of the third floor of the Times Building.

President Sherrill's private sanctum commands a pleasing view of Broadway to the north, that part of the famous canyon of the Great White Way about which was written the latest Frohman success, "God's Man."

New Fox Writers

Sidney Reynolds, director of the William Fox scenario department, announces the addition of two more well-known writers to his staff, making it the strongest ever gathered together by any motion picture producing organization. They are George Scarborough, the dramatist, and Larry Evans, short story writer. Last week the addition of George Bronson-Howard was announced. These men are now preparing material for new Fox productions.

PATHE EXCHANGE EXPANDS

Chicago Branch, Under C. W. Bunn, Outgrows Old Quarters and Moves Into New and Splendidly Equipped Office

What is claimed to be the largest rental price ever paid in Chicago by a film exchange is that under which the Pathe Company has leased the entire south section of the fourth floor of the Consumers building at 220 South State street.

C. W. Bunn, manager Chicago Pathe office.

The decision to move into more spacious quarters was necessitated by a hundred per cent increase in the volume of business done since Manager C. W. Bunn took charge of the Chicago exchange early last June. To render the exhibitor a more complete service, which was wholly impossible in the old quarters due to the very limited amount of space available, constitutes another reason which prompted Pathe to make this change.

In planning the floor space of the new exchange, every available foot of space has been utilized with a view toward attaining a high degree of efficiency throughout the exchange. The success of Mr. Bunn's efforts in this direction is best illustrated by the accompanying drawing of the floor plan. Everything possible has been done for the convenience of the exhibitor and to facilitate his transactions.

Each of the salesmen has a private office in which to interview exhibitors, where confidential business can be privately discussed, a sorely needed feature lacking in the old exchange.

C. R. Seelye, general business manager of Pathe, has made arrangements to be present at the opening of the new Chicago quarters on Monday, April 30, and will be glad to meet visiting exhibitors.

Henry B. Walthall appears in an entirely new characterization in his next Essanay feature, "The Saint's Adventure," to be released through K. E. S. E. May 7. He is a parson.

Hall Caine's "Deemster" Screened

Two days before Hall Caine's "The Deemster" opened at the Broadway Theater, this city, where it has since proved a huge success, his latest creation, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," was produced as a big spectacular drama and opened at the Shubert Theater, Boston. Strange as it may seem the great author's son appears as the bright particular star of both productions.

When "The Deemster" was produced as a photoplay and a print of the film sent to Hall Caine, who lives on the Isle of Man, where the story has its locale, he straightway wrote a letter of congratulation to his son (this letter is reproduced in the author's own handwriting and then transcribed on the typewriter and shown on the screen) and another to the producer, Mr. Howard Hansell, approving every incident and scene, and complimenting both on the accuracy of the scenic investiture and the uncanny selection of actors to create the characters from the novel.

The intensely human story, which lends itself with simple and entrancing grace to the newest art of expression, has been pronounced an achievement par excellence, and as one critic aptly put it: "brings back our faith in motion pictures." But this only emphasizes one thing and that is the important part played by the author in screen successes. It is a well established fact that Hall Caine has never written a failure nor has one of his novels failed as a play after dramatization for the stge. Also, each and every one of his stories which have been made into photoplays, and they are many, including "The Eternal City," "The Christian," "The Bondman," "The Manxman" and "The Deemster" have proved great popular successes with discriminating "fans" and regular theatergoers.

Newspapers Distribute Joyce Picture

More than two million six-color photographs of Alice Joyce, star in Greater Vitagraph's preparedness picture, "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," have been or will be distributed by Sunday newspapers of the United States. The pictures, which are suitable for framing, have been supplied to the Sunday newspapers by Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., to be used as supplements.

Among the newspapers which have taken advantage of Greater Vitagraph's offer to supply the supplements are: World, New York; Herald, Washington, D. C.; Herald, Chicago; Courier, Buffalo, N. Y.; Republic, St. Louis; Inquirer, Philadelphia; News, Birmingham, Ala.; Telegraph, Salt Lake City; Post, Kansas City, and Item, New Orleans.

NEW MUTUALS

Mystery Story With Gail Kane Heads Program. Marie Cahill in Comedy, Mutual Featurettes and Travel Pictures Make Attractive Showing.

"Whose Wife?" a story by Cecil Henry Bullivent, chosen as the first vehicle for Gail Kane as a Mutual-American star, will be released April 30. It is in five reels.

Gail Kane's reputation and popularity as both a stage and screen star should be capitalized by the exhibitor.

A peculiar headed hat pin and broken bits of an eyeglass are the only clues to a murder. In the story these two things can be made use of in the advertising and program stories.

"Whose Wife?" is a problem story and the following questions may give suggestions to the exhibitor for the exploiting of the production.

1. Is it right for a dying person to bind two people to a marriage as a last request?
2. Does happiness ever come from a marriage for money?
3. If your husband deserted you at the altar, was reported dead and you were about to marry another man when your husband suddenly appeared, to which man would you owe your loyalty?
4. If you were owner of a weapon with which a murder had been committed, but were innocent of the crime, would you be brave enough to come forward and admit your ownership?
5. To prevent the man you love from losing his first big case in court would you confess to a former alliance which would kill his love for you?

Fourth Chapter of "The Railroad Raiders"

"A Race for Fortune" is the fourth chapter of the latest Helen Holmes serial, "The Railroad Raiders," which will come to the screen on April 30. The two greatest thrills in this chapter are the scenes in which Helen Holmes is thrown into the river with an anchor tied to her feet and another in which Frost, the general superintendent of the road, is bound and thrown into a well. Invite the people to come and see how Helen Holmes manages to free herself and ultimately rescues Frost just before he is lost in the watery grave.

Marie Cahill in Comedy

"Gladys' Day Dream," released April 30, is the first of three bi-weekly comedies in which Marie Cahill will be starred. The people who see the first one will want to see them all so advertise extensively the first appearance. Play up the fact that Marie Cahill bears the reputation of being the greatest comedienne on the American stage. A list of her successes will arouse interest. Invite your patrons to come and laugh with and at Marie Cahill.

Mutual Featurettes

May 1 brings the "Mutual Tours Around the World."

On May 2 comes "Mutual Weekly" and also the fourth Strand Comedy featuring Billie Rhodes and entitled "Kleptomaniacs."

"Jerry's Trial" is the Cub Comedy with George Ovey, which is scheduled for May 3.

On this date also comes "Reel Life," which this week is made up of the following subjects: "Our Patriotic Maidens," "Restoring an Old Mission," "Getting Rid of the Snow," "Isa Tribe of British Somaliland" and "The Queerest Newspaper."

Friday, May 5, brings the seventh story of the "Jimmie Dale Alias the Grey Seal," entitled "Devil's Work."

"Bucking the Tiger" is the Vogue contribution for May 5. Ben Turpin is featured in this laughmaker and is assisted by Ed. Laurie, Lillian Hamilton, Art Currior and Marie Templeton.

More Honors for "Little Mary"

The face that can draw more people to the theaters of the United States than any other, and the same is true of schools and churches, now that such institutions have awakened to the value of pictures.

When "Little Mary" reached Chicago on her recent trip back to California from a four-days' visit in Manhattan, she was received with open arms by two important societies: the Intercollegiate Club of Chicago and the Irish Fellowship Club. The president of the former club, Robert G. Sattley, a Rock Island Railroad official, called on Miss Pickford at the Blackstone Hotel and notified her that she had been elected an honorary member of the Intercollegiate Club, the only woman to be given that honor, and that her picture is to hang in the club rooms where thousands of Chicago college men may see it.

Her Majesty of Screenland was escorted as guest of honor to a banquet given by the Irish Fellowship Club and made a speech. Many prominent politicians and judges were present and all of them beamed upon the sincere little star.

How Charlie Chaplin Works

Where does Charlie Chaplin get all his ideas? How does he work them out? These two questions are asked time and time again. And Charlie has a method all his own in working out his super-comedies which is characteristic of everything else connected with the Mutual comedian.

Charlie starts out with a certain idea—often the merest germ—and works through haltingly until he reaches a sticking point. Then a better idea suggests itself and he starts from his original point and reconstructs the whole picture.

The same thing applied to "Behind the Screen" and "The Count," neither of which was started in its ultimate form.

Peggy and Vitagraph Part

Peggy Hyland, the little English actress, has severed her connection with Greater Vitagraph. Miss Hyland expressed a desire to be allowed to terminate her contract, and, after making her explanation as to the reason for her action Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, director-general of Greater Vitagraph, agreed to the abrogation of the contract.

Marjorie Rambeau in "The Debt"

Marjorie Rambeau as a wealthy countess; as the economical wife of a poor man; a factory girl; and as an outcast.

These four contrasting parts are played by Miss Rambeau in "The Debt," the third of her productions for Mutual, released April 23.

The opening and closing scenes are laid in Europe, and the remainder in the United States. There are some gorgeous sets of the European home of the countess, which stand out in strong contrast to the one small room in the tenement, which later becomes the home of Ann—Marjorie Rambeau.

All of the troubles which come to Ann, the countess, after she marries a man of the people in an effort to pay off a debt of honor, are caused by too much mother-in-law. The vixenish woman, jealous of her son's love for his wife and ever anxious to cast reproach upon the young wife, is played by Anne Sutherland, who gives a most successful impersonation of the role.

Paul Everton plays the man of the people who marries Ann and helps her pay off the debt and then egged on by his mother, turns her out of the house.

Jerome Lawlor is Baron Moreno, who forsakes Ann in her time of trouble and later follows her to America and tries to tempt her to leave her poverty and fly with him.

Agnes Eyre is "The Girl," a plaything of the hour for the baron, and gives a most graphic portrayal of the happy, carefree girl who slowly grows older and sadder each day as she realizes the character of the man for whom she has deserted her home. It has been said that a touch of youth portrayed on the motion picture screen makes the whole world grin—or weep as the case may be. "The Debt" proves this observation in an unusual manner.

Some of the beautiful and striking scenes from the Mutual-Powell production, "The Debt," featuring Marjorie Rambeau.

Unusual World Souvenir

An artistic plaque of Alice Brady in the central role of "Maternity," a new photoplay with birth-fear as its psychological background, has been issued as a souvenir by World-Pictures Brady-Made. The plaque was made by Miss Renee Prahar, a noted American sculptress, who has specialized for a number of years abroad in what are known as bust portraits.

The "Maternity" photoplay contains as one of its spectacular features the burning of a huge hospital from which the heroine rescues the child of a woman of whom she is jealous. In the making of this scene Miss Brady had much of her hair burned off, together with a part of her skirt, and when she fell through the floor with little Madge Evans in her arms she "barked" one of her shins and acquired a fine assortment of black-and-blue decorations.

Pathe Gets War Pictures

The Official War Pictures, Inc., of which W. K. Vanderbilt is president, and H. P. Davison, of J. P. Morgan and Company, is treasurer, will release through Pathe and not General Film.

This means that Pathe Exchanges will take over all bookings on the Official British War Films showing the American ambulance, aviation, and other corps already engaged in fighting for the Allies, and that Pathe exhibitors will be given first preference in booking these attractions which have scored tremendously wherever shown.

Kerrigan With Paralta

J. Warren Kerrigan is soon to become active in the production of special features with the Paralta Company in the new studio which has been erected for that purpose at Los Angeles. It is also said that Bessie Barriscale will be featured in special pictures of the same nature.

Mr. Kerrigan is at present in the middle west, continuing his extensive tour of theaters throughout the country. Leaving Los Angeles on January 1, he has visited hundreds of houses throughout the west, south, east and is now making his way westward where he will begin with the Paralta Company about June 1.

While in Chicago Mr. Kerrigan visited the following theaters: part of the Alfred Hamburger string of houses, Grand Oak theaters, Willard, Apollo, Drexel, Gayety, Easterly, Pine Grove, Albany Park. Mr. Kerrigan also made a special call upon MOTOGRAPHY.

FRENCH PICTURES FOR WORLD

Susan Grandaise and Regina Badet Starred in Four Films Which Will Be Placed on World Program at Regular Price.

Four more French photoplays produced by Louis Mercanton, director of the vast Sarah Bernhardt success, "Mothers of France," have already been delivered to World-Pictures Brady-Made, and exhibitors using the World program will have first call upon the series with no advance upon regular prices.

With the exception of Mme. Bernhardt herself, these four plays were acted by practically the same same players as those who gave such perfection of team-work to the performance of "Mothers of France." At the head of these gifted artists is Albert Signer, whose portraiture of the schoolmaster in the Bernhardt pictureplay stood out with quite extraordinary vividness.

The stars of the four new photodramas are Susan Grandaise and Regina Badet, both of whom will come to America shortly to act for World-Pictures under the direction of William A. Brady, as a part of the interchange plan by which several of the World stars will also be sent to Europe at the close of the war to make pictures there, directed by Mr. Mercanton.

These two stars are regarded as the foremost screen actresses in the old world, where Mlle. Grandaise is called "The sweetest girl in Europe," and Mlle. Badet is termed "the vampire of France." Both are exceptionally beautiful examples of widely different types.

The plays of this series are "Atonement," featuring Regina Badet and Albert Signer, to be published May 28; "A Naked Soul," featuring Susan Grandaise, June 11; "The Golden Lotus," featuring Regina Badet, June 25; and "When True Love Dawns," featuring Susan Grandaise, Albert Signer and an all-star cast, July 16.

The quartette of picture plays, which probably would be distributed as separate "specials" in other circumstances, will be issued under the title, Brady-International Service—World-Pictures, observing conditions similar to those which governed the Clara Kimball Young Service, and also Mme. Sarah Bernhardt in "Mothers of France."

"We went into this undertaking," said Director General William A. Brady, "primarily for the reason that it afforded an opportunity to perform a very valuable service for American exhibitors, particularly the great and increasing number of these who show World-Pictures. We have always insisted that the program was the spine of the motion picture industry, and we are clinching our frequently demonstrated proof by placing upon our program all of these imported productions, each one of which could have been sold as a 'special' at a very large profit had we so desired.

"We shall not derive a large profit from these French plays. Very likely there will be no profit at all. But in any case we shall be perfectly satisfied in having enabled our exhibitor connections to present a fresh series of 'specials' at program feature investment."

Sends in Picture "Dope"

MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago:

Your favor of the 12th received, and I can say that I have received the record books this time. Thanks very much for your interest in the matter.

I am going to try and write you each week, giving you some dope for the "What the Picture Did for Me" department, which I believe to be of great help to any exhibitor who is striving to please his patrons.

If all exhibitors would co-operate with you in this matter, I think it would be of much more interest to all concerned, as one could get a good idea of the pictures from the average on the reports.—Kozy Theater, Sam L. Marr, Manager, Waycross, Georgia.

NEW UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

Three Releases of "Butterfly Pictures" Are Being Prepared—Best Direction and Talent to Be Used in Filming Original Scripts from Well Known Writers

Extensive plans are being made by Universal for the distribution of the new feature brand productions bearing the attractive trademark, "Butterfly Pictures." The first of these, "Eternal Love," will be offered exhibitors on May 7th. A definite standard of quality will be maintained, and in case a picture does not meet this standard it will not be released.

The best directors in the Universal organization will handle these pictures, and the players of the best ability both with regard to acting and popularity among picture goers will take the parts. Original scripts, from well known writers both in the picture world and in the magazine circle, are being considered.

A wide variety of pictures will be shown, but the principal aim will be to make the pictures interesting and clean. There will be nothing of any nature in a "Butterfly Picture" which will offend the most fastidious.

"Eternal Love" deals with the love of an artist in Britanny for a simple peasant girl. Her sacrifices for him and the dawning of the artist's conception of true love, form the theme of the story. Ruth Clifford and Douglas Gerrard are cast for the leads. The second picture will be "The Phantom's Secret" with Mignon Anderson, Hayward Mack and Molly Malone as the principals. "Like Wildfire," a five act comedy drama with the most amusing plot ever offered on the Universal program, will be the third release. Four other Butterfly pictures are in process of production and their release dates and title will be announced at an early date.

Joseph T. Hagerty and D. E. Boswell have been added to the sales force to the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. Kansas City branch by Manager Nine. Mr. Hagerty is an experienced film salesman, formerly being connected with the Lone Star Film Company, of Dallas, and promoting the Vernon Castle picture, "The Whirl of Life" for that company. Mr. Boswell, who also is an experienced film salesman, will have the Oklahoma territory formerly covered by F. H. Cassil.

Picture Gamblers Must Go

CHANGE IN PRODUCTION COMING SOON

Interview With Samuel Goldfish, President Goldwyn Pictures, By Rowland Thomas of the New York World.

LEAN, clean, sinewy, clear-eyed, the man who five years ago was owner of a small glove manufacturing business in Gloversville, N. Y., and today, at thirty-four, is president of a three-million-dollar picture-producing corporation, lay on his back in bed and smiled a cordial greeting.

He had happened to break an ankle, but that mere incident had no power to render Samuel Goldfish inactive. "Right at the start," he told me, "I want to point out to you that the picture business is different from practically every other. It's a mixed business, fifty per cent art and fifty per cent commerce. You've got to make something that can be counted on to interest and entertain and attract the public. That's the art. And you've got to market your product in such a way that you can be sure of a profit. That's the commerce.

Samuel Goldfish, president Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

"The experts who expect large profits, and therefore risk tremendous amounts of money, are watching their own expenditures and the results achieved. The outside investor is entirely without advantage.

"Other people are playing with his money as they see fit, and the investor remains in utter ignorance of the inner things that affect his investment.

Stock Sellers Bane of Business

"Another point is that the picture business is just on the threshold of a great change. Up to the present, on the artistic side, it has been largely experimental, and on the business side it has been mostly promotional. But that stage is passing, and we are beginning to tackle the problems of our business in an intelligent way.

"At present I have no hesitation in saying the stocksellers are the bane of the motion picture business. Censorship perils don't seem very great to me. Picture promoters who venture quick 'gambles' for big profits by making vulgar and common pictures should be driven out of business by the rigid supervision of their pictures that can be exercised by state and community laws. These fly-by-night factors in picture-making may do and can do some temporary injury, but the permanent factors in production are bound to be men who make clean and able pictures.

"As for taxation," he went on, "that, of course, is a genuine trouble. But we can meet it by immediately unifying all the larger units in the industry and proving to legislative bodies that proposals for increased taxation are inequitable and unfair.

"You spoke of overproduction as a problem. That, too, will solve itself. You must remember that the only profitable market for films—which means costly films—is a world market. Which," he added, "accounts largely for the scenarios we choose. Film stories have to make a universal appeal, so that we can simply translate the headlines and show them anywhere.

Approves Big Salaries

"As for high salaries," he went on, "don't forget that really great personalities are worth all the money producers pay them.

"There is only one difficult problem confronting us, to solve which we need the assistance and co-operation of the outside public. I mean, in that matter of stock-selling. The amateur investors of Americe should not put money into motion picture stocks. The business is one for specialists, for film men ready to devote their own money and all their time to it. Millions of dollars have been taken from widows, from estates and from the misinformed public without the slightest likelihood of its returning either a profit or any substantial part of the principal. Unscrupulous groups of men are using the industry as a lure for 'suckers.'

"There are several large motion picture corporations that have sold bushels of stocks which have never paid a dividend and which, having been manipulated through a wide range of points, are now quoted as far below the level at which the innocent 'investors' purchased them. All of these stocks made money for their promoters, though they have never paid a dividend.

"My experience as a producer and executive prompt me to warn American investors—and by that I mean chiefly the thousands of persons with small savings—to shun motion picture stocks. It is properly salable only as an investment, never as a speculation."

I asked him then what he foresaw as the future of the business.

"For one thing," he said, "where the star is now pre-eminent, I expect to see the story or play become the matter of first importance.

Change in Producing Methods

"And that will lead to a great change in the production and distribution of films. Producers will keep months ahead of their releases. Rush work is poor work. And having the films ready long before release will protect the exhibitors. They will no longer be asked to contract for pigs in pokes. Each of them will have opportunity to visit some branch distributing office, not too far from his home, see the features at his leisure and know exactly what he is booking. And that will lead to less refusals and broken contracts and stabilize the business all through."

"But, still, with all its risks and problems, you like the business?"

"I wouldn't be in anything else," he answered. "And I like it best because I foresee such a tremendous future for it. So far we have only scratched the surface. We have been purveyors of amusement only. But when we come to develop the full possibilities of the films we shall have created something as powerful and as useful as the press is—something educational, cultural and influential in a hundred ways, all good. To help to develop all that seems to me as big a chance as any man could wish for."

A. M. P. A. Active

The work of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in preparing for the "Wake Up America" day in co-operation with the Mayor's Committee of New York won such unlimited and enthusiastic approval from that committee that they virtually insisted that the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers occupy immediately an office on the same floor with them. Their only stipulation is that the A. M. P. A. holds itself in readiness to plan and execute any publicity and advertising campaign which they have in mind.

For its part, the Association has placed at the disposal of the Mayor's Committee all of the material which it has originated and put in shape so far, including posters, slides, moving picture leader and trailer, stock advertisements in proof and mat form, and the plans for the several patriotic features which it has in mind.

In preparation for the "Wake Up America" day the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers supplied all of the exhibitors in Greater New York who asked for them with slides, and the announcement in last week's trade papers of the suggested slide met with instant approval of the exhibitors, many of whom made and ran their own slides. The Greenwich Lithograph Company made for the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, free of charge, five thousand one-sheet posters of a beautiful flag, the design for which was made by the famous artist, Lambert Gunther, and these are now ready for distribution, and may be obtained at the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers' office, 50 East 42nd street, second floor. At this office there will always be a member of the A. M. P. A. in attendance.

War and the Film Business

By John R. Freuler,
President of the Mutual Film Corporation.

"The war will bring a boom to picture theaters."

That is the promise of President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation.

"Far from having anything about which to be alarmed, there is a lot for the exhibitor to be expectant and hopeful about," observed Mr. Freuler.

"It is my observation that anything which shakes the people out of routine, anything which tends to awaken them, also tends to help the motion picture theater. Among the so-called luxuries and amusements the motion picture theater, because of the extremely low price of admission as measured by the entertainment value offered, is the last to suffer in periods of financial stress.

"Meanwhile the war period promises not financial stress but general prosperity.

"We need only look to the condition of the theater business in Great Britian and in France, where they have been at war for two years, and in war under conditions more trying and taxing than would appear to be a probable prospect for the United States.

"The motion picture theaters in England are enjoying a greater prosperity now than before the war. In France, while for certain reasons best known to the government the theaters are open only three days a week, they are doing good business through that period.

"War is likely to bring for the theaters of the United States somewhat the same cycle of interest as in the theaters of England. When the war opened over there there was a rush to the theaters for picture news of the war, for war pictures and all kinds of war information. Then as the people became war weary they went to the theaters for something else, to see pictures, to get amusement that would make them forget war.

"It may be expected that the picture house in the United States will gain new patrons and hold an added interest for old patrons because of our participation in the war. It must be remembered that since the United States was last engaged in war the motion picture has come into being really as an arm of the public press. The motion picture supplements the press of the printed word. Circulation reports from the offices of the nation's big newspapers today indicate that thousands more copies of the important journals are being sold because of war interest. This means increased importance and increased demand for the news. It always happens when there is big national news. The motion picture is a purveyor of a great deal of the same sort of news and entertainment as the newspaper."

Exhibitors Form Booking Office

The Exhibitors' Booking and Service Company has opened temporary headquarters at 538 Andrus Building, Minneapolis Minnesota. The company is organized by well known exhibitors in Minneapolis.

A one-page advertisement in Amusements thoroughly explains the plans of the new concern. Some of the prominent exhibitors connected with the corporation are as follows:

Jay Gould, proprietor of the Crystal Theater, Glencoe, Minnesota; B. E. Dawson, proprietor of the Palace Theater, at Waseca, Minnesota; Stanley Smith, proprietor of the Princess Theater, at Sioux Falls, South Dakota; E. E. Marsh, proprietor of the Opera House at Montevideo, Minnesota; A. Zackeral, proprietor of the Royal Theater at Grand Forks, North Dakota, and M. B. Balsiger, proprietor of the Bijou Theater at Huron, South Dakota.

The corporation is co-operative in nature. The future will decide whether this new company can straighten out all the struggles that spring up in booking arrangements between exhibitors and exchanges. As the theory of the new company is explained by Amusements, the idea is to have each of the country exhibitors pay $15 a year and also take one share of stock at $10.00.

Whether or not the concern can operate on this revenue is another question which will be decided by results.

The organization claims that exhibitor members will have to pay no more return express, that they will be booked at a big saving on state rights propositions and special releases and that they will be required to pay no more deposits on advanced bookings or regular features.

Furthermore, the corporation promises the advice of a competent attorney whose services will at all times be at the disposal of members.

The Man Inside the Booth

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

I have been doing some figuring on better projection, and I am going to take this opportunity to ask your advice about it. I have a sixty-nine-foot throw from the machine to the curtain, and my hall is thirty-one feet wide. Will it work all right to move the booth six feet nearer the screen and then buy some lumber and make a frame and cover with sheathing and paint with two or three coats of aluminum paint, and hang in front of the stage, taking down the chalk white curtain I have now? Is there any special grade of sheathing necessary for this? About what size should the screen be for a sixty-three-foot throw? I want to make this myself, as I can save considerable money by doing so, and I believe that I can make a good screen. I will appreciate your answering this at once.—F. L. N., Buffalo, Kansas.

In moving the screen six feet nearer to the machine you will reduce the size of the picture; that is, if you use the same lens that you are now using. You do not give the size of your present picture so I can not tell you just how much smaller it will be, but by dividing the width of the picture by the number of feet it is projected, the result will be the fraction of a foot its width is increased with each foot of distance.

Take the width of your present picture and divide it by sixty-nine and take that result and multiply it by six, the number of feet that you are moving the screen. Subtract the result from the width of your present picture and that will give you the size of the picture after you move the screen. I would advise a nine by twelve picture for the average size theater. I believe that you will find that making a screen out of aluminum is more of a job than you think it is and I would not attempt it if I were you. To make an aluminum screen that will give good results requires that the aluminum be put on by a special process and it takes a man who understands it to make a good job of it.

How to Make a Screen

In my opinion, a good white screen is as good as any on the market and a whole lot better than a lot of them. In making a screen use good, heavy muslin, either bleached or unbleached. You can buy as wide as one hundred and forty-four inches. Have the widths sewed with a felled seam. Make the frame for the screen out of 2″x4″ lumber and brace the corners well. In mounting the screen on the frame, start to tack it on at the top and in the center.

Then stretch the goods to each corner at the top and tack. Then tack between the center and the corners. Next stretch the goods at the bottom and center of the frame and tack, then stretch to the corners and tack. Then tack between the center and the corners. Then tack in the center of one of the sides then at the center of the other side and then tack the sides from one corner to the other. In putting the goods on in this manner you will have it on the frame tight and smooth.

To make an aluminum screen, give the screen two or three light coats of flat white paint, and then one coat of Japanese varnish. As the varnish begins to get sticky put on the dry aluminum with an air-brush. It is next to impossible to apply aluminum in a liquid form with a brush without leaving brush marks on the screen. There is another way that the aluminum mat may be applied but it does not make nearly as good a job as the air-brush process does. The dry aluminum may be puffed on, i. e., take a bunch of cotton and make a puff of it (like the ladies use on their faces) and as the varnish begins to set, start at the top of the screen and put the dry aluminum on the same as the ladies use face powder. If the screen is very large you will have to work fast with the aluminum or the varnish will set before you get the aluminum on.

In making a white screen, use Alabastine and mix according to the directions. Then add just a little blue ocher. Apply to the screen with whitewash brush. Allow the first coat to get good and dry, then give the screen a second coat. Do not mix the Alabastine too thick.

In making the frame for the screen, make it one foot larger than the size of the picture all the way around. After the sceen is completed, turn the light from the machine on the screen and with a chalk line snap the size of the picture on the screen. I would allow two inches inside of the picture for the chalk line. Paint all space outside of the lines with flat black paint. Better still, if you have the space, make a shadow box to fit the screen and extend it at least eighteeen inches from the screen. The frame of this box can be made with ⅞x2″ lumber and should fit so that it will extend from the screen on a 45-degree angle. Cover the framework with flat black cloth.

A New Carbon Holder

I have received a sample of the carbon holder which is made by Brother E. M. Schwarz, 2040 Taylor street, San Francisco, California. This holder is made to use with the Silvertip carbons and I can recommend it to the managers and operators as being a first class adapter and carbon saver. It will fit in any lamp jaw and is easy to adjust. It sells for one dollar and may be obtained by writing Brother Schwartz and enclosing the price. Brother Schwartz is a member of Local No. 162, I. A little over a week ago there was another film fire at Baird's Theater on Virginia avenue.

One arrest was made in connection with the Colfax building fire of Thursday night and renewed assurances were given by the authorities who are making the various investigations that the case will not be dropped until every person involved has been punished. The man held is Louis Sereinsky, head of the Oxon Chemical Company, a film renovating concern that has quarters in the Colfax basement. Films which were left standing in the open basement, instead of being placed in the fire-proof vault, are blamed for the fire. Sereinsky is charged with manslaughter and held in jail on default of $2,500 bond.

The affidavit against Sereinsky is based on an Indiana law which provides that, "No tenement house, nor any part thereof, nor of the lot on which it is situated, shall be used as a place of storage, keeping or handling of any articles, dangerous or detrimental to life or health * * *." A violation of the statute is only a misdemeanor, but Prosecutor Rucker pointed out that death resulting from a violation of the statute is a basis for the charge of manslaughter.

The city, county and state officials are investigating this fire and we may expect some stringent laws in the near future in regards to film exchanges and booths. What a shame it is that six innocent lives have to be sacrificed to bring about the proper handling of film. The soldier on the front, "Somewhere in France," is no more a martyr than these six people are. Let us hope that this sad incident will arouse the officials and public to the point where they will cause laws to be passed that will eliminate these death traps.

Every exchangeman, every manager and, last but not least, every brother operator, must, for the sake of the public in general and the people who patronize the exchanges and theaters, get busy, today, and see to it that the film that is in your care or that you are responsible for, is handled in the "Safety First" way. In the last week I have been in three different exchanges where film was allowed to lay around on the work benches without any protction whatever. These exchanges are located in office buildings and every person in these buildings is liable to the same fate that befell the six unfortunates of the Colfax fire. Operators who work with machines which are not equipped with the proper fire protection, i. e., automatic fire shutter and magazines, should insist that the managers equip their machines with these articles at once.

Robert Jennings Mathis, formerly editor of the Elbert Moore Scenario School, is now on the staff of Motography. He will be glad to hear from any of his former students and to answer questions in regard to scenario writing. Since leaving the Elbert Moore School he has been engaged as scenario editor for the Eagle Film Company.

The Universal Joker Company has completed a one act comedy entitled "His Last Scent."

MARY PICKFORD IN NEW PLAY

Great Demand for the Newest Pickford Offering Because of Remarkable Success Attained by "A Poor Little Rich Girl"

The wide success of Mary Pickford's current Artcraft picture, "A Poor Little Rich Girl" has excited additional interest among theater managers and public alike, in the activities of this most popular girl of the screen.

The fact that "Little Mary's" newest offering, "A Romance of the Redwoods," is something entirely different from anything in which she has ever appeared and that it is staged under the personal direction of Cecil B. DeMille, producer of "Joan the Woman," has naturally made the Artcraft executives highly optimistic as regards this subject, which will be released May 14.

In speaking of the added impetus given to Miss Pickford's popularity as a result of "A Poor Little Rich Girl," Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft, said: "Never in the history of motion pictures has the release of a production evidenced such a flood of compliments. Once again Mary Pickford has proved to the world that hers is an art of inimitable and supreme merit. The wonderful popularity of this girl-actress can scarcely be appreciated by anyone not directly associated with her work. Her former triumphs have made her the best known actress on the screen today, and 'A Poor Little Rich Girl' has placed her even further ahead as "America's Sweetheart' and a box-office attraction extraordinary to the extent of hundreds of inquiries daily from people in and out of the industry as to her next subject. It is difficult to imagine a greater success than 'A Poor Little Rich Girl,' but advance reports on 'A Romance of the Redwoods' certainly indicate that this will prove the case when the newest Pickford offering directed by Cecil B. De Mille is released next month by Artcraft."

Dorothy Dalton as Feminist Heroine

Dorothy Dalton, the Triangle-Ince star, has earned the title of "feminist heroine," because of her characterizations of the woman lawyer in "The Weaker Sex," and the young business woman in "Back of the Man." She represents the woman of today—the woman who demonstrates that the possession of brains does not lessen feminine charm.

Dorothy Dalton—lawyer.

Yet this same actress has also created some of the least admirable types of femininity. In "Chicken Casey" she is a girl of the Bowery; in the "Gamble in Souls" she takes the part of a flashy cabaret singer, and in "The Dark Road" she is a soulless creature who believes herself a re-incarnation of Cleopatra.

Dorothy Dalton was born in Chicago in 1893. After her education in high school and the Convent of the Sacred Heart, she decided to become an actress. Her father opposed the ambition, believing that his daughter would make an admirable lawyer—just as she did on the screen in "The Weaker Sex." Thereupon she proved her argumentative powers by persuading him not only to sanction a stage career but to send her to the American Conservatory of Dramatic Arts. Her first professional appearance was with the Virginia Harned Stock Company in Chicago. Later she played with a St. Paul theatrical organization, and in an act of her own on the Orpheum vaudeville circuit.

"WITHIN THE LAW" SOON

Alice Joyce Starred as Mary Turner, the Shopgirl, in Vitagraph Version of Famous Drama of the Underworld.

Motion picture producers are awaiting the release of Greater Vitagraph's screen version of Bayard Veillers' stage success "Within the Law" for the purpose of settling for all time the question of whether the exhibitors of the country and the picture patrons desire screen versions of popular, legitimate stage productions.

In the selection by Greater Vitagraph of "Within the Law" not only Vitagraph but the other producers realize that the strongest possible instrument has been chosen to settle the question. Both producers and distributors are optimistic over the outcome and are predicting that "Within the Law" will be as great a success on the screen, if not a greater success, than it was on the speaking stage.

The financial success of "Within the Law" as a legitimate production has been an argument for legislators and lawmakers all over the country in favor of taxing theatrical and motion picture interests. Lawmakers, in arguing for taxation of theatrical and motion picture interests have quoted the phenomenal runs and box office receipts of the numerous "Within the Law" companies but have failed to mention the thousands of productions that have died after a very short tryout.

At one time there were nine "Within the Law" companies at work, eight in the United States and Canada, and one in England, all playing to practically capacity business.

Since "Within the Law" opened on September 12, 1912, the different companies have played three thousand four hundred and forty-eight performances to an average of seven hundred forty dollars a performance, in the United States and Canada.

The length of the runs have been phenomenal and taken as a whole never have been equalled by any legitimate stage production. Nearly every drama that has followed "Within the Law" has had a line in its advertising promotion which usually reads "Just as good as Within the Law."

To persons familiar with "Within the Law," and there are millions throughout the country, the advertising of "Mary Turner" was just as effective as the advertising of "Within the Law." To every theater attendant "Mary Turner" is known as "the most wonderful shopgirl in the world." The entire story of "Within the Law" is founded on the arrest and conviction of Mary Turner, a shopgirl, for a theft not committed by her.

Alice Joyce, the popular Vitagraph star, is the persecuted shopgirl of Greater Vitagraph's version of the story. She is co-starred with Harry Morey, who does absolutely his best work before the camera as Jos Garson, "the best little forger in the United States." The picture opened at the Broadway Theater, New York, on April 29.

New Announcement Scheme

J. E. Willis, president and general manager of the American Bioscope Company, Chicago, has sprung another new one. This time it is in the form of a film trailer which takes care, in a practical way, of announcing the future attractions of an entire week.

Mr. Willis has titled this new trailer "The Calendar of Stars," inasmuch as it heralds the coming features with motion pictures of the stars themselves. "The Calendar of Stars" is a simple and thoroughly appealing style of announcement presentation and demands very little attention in its maintenance and upkeep.

Every popular player in filmdom is available—the stars of every producing company in America—and are cleverly and artistically panelled and masked in five foot strips. There is hardly an exhibitor who will not welcome this practical solution of the announcement problem. It is a real innovation—up to the very minute.

Double Exposure Juggled

A new standard of "double exposure" photography is declared to have been set by Director Raymond B. West in the Triangle-Kay Bee production of "The Snarl," the new drama in which Thomas H. Ince presents Bessie Barriscale as star. In this play, Miss Barriscale portrays a dual role, i. e., each of twin sisters, and many of the scenes show the girls in each other's company. These, therefore, necessitated some rare effects in double-exposure.

Exhibitor's Service Praises Film

The Motion Picture Reporting Service, of Chicago, which has a large clientele of theaters throughout the country, reports on Vitagraph's Special Blue Ribbon Feature, "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," as follows:

"Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," seven-reel Vitagraph military and war drama, featuring Alice Joyce and Harry Morey. Supported by Peggy Hyland, Naomi Childers, James Morrison, Mary Maurice and others. This shows the unpreparedness of the United States in comparison with other countries. It illustrates the advantage the U. S. has over other countries by quick preparedness, etc., etc. The monster mass meetings being held in every center and the nation aroused by enthusiastic patriotism. Young ladies after the loss of relatives, volunteer to join the Red Cross and become secret agents, offering up their lives for their country. A sister to a U. S. officer who is a secret agent, is trapped and sentenced to public execution, and her brother's sweetheart, secretly a U. S. spy, pleads desperately to save her, as she is a woman but they will not hear her. She is also found out later and signals her lover, who saves her by proving to the enemy officers the power of the U. S., should they take action. Immediately after they are released war breaks out and the enemy breaks through the U. S. trenches and we witness some real fighting—the exploding of great guns and the effect they have; submarines in action and sinking battleships by the use of torpedoes; high explosives demolishing churches, hospitals and everything they come in contact with.

A subject full of punch and will pull on the heart strings of all who see it. It is exciting and thrilling, even the subtitles are thrillers. We seldom find a picture that will be enjoyed more than this subject will be by both men and women. It is a war picture and a timely subject and very few equal to it for this kind of entertainment. It carries a good plot. Acting, scenery and photography excellent. Rated 100.

The same service has this to say regarding Paula Blackton's one reel children's picture, "The Diary of a Puppy":

"The Diary of a Puppy," one-reel Vitagraph of country life. This subject deals with several little collies (puppies) about half size. It carries a sort of story and is a dandy one-reel subject. It can be used in place of a comedy and will produce several laughs and go over good with any audience. Photography and scenery good. Rated 95.

Detroit Theaters Run "De Luxes"

That the policy of Greater Vitagraph of re-issuing in de luxe form some of the early successes of the company, has been demonstrated to be the proper course to pursue through the experience last week of the Family Theater, Detroit, which booked "A Million Bid" for a two-day run and simply packed the house at every performance. The Family Theater is a house of fairly large seating capacity and playing it to capacity with almost any picture is some task. "A Million Bid" is one of the early Vitagraph successes in which Anita Stewart and Harry Morey play the leading parts.

Last week might almost have been considered "Anita Stewart" week in downtown Detroit. "The More Excellent Way" was booked for the entire week at the Liberty; "The Girl Philippa" had a four-day run at the Regent: "A Million Bid" was at the Family for two days. At the Peoples' and the Eagle, two other big houses, "The Juggernaut" and "The Glory of Yolanda" were presented.

"Her Secret" at Rialto

Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto Theater, New York, has selected another Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, "Her Secret," to head his program for the week of April 29. "Her Secret" is described as an unusual drama, starring Alice Joyce and Harry Morey.

Managing Director Rothapfel selected "Her Secret" because of its out of the ordinary qualities and striking turn of story. Mr. Rothapfel has been making Vitagraph productions the basis of his program. This remarkable honor accorded to Blue Ribbon Features gives them the stamp of approval of one of the world's greatest showmen and proves their value in the eyes of astute exhibitors. "Her Secret" stands out as one of the best things ever produced at the Vitagraph studios.

Appearing with Miss Joyce and Mr. Morey in "Her Secret" are Robert Kelly, Mary Maurice, George Cooper, Patsy De Forest and Kittens Reichert.

Sells Films in United Kingdom

Chester Beecroft has made arrangements for the sale of the product of the Triumph Film Corporation in the United Kingdom to Bolton-Stewart, Ltd., of London.

Mr. Beecroft has an agreement with Bolton-Stewart, Ltd., to furnish them each month, for the next two years, with four of the best American made productions. He is already supplying Bolton-Stewart, Ltd., with one picture a month—the Frohman Superpictures. Among these are included "The Witching Hour," and their latest big subject, "God's Man."

The Triumph sale also calls for one feature a month. The productions which the Triumph has made were directed by Julius Steger and stand out as being among the finest pictures obtainable.

Mr. Beecroft has negotiations under way with other producers to place their pictures with Bolton-Stewart, Ltd., and the names of those concerns whose features are selected will be announced upon the completion of negotiations.

TO FILM STORY IN SOUTH

"The Bar Sinister," Screened in Thomasville, Georgia, by Edgar Lewis Company With Co-operation of Townspeople. Race Prejudice Story

That truth is stranger than press agent stories was brought home forcibly to the Edgar Lewis Company when they arrived in Thomasville, Ga., to use the turpentine forests of that locality for the staging of the outdoor scenes of "The Bar Sinister." Much of the action of Tony P. Kelly's original story is laid in a turpentine still in the south and Mr. Lewis found the little town of Thomasville ideal for his locations.

When the director and his company arrived in the village they found the population in a fever of excitement because a mulatto woman had stolen a white child and succeeded in escaping with it. The interest of Edgar Lewis and his actors in the cause of the excitement was heightened by the fact that they had come to Thomasville to stage the very tragedy which was being enacted before their eyes; for in the opening scenes of "The Bar Sinister," a mulatto woman, Lindy, steals the child of her white master, because she loses her own babe of the same age and loves the little white girl like a daughter. The loss of her own child causes her to lose her mind and the white baby is raised in a lonely cabin by the half crazed negro woman. The theft of the little white child in Thomasville was doubly exciting because the child was recovered and was stolen a second time by the same woman who then made good her escape.

Mr. Lewis had some misgivings about staging scenes in Thomasville which resembled so closely what had actually occurred in the locality, but was soon reassured by the town's people and spent several weeks in the neighborhood picturizing the intensely interesting plot of Mr. Kelly's powerful story of race prejudice.

$16,000 Paper Order

Williamson Brothers have contracted with the Greenwich Lithographing Company for an extra large edition of paper for their third picture, "The Submarine Eye." This was done to enable them to secure paper in five colors at a six cent price, so that exhibitors can purchase these posters at cost.

Worthy Butts, who negotiated the deal for the Greenwich Company, after seeing a private run of "The Submarine Eye," declared it the best money maker he had ever seen, and to back up his judgment, increased the paper order to sixteen thousand dollars on his own responsibility. Below are two scenes from the feature.

Therefore, "The Submarine Eye" will go forth into the world on May 6 with sixteen thousand dollars worth of paper back of it, ranging in size from half-sheet window cards to twenty-four sheet stands.

Beecroft Places Cub Comedies

Chester Beecroft, from his new offices in the Astor Trust Building, 501 Fifth avenue, New York, has concluded negotiations with the Australasian Film Company for the sale of Cub Comedies to that firm in the Australasia territory. The Australasian Film Company will use a new Cub subject every week for a long period of time.

Harry H. Poppe, recently with David Horsley at the David Horsley studios in Los Angeles, has returned to New York, and has become associated with Chester Beecroft in his export business, which is now being conducted from his new office at Room 812 Astor Trust Building, 501 Fifth avenue, New York.

Barbara Tennant is here at the left gazing into "the submarine eye," and judging from her expression it must be a new experience to see revealed the country beneath the sea, and all its stories.

Native releasing a diver, below, and another scene from "The Submarine Eye," the first independent Williamson Brothers production. It shows remarkable progress in undersea photography.

Enid Bennett Stars in "Happiness"

Enid Bennett will make her third appearance on the Triangle program May 13th in a Kay Bee play by C. Gardner Sullivan, entitled "Happiness." This is by far the most novel and appealing vehicle that Miss Bennett has obtained since she came under the management of Thomas H. Ince, and the young Australian favorite makes the most of every opportunity accorded her in the working out of an interesting and amusing characterization. In "Happiness," C. Gardner Sullivan has written a comedy-drama which is a worthy successor to "Home," "The Bugle Call" and "Plain Jane." Reginald Barker directed the production.

"The Man Who Made Good," featuring Jack Devereaux and Winifred Allen, will also be released on the same date.

Fox Makes "Kiddie" Features

"Fox Kiddie Features," in which all of the parts are taken by children, are soon to be released on the Fox program. William Fox, after mature deliberation, decided to make this step, and the features will entertain the grown-ups as well as the children.

For this purpose Mr. Fox, while in California, established a company of children who are to film the stories of the land of make-believe, and specially written scenarios on children's subjects, and the stories that are familiar to every school child. In addition he has opened a school wherein expression, so necessary for moving picture work, and elocution, will be taught to the little mummers. Another company of children will be established in one of the Fort Lee studios. In this way Mr. Fox expects to release a "Fox Kiddie Feature" monthly.

When asked about his new field of photoplay production Mr. Fox said:

"From time to time prominent educators throughout the United States have agreed that photoplays are the greatest source of education, especially for children, but they have also agreed that there has been no concerted action taken by any producer to give to the children such photoplays that would not overtax their little brains and at the same time give them clean educational subjects. For that reason I intend that there should be released every month a photoplay made for children by children. These photoplays are to be instructive and at the same time entertaining.

"Instead of children going to see dramas that may have a tendency to excite them, I am going to give them photoplays that will make them leave the theater with a mind filled with pure and clean thoughts. They will see come to life those mythical characters which they so love to read and tell each other about."

Goldwyn Distributors Incorporated

Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, with a capital stock of $1,000,000, has been chartered at Albany to operate and maintain the branch offices and handle the releases of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation throughout America.

The incorporators are Samuel Goldfish, Archibald Selwyn and G. L. Hess. The formation of this distribution mechanism will now be followed by the immediate organization of the Goldwyn branches in the principal cities of the United States.

Goldwyn's methods of film salesmanship will be a radical departure from those practiced throughout the industry, in that, for the first time, the selling methods of the nation's greatest industrial corporations will be introduced into the rental of motion pictures.

The Goldwyn owners have felt that the selling methods employed by the steel or automobile industries, for example, could be paralleled successfully by film distributors, and all of the preliminary work for the installation of this type of organization is under way.

Meet the Film Doctor

Many are the exhibitors who have torn their hair because of the condition of some of the films they must show. Most of the exchanges have some sort of cleaning and renovating department, but it is still a fact that a great many films are shown which are not in first class condition.

To remedy just this situation, A. Teitel, of Chicago, has organized a cleaning and renovating establishment of his own and gives the same attention to a film that a physician gives to a patient. Mr. Teitel eliminates the dissatisfaction caused by the imperfect cleaning by some of the machines used, by doing all his work by hand.

The exhibitors who have run films renovated by Mr. Teitel remark about their good condition and it may be that this film doctor's methods will be adopted in the future by all those who are interested in keeping the films in first class condition.

"Peace" Changed to "War"

All prints of "The Battle Cry of Peace," the big Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., preparedness spectacle have been called in and will be retitled and re-edited. The picture, after it has been rehabilitated, will be renamed "The Battle Cry of War."

As originally released certain titles in "The Battle Cry of Peace" might be construed as arguments against war, said Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, who supervised the production of "The Battle Cry of Peace." "If there is a single foot of film in that picture or a single word in any title that might, even in the remotest way, suggest to any person that he should not enlist, we want that doubtful part removed."

After all the prints have been completely revamped new advertising paper of all kinds will be issued and the picture will be pushed as an enlistment argument.

Actress Hikes for Recruits

Dora Rodruiges, "The Universal Girl," has started a ten thousand mile hike in order to try and raise forty thousand recruits for the army and navy. The start was made from New York with the co-operation of the various branches of the volunteer and regular service.

Miss Rodruiges started from Loew's New York Theater and walked down Broadway, accompanied by a detachment from the army and navy. The first important town on the itinerary is Newark, New Jersey. The line of march includes Princeton, Trenton, Philadelphia, Wilmington, Baltimore, Annapolis and Washington.

In Washington Miss Rodrigues will visit the president and the Army and Navy Departments. After leaving Washington she will pass through Cumberland, Pittsburgh, Youngstown, Cleveland, Akron and Columbus, where she will stop for a visit with her relatives.

The hike will be continued through Dayton, Detroit, Kalamazoo, Chicago, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City and San Francisco. The trip will take about eight months and Miss Rodruiges will endeavor to secure recruits in each town she passes through.

Triangle Issues New Herald

John W. Hanson, manager of supplies for the Triangle Distributing Corporation, has recently put into the hands of Triangle exhibitors a novelty herald which is meeting with well-merited success.

When folded, the herald measures 3½ by 5½ inches, and is printed in brown and green by the Rotogravure process. From past experience, Mr. Hanson is of the opinion that the ordinary herald is too large. He has sought to solve this problem by making the present piece of advertising matter of a size that can easily slip into a man's pocket or a lady's handbag or into the ordinary envelope.

Universal Sheds Red Feathers

Universal Film Manufacturing Company has discontinued the Red Feather Brand of feature pictures. No further productions, bearing this trade-mark, will appear on the Universal program in the future.

"Efficiency Man" With Paralta

W. H. Brooks, the certified public accountant, lately associated with the Westinghouse Company, will be the head of the accounting department of Paralta Plays, Inc., and the Paralta Plan. Mr. Brooks has been studying the accounting features of moving picture production and distribution during the past two years, coincidentally with the investigations of Carl Anderson, Herman Fichtenberg and Nat. I. Brown as a basis for the formulating of the Paralta Plan.

Mr. Brooks has worked out a system of computing costs in connection with a production, which, with due allowances for contingencies, will give the producer a practical progressive working cost sheet, showing almost to the dollar what a picture will cost, if the original script is adhered to by the director.

Mr. Brooks has also worked out distribution systems on lines that will eliminate waste and unnecessary expense. His work has been to demonstrate in figures the results of the inquiries and investigations made by Messrs. Anderson, Fichtenberg and Brown. Whenever they have developed a feature of waste in the picture industry, Mr. Brooks has been called into consultation as the mathematical specialist in studying and applying a corrective. Mr. Brooks' work will have a very conspicuous place in the development of the Paralta Plan.

New William Russell Play

"The Frame-Up," the next American-Mutual production in which William Russell is starred, will be a refreshing departure from the more serious dramas in which Mr. Russell has been appearing. Mr. Russell's exceptional strength and agility will be called into play in this photodrama.

In one scene he is required to leap from one automobile to the running board of another, climb to the roof of the second car, lower himself into the hood of that car, and then engage in a tussle with its driver.

In another scene he is in the rear seat of an automobile with a policeman on either side. From this predicament he escapes by leaning forward, then suddenly turning a back somersault over the rear of the car and landing on his feet before the officers can catch him.

There's lots of gimp and punch in William Russell's next American-Mutual, "The Frame-up."

LaSalle Comedies Through Mutual

Negotiations have been completed by which the Mutual Film Corporation will release LaSalle comedies, produced by the LaSalle Film Company of Chicago and Los Angeles.

The first series will consist of three two-reel comedies to be released bi-weekly beginning May 7. They will be followed by a series of fifty-two two-reel pictures to be released weekly commencing June 12.

M. De la Purelle, La Salle Film Company, Chicago.

LaSalle comedies will be produced under the direction of M. De la Purelle, a director of unquestioned ability, the man who made "The Hoosier School Master" and other important successes. Each LaSalle comedy will be produced with the care of a big production. A popular comedian and comedienne will be starred in each. The two-reel series consists of: "The Prodigal Uncle," released May 7; "Chubby Inherits a Harem," released May 21, and "The Flight that Failed," released June 4.

"His Cannibal Wife," scheduled for release June 12, is the first of the single reel series. It will be followed at weekly intervals by "Tillie of the Nine Lives," "The Girl in the Frame," "Discords in 'A' Flat," "When Lulu Danced the Hula," "The Kissing Butterfly," "A Match in Quarantine," "Man Proposes" and "Pigs and Pearls."

LaSalle comedies will be an addition to Mutual's list of featurettes.

Idea Book for Exhibitors

Like the well-advertised "Twentieth Century" which rushes daily between Chicago and New York with "all the comforts of home and travel combined," the new Helen Holmes photo-novel, "The Railroad Raiders," is going out to theater men all over the country with every service aid conceivable to make this great feature serial as popular as the twenty-hour train.

The latest help to the exhibitor for this twentieth century serial is an "Idea Book" of which Terry Ramsaye, director of publicity for the Mutual Film Corporation, is the conductor. This book, attractively designed and conveniently arranged, hits the exhibitor between the eyes with a startling cover in black and white on orange with a picture of Helen Holmes and a speeding train to command attention.

If by any possible chance the theater man fails to open the book he will miss not only the foreword by John R. Freuler, president of Mutual, but such helps as "Getting the Money with 'The Railroad Raiders,'" by Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the Signal Film Corporation, the producing company; "Continued Story Value," by Dennis J. Sullivan, assistant general manager of the Mutual; "How to Put Across 'The Railroad Raiders,'" by Mr. Freuler; press stories, newspaper cuts, newspaper advertising suggestions, a campaign of small ads and schemes for getting the crowds, arranged by Mr. Ramsaye, and the posters, show cards and usual accessories service.

The book should be of great service to every live exhibitor and should mean much toward the success of the greatest of Helen Holmes offerings.

Star Appears at Theaters

Fifty-two theaters in Chicago and other cities within a radius of two hundred miles have "booked" Bryant Washburn to appear personally in conjunction with evening showings of his current Essanay feature, "Skinner's Bubble." This production is a sequel to "Skinner's Dress Suit," and was released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, April 23.

Theater owners did a land-office business in obtaining Mr. Washburn's presence at their showings of "Skinner's Dress Suit." The screen star, attired in the manner in which he appeared on the screen, would make short addresses after each showing of the picture, and then be introduced to the patrons personally by the manager in the lobby. Every house adopting this "live wire" exhibiting method reported packed houses for every performance. This success, which has attracted wide-spread attention in and around Chicago, caused Mr. Washburn to be overflowed with appeals from exhibitors for similar appearances at their showings of "Skinner's Bubble." In several instances Miss Hazel Daly, who portrays the role of Honey, Skinner's adoring little wife, also has been "booked" to appear together with the star.

Camera Club President with Goldwyn

Philip E. Rosen, one of the best known camera men in the motion picture industry, is the latest technical acquisition at the Goldwyn plant. He has just left the Fox plant after three years of service to join this newer organization.

Rosen is known throughout the country as the president of the Cinema Camera Club, and likewise as Theda Bara's cameraman. He is working with the Arthur Hopkins Company, which is making the second Maxine Elliott picture for Goldwyn. Rosen is from Machias, Me., and has worked with Edison, Universal, Fox and now with Goldwyn.

Stage on Wheels

Producers in California, as well as other places, who depend on the good nature of weather often find outdoor sets, made to utilize the sunshine, ruined overnight by rain. Sometimes bad weather stops work on the sets during the daytime.

To overcome this David Horsley has in use at his studios a stage built on trucks and a track. This can be run from the studio out into the open air and vice versa as the whims of the weather dictate.

William Fox announces that C. M. Franklin will direct Gladys Brockwell's forthcoming productions for Fox Film Corporation. Mr. Franklin has already begun work with the star in the studios at Hollywood, California. The new addition to the large Fox directorial forces on the Pacific Coast is one of the two widely-known Franklin Brothers, Chester M. and Sidney A. The fame of this pair in motion pictures is rivalled only by the team of William and Dustin Farnum, also members of the Fox contingent in Hollywood.

Jackie Saunders in "The Wildcat"

Jackie Saunders plays another hoydenish role in "The Wildcat," her second production for Mutual, released April 23. The story might be classified as an un-to-date "Taming of the Shrew."

Jackie Saunders, as Bethesda Carewe, the spoiled daughter of wealthy parents, declares that she will not marry anyone—and especially Mortimer Hunt, played by Arthur Shirley.

Then the war is on, and the tricks which Bethesda plays on that poor man would drive most suitors away absolutely disgusted, and incidentally will keep the audience in a state of uninterrupted laughter.

Mortimer is trying in every way to tame the spirit of this impulsive, self-willed girl, but is making little headway, and it looks as if he was going to lose out, so he kidnaps her and takes her to a shack in the mountains.

It may be that a masterful caveman has a quieting influence over rebellious women, but in this case it worked out very nicely, for after Bethesda had cooked pancakes which looked like crisp rocks, coffee with no taste at all, and a few other such failures, she began to love the man. Below are two scenes from the play.

"THE SLACKER" APPEARS

Emerald Company of Chicago to Produce War Picture to Aid in Recruiting as Well as Provide Absorbing Story

"The Slacker," a spectacular military production, in which actual units of the United States military service participate, and based upon the recent historical events leading up to the declaration of war against Germany, is being produced by the Emerald Motion Picture Company of Chicago, under the auspices and direction of the Wisconsin Defense League.

It is a semi-official government proposition, the army, navy, marines and national guard co-operating in producing the military scenes.

"The Slacker" has three aims: First, it is produced to assist in the recruiting campaign; to portray for educational purposes the real reasons why the United States went to war with Germany; and third, to show the activities of German government agents in the United States.

The scene is laid upon the University of Wisconsin campus at Madison, and students and townspeople co-operate in the production. Actual photos of the artillery and cavalry in action are included, together with pictures of the United States naval training station near Chicago, showing the great crowd of "Rookies" and embryo sailors now packing the grounds. One of the spectacular parts is the sinking of an American passenger ship by a German submarine.

While made primarily to meet the Wisconsin situation, where there has been more war activity than in any other middle western state, the picture will be produced in all cities in the country. It is truly a picture with a "punch," the realism of the military effects being one of the most striking points.

As its title suggests, "The Slacker" deals with a young man who slacks his duty as an American and who has come under the influence of a German government agent. Though replete with stirring scenes there is no "flag waving" for effect, and is based upon a strong and consistent story.

A wellknown screen star is to be engaged and she, with a prominent leading man, will be seen in the production, which is being made under the personal supervision of Frederick J. Ireland, president of the Emerald Motion Picture Company.

Country Life Series

The Strand Theater, New York City, showed Greater Vitagraph's "The Spring Idyl," of Paula Blackton's "Country Life Series," as a special added attraction for its program of April 15. The screen appearance of Paula Blackton, one of New York's social leaders and wife of Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, the Vitagraph director general, has been one of the events of the film year.

"The Country Life Series" presents a refreshing new screen idea. They were written with the idea of letting mothers know just how attractive child life in the great out-doors may be. Mrs. Blackton appears in the series, being assisted by her two children, Violet, aged six, and Charles, aged four, and by her sister, Jewell Hunt.

"The Spring Idyl" tells a charmingly refreshing and wholesome little story.

New Lockwood Leading Lady

Carmel Myers, one of the youngest of the newly discovered stars, and a recent "find" of D. W. Griffith's, has been engaged by Fred J. Balshofer to support Harold Lockwood in the film version of "The Haunted Pajamas," the novel by Francis Perry Elliott, which is now under production at the Metro-Yorke studios in Los Angeles.

Miss Myers, who is a striking beauty of the brunette type, has been watched with considerable interest since her advent into the pictures not more than six months ago.

Jackie Saunders likes hoydenish roles, and she fits 'em, too. Find herewith a couple of scenes from her latest play, "The "Wildcat." The story is up there in the left hand corner.

Quo Vadis Republished

"Quo Vadis?", film classic, which stands as a beacon light amongst motion pictures, and which is credited with having blazed the way for the multiple reel feature in the United States, is to be revived on a gigantic scale by George Kleine who first showed this film in this country.

The revival of this famous picture should not be regarded as an ordinary re-issue, Mr. Kleine states, but may be accepted as a new "Quo Vadis?", inasmuch as the film will be re-edited, new titles provided, new scenes added, and the entire film story strengthened with a splendor that cannot help but enhance its value.

At the present time, when there is such universal interest in the laws that govern the treatment of convicts before and after their release from prison, there will be a strong appeal in the theme of "Light in Darkness," a story by Peter B. Kyne that has been produced in five reels at the studios of Thomas A. Edison, Inc. The plot of the story is based on the injustice that may result from the law that prohibits paroled convicts from marrying within two years after they leave a penitentiary. The leading parts in "Light in Darkness," are played by Shirley Mason and Frank Morgan, both of whom are players of wide reputation.

Recruiting at Universal City

The only United States army recruiting station located in a motion picture studio has been established at Universal City as a branch of the Los Angeles recruiting station.

Sergeant L. E. Lee and an assistant came to the picture plant this week with application blanks and established a station under the giant pepper trees adjoining the administration building.

The stars and stripes and a huge banner with the inscription, "Men Wanted For the United States Army," attracted directors, actors and other employes of the studios. Already a number of the Universalites are members of the Hollywood Company of Coast Artillery and a number of the actresses are active Red Cross workers.

Marie Cahill in Comedies

Marie Cahill, one of the cleverest comediennes on the American stage, will appear in three comedies for the Mutual Film Corporation.

These comedies will be two reels in length and are scheduled for bi-weekly release starting April 30.

The titles and release dates are: "Gladys' Day Dream," April 30; "When Betty Bets," May 14; "Patsy's Partner," May 28.

Miss Cahill's name has long been associated with successes in straight and musical comedies and the top liner in vaudeville. Among her most pronounced successes in recent years were "Molly Moonshine," "Nancy Brown," "Marrying Mary," "The Boys and Betty," "The Opera Ball," "Flirts" and "Judy Forgot."

Miss Cahill made her first stage appearance in Brooklyn in "Kathleen Mavoureen" and later her regular professional debut at Poole's Eighth Street Theater in "C. O. D." Her next appearance was in Charles Hoyt's "A Tin Soldier," and after that she appeared at the Shaftesbury Theater in London in "Morocco Bound." Later productions in which Miss Cahill scored successes were "Sporting Life," "A Runaway Girl," "Monte Carlo" and "Three Little Lambs."

Cincinnati Producer Active

A deal of importance has just been consummated in Cincinnati between the Facts Film Corporation and Ralph E. Peckham of the Queen City. Under the terms of the contract Mr. Peckham becomes sole distributor for the United States and Canada for the pictures produced by the Facts Film Corporation.

The Facts Film Corporation have just recently come into existence through the discovery of a new process whereby pictures of the cartoon type can be made much superior to what have already been produced along this line.

The first picture, which has already been released, is "The Big Question." This picture is one of timely interest and full of patriotism and was purchased in its entirety by a distributing organization in New York.

"How About You?" is the title of the second picture to be released shortly. This picture is one of intense dramatic interest which will appeal to every man, woman and child who sees it in view of the national events now transpiring in our country. After the release of "How About You?" there will be two pictures produced and released each month through the foremost exchanges throughout the United States and Canada.

Temporary offices are now located at 23 Opera Place, Cincinnati, Ohio, but will be removed in a short period of time to New York City.

Shirley Supports Jackie Saunders

Arthur Shirley has been engaged to play opposite Jackie Saunders in the series of five-reel productions which E. D. Horkheimer is producing for Mutual. Mr. Shirley succeeds Frank Mayo, who played with Miss Saunders in her first production for Mutual, "Sunny Jane."

Mr. Shirley tells the following story of how he came into the motion picture world.

For some years I was on the legitimate stage in Australia, playing leading parts. At that time there were no picture producing companies in Australia. A contest was started to decide who was the most handsome man among the professional folk over there, and the winner was to be offered a contract with the first motion picture company in Australia. I had the good fortune to be the recipient of the largest number of votes, and was awarded a two-year contract with the Australian Film Company in which I appeared in five-reel features. My first picture was a typical Aunstralian story dealing with sheep raising life.

I went on with my contract until the war broke out and then the Australian Company made an arrangement whereby I could come to America and appear in pictures with the Kalem Company. From there I came to the Horkheimer studios.

Fielding with World

Romaine Fielding has just joined the directorial staff of the World Film Corporation. Mr. Fielding is now at the World Fort Lee studios, supervising the production of "The Crimson Dove," in which Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge are starred, with Marie La Varre, Edward N. Hoyt, Dion Titheradge, Julia Stewart and Norman Hackett in the foremost roles.

Mr. Fielding has recently completed "The Wit of a Woman," featuring Muriel Ostriche and Arthur Ashley. This production will be released on the World Film program on May 14.

R. H. Cochrane was an interested spectator of the filming of the big Universal Serial "The Voice on the Wire."

TO CHOOSE SIX STORIES

List of Robert W. Chambers' Novels Given to Exhibitors and Those Chosen as Best Will Be Filmed by Vitagraph.

Greater Vitagraph has placed squarely before the exhibitors of the country the question of deciding just exactly the kind of pictures they desire. The question has not been asked in any abstract way. The exhibitors have been given a list of books, many of which have entered the class of "best sellers," and they have been requested to name six of these books that they desire to have screened as "Blue Ribbon Features."

The plan to allow the exhibitors to name the pictures they desire was made possible through a contract recently entered into between Greater Vitagraph and Robert W. Chambers, the popular fiction writer, through which Greater Vitagraph purchases the right to screen any six of the Chambers' stories which have not been screened. The contract is a direct result of the tremendous acclaim with which the Chambers' story, "The Girl Philippa," which was recently screened by Greater Vitagraph, has been received by audiences throughout the country.

Not only has Greater Vitagraph purchased the privilege of screening a selection of the Chambers' books, but the company has engaged Mr. Chambers to write two scenarios which will be produced as Special Blue Ribbon Features and probably will be screened in eight-part lengths.

At numerous meetings of exhibitors held recently throughout the country, especially at meetings of the state branches of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, exhibitors have criticized some of the producing companies, declaring that many producers have not been making pictures that have been uniformly good box office attractions. In justification of this criticism the exhibitors have declared that they are closer to the general public than it is possible for the producers to be and for this reason the wideawake exhibitors are in the best possible position to know what the general public wants in the way of screen amusement.

Exhibitor Likes Idea

George L. Madison, of the John R. Thompson chain of theaters in Chicago, is enthusiastic over Greater Vitagraph's plan to allow the exhibitors to choose the Chambers' stories to be picturized. He said:

> Vitagraph is the first of the big producing companies to realize that the exhibitors, who are on their toes, know their audiences. The plan to allow the exhibitors to name the Chambers' books to be picturized is splendid. Chambers is widely read and is well liked by the magazine reading public. I shall make it my business to get in touch with the audiences of our three Chicago theaters and ascertain from the patrons, themselves, which of the Chambers' stories they wish to see on the screen. This may be done by reproducing the Greater Vitagraph query slip and passing it out at each performance but changing the wording so that the answers will come to the theater instead of going to Greater Vitagraph. It seems to me other managers might follow a similar plan. This not only will advertise the coming Chambers' pictures but will have the picture "fans" watching for the release dates.

Besides making the contract with Robert W. Chambers, Greater Vitagraph now is engaged in screening the popular novel "The Judgment House," by Sir Gilbert Parker, and Alfred Henry Lewis' western drama known as the "Wolfville" series.

NEW ETHEL BARRYMORE PLAY

"The Call of Her People" Is First of Metro's Seven Reel Features—Film Deals With Gypsy Life—Produced in Florida

Announcement has just been made by President Richard A. Rowland, of Metro Pictures Corporation, that "The Call of Her People," the first of Metro's seven-reel attraction pictures, in which Ethel Barrymore is the star, will be specially released April 30th.

"The Call of Her People" is a picture version of Edward Sheldon's great play, "Egypt," which was introduced to the speaking stage by Margaret Anglin. It has been adapted and elaborated for the screen into its present impressive form in seven acts by June Mathis, directed by John W. Noble and photographed by Herbert O. Carleton.

Miss Barrymore is seen throughout the photodrama as a gypsy girl, Egypt. First she is shown living the life of her tribe, a true child of the caravan and the open road, in love with the son of the gypsy chief. Then she is sent to live among conventional people in a great mansion, and the star has an opportunity to depict the struggle of the gypsy girl's untamed nature against the superficial restraints and restrictions of civilization. The part gives Miss Barrymore scope for the wonderful emotional powers which have placed her at the pinnacle of her profession.

Young Faro is in love with Egypt, but his father, Faro Black, chief of the tribe, forbids their marriage. The two go through with the gypsy bridal ceremony in his absence. He returns before the ceremony is completed, and making his son a prisoner, takes Egypt to the home of a rich man, Gordon Lindsay, whose child he represents her to be. Lindsay had married a gypsy girl, and after her child was born she had returned to her tribe, unable to bear the ways of civilization. Although this child had died in infancy, it now suits Faro Black's purpose to pass Egypt off as Lindsay's daughter, to prevent young Faro from marrying her.

We will leave the rest of this keen and absorbing story for your screen to tell you.

As the scene is laid in the South, full advantage has been taken in "The Call of Her People" for picturesque settings. Henry M. Flagler's handsome residence at St. Augustine, Florida, was used to represent the home of the wealthy Gordon Lindsay. Gypsy rites and ceremonies are faithfully depicted.

Exhibitors to See Triangle Star

Ruth McCord, one of the most beautiful of the Ince-Triangle girls, has been chosen to make a pilgrimage to the four corners of the United States, erecting a Triangle memorial at the farthest boundaries, north, south, east and west. Miss McCord's travels will extend over a period of one year, during which time she will make herself personally known to every Triangle exhibitor in America, addressing the patrons of each theater visited. The trip will be made by motor cycle and is announced to start at the southwest corner of the country on May first. Arrangements are now being completed for her reception in the various cities along her route.

"Night Workers" is an Essanay feature in which Marguerite Clayton is now being filmed. It will be released through K. E. S. E. Service May 21st.

Marie Cahill in Mutual Comedies

Marie Cahill, "The Goddess of Laughter," as Sir Augustus Harris called her when she was appearing in "Boccacio" at the Royal Comedy Theater, London,

Marie Cahill in "Gladys' Day Dream," the first of the three comedies she will make for Mutual.

will make her first appearance in motion pictures in "Gladys' Day Dream," the first of three comedies which will be produced for the Mutual Film Corporation by the Marden Photoplay company, under the direction of Daniel V. Arthur. "Gladys' Day Dream" is scheduled for release April 30.

Miss Cahill is possessed of a magnetic personality, which charms audiences, and there is every reason to believe that she will be received in film comedies with as much enthusiasm as she has won on the legitimate stage. "When Betty Bets" and "Patsy's Partner" constitute the rest of the series of Mutual comedies and they are plays in which "La Belle Marie" is given wide opportunities to display those off mannerisms for which she is famed.

The recognition that artists like Miss Cahill are easily leaders in favor among motion picture patrons, came with comprehension of the camera's practically unlimited possibilities and knowledge that even the subtlest shades of meaning conveyed by the elevation of an eyebrow or mere gesture of the head, are effectively registered.

Discuss New Distributing Plan

Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, Inc., and General Manager Nat Brown, met several prominent southern and western states rights men at the offices of the Paralta corporation in New York on April 26, to discuss the application of the Paralta plan to territories in which they are interested.

The proposition of the Paralta corporation is greatly interesting states rights men and exhibitors throughout the country and hundreds of managers are writing for details in reference to the Paralta plan and Paralta releases.

A meeting was held in the offices of the Paralta corporation April 19, at which several local exhibitors were present. The Paralta plan was outlined to them in full detail by Mr. Anderson. He showed them how the entire business was being bled by waste and extravagance in production and distribution, and how this burden is ultimately placed on the shoulders of the exhibitor.

Mr. Anderson emphasized his belief that a method had been found, which, if followed, would put the picture business of the country on its feet, because its direct influence was to steady and support the actual backbone of the business—the exhibitor.

If the exhibitor is not helped and sustained, it is only a question of time when lack of exhibitors will have a vital effect on the whole industry. As things stand today, large numbers of exhibitors are going out of business because they cannot stand the strain.

Roche Writes Under-Sea Thriller

Houdini, the man who has mystified the world with his extraordinary feats, will make his first appearance as a screen star in an Epic of the Elements, written by Arthur Somers Roche, recognized as one of the most brilliant authors of the present day. A resume of his achievements in the field of literature reads like an entrancing fairy tale.

In 1906, this young author sold his first story for six dollars. As late as 1915, while under contract to a concern which features paper-backed novels, he considered himself lucky to receive three hundred dollars for one of his manuscripts.

The Saturday Evening Post, which appeals to more than two million readers weekly, was the first magazine of class to recognize his genius. "Loot," when it appeared, earned Roche an enormous following. Its success was quickly overshadowed by the popularity of "A Scrap of Paper," also purchased by the Saturday Evening Post. This story is being dramatized for a Broadway presentation. He has written many other popular stories.

Hiller & Wilk Take New Offices

The remarkable growth in the business of Hiller & Wilk, Incorporated, Longacre Building, New York, has been one of the notable events in recent motion picture history. The handling of a series of big State Right Features of the calibre and importance of "The Whip," "A Mormon Maid," "The Battle of Gettysburg," and "The Wrath of the Gods," involves a vast amount of detail work, and the employment of a big organization. And then to these departments of the business you add the new series of King-Bee Comedies, with Billy West and other screen favorites which are just now creating much agreeable talk in the motion picture world, it needs little reflection to convince that Hiller & Wilk, Inc., have assumed a position of great importance in the industry and are a very busy unit.

Ibsen Play on May 7

May 7 has been set by the Mutual Film Corporation for the release of "Hedda Gabler," the screen version of Henrik Ibsen's play in which Nance O'Neil is starred. This is the second production in which Miss O'Neil has appeared on the Mutual schedule, the first being "Mrs. Belfame."

"Hedda Gabler" was filmed at the studio of the Frank Powell Producing Company. In support of Miss O'Neil appear Aubrey Beattie, Lillian Paige, Einar Linden, Ruth Byron, Alfred Hickman and Edith Campbell Walker.

Walthall in "Saint's Adventure"

"The Saint's Adventure" will be Henry B. Walthall's next Essanay feature. This photodrama, presenting the great emotional actor in an entirely different characterization from any in which he has yet been screened, will be released May 7. Exhibitors may see trade showings of the picture now at the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay branch offices.

Mary Charleson again appears as Mr. Walthall's leading woman in this production. This little actress has just garnered in for herself a nation full of praise for her latest Essanay feature, "Satan's Private Door." It was the first picture in which Essanay has featured her, and its great success has won for her a big following among photoplay patrons throughout the country.

The story of Mr. Walthall's forthcoming production was written by Willis Brown, former judge and a nationally-known figure in sociological and child-uplift work. Judge Brown is the author of many works along these lines which are used as textbooks in public schools.

Briefly, the story is this: The young rector of a fashionable church becomes disgusted with his congregation. While its members willingly give large sums for some trivial social affair, they ignore the poverty and suffering among the poor which is at their doors. The rector resigns his pastorate and goes to the far West to begin life anew. While in the woods he reads in an old issue of his home paper an account of his own death. He decides to take advantage of the somewhat ghastly mistake and return to the city and work out his cherished plan to "clean up" the slums. By strange coincidence, upon his return, a child of the slums mistakes him for its missing father. The rector, in workingman's clothes, permits the child to lead him to its mother—a good woman of the poverty-stricken class. She likewise strangely mistakes him for her husband. The disguised rector refuses to live with the woman, portraying the role of the husband and spurning her, but secretly he enlists her aid in his fight to right the wrongs done the poor. It chances that the chief wrong which he attacks is that being done by his former church. The church is charging high rentals to the poor for a tenement it owns.

How the rector, in the role of a laborer, finally triumphs provides a series of intensely interesting situations which Former Judge Brown has drawn absolutely from his experiences in similar work. There is a wonderful love story interwoven into the plot in the rector's growing attachment for the woman who believes him to be her husband. The climax comes when a member of the church recognizes the pseudo laborer as the former pastor. The latter, however, declines to accept the position again, and continues the good work which he started, with the woman he loves working with him.

"The Saint's Adventure" will have a screen time approximately of 1 hour, 15 minutes.

Unusual Ending to Play

"The most unusual ending we have ever seen," is what undoubtedly will be said of the closing scene of "Back of the Man," the latest Triangle-Kay Bee play by Monte M. Katterjohn, in which Thomas H. Ince presents Dorothy Dalton as star.

"Back of the Man" tells the story of a super-woman whose sustaining influence helped a good youth along to success and happiness. The two fall in love, but a series of unfortunate circumstances prevents the marriage and results in the man's betrothal to a far less worthy girl. Later, he becomes innocently involved in a murder mystery, but the first sweetheart's loyalty and devotion find their reward in his acquittal. The man goes to the country and the girl goes to live with her uncle at a nearby farm. Later, love brings them again together. The man, standing on the bank of a stream, discovers the girl on the other side. Both walk toward each other and embrace in mid-stream.

It was for the latter scene that the company filming the subject sought a picturesque mountain stream deep in the fastnesses of Inceville. And here they obtained the desired result—even though both Miss Dalton and Charles Ray, who plays the leading male role, were subjected to a thorough soaking.

O. Henry on the Screen

The Broadway Star Feature Co. has arranged with the Doubleday, Page Company for all the famous O. Henry stories suitable for screen productions. These pictures will be released on the General Film program, and the following stories have been filmed: "The Third Ingredient," "Friends in San Rosario," "Past One at Rooney's," "The Marionettes," "The Green Door," "The Guilty Party," "The Cop and the Anthem," "A Service of Love," "The Gift of Magi," and "Strictly Business," all of which will be 2,000 feet in length.

"The Third Ingredient" was released on April 7. "Friends in San Rosario" was enacted by Mildred Manning, Frank Nocrosse, Jack Ellis and J. Frank Glendon, and released on April 14. The others follow one week apart

"Law That Failed" Completed

The Apollo production of Louis Reeves Harrison's original photodrama "The Law That Failed" has been completed, and will be released shortly on the Art Dramas program. The story of "The Law That Failed" is of the mystery variety and contains several plot twists new to the screen. Alma Hanlon and Edward Ellis are the principal players involved in depicting the story.

Few people, even in the industry, have an accurate idea of the extensive and intensive development of the various phases of production. A good illustration of the different "specializations" necessary in picture creating is the electrical department of the Ince-Triangle studios, illustrated above.

Variety in Art Dramas

It is the policy of Art Dramas to keep its features as different as possible in theme, story and treatment. "The Law That Failed," which was released on March 28, was a story not only unique in the Art Dramas program, but also unique in film history, in that its story was based on a little known technicality in law, which renders justice in certain murder cases impossible.

This was followed by "The Inevitable," released on April 12, which was an Erbograph production. This was a modern drama of vengeance and love, with some new ideas and some strong situations.

"The Great Bradley Mystery," which followed on April 19, was a story of crime and detection, adapted from the stage play by Edward Ellis, which was entitled "Suicide."

A melodrama filled with intense situations, comes next, on April 26. This is "A Mother's Ordeal." Jean Sothern plays two roles in this, a mother and a daughter.

Then comes "The Auction of Virtue" which treats of a young girl's struggle between love and luxury. The heroine is played by Naomi Childers.

Marian Swayne in "Little Miss Fortune," a delightful comedy-drama, follows on May 10. This is the appealing story of a little orphan girl in an institution, who dreams of going on the stage, and who in the end realizes her ambitions.

The Apollo picture for release on May 17 is described as "a strange story of a morbid mind."

The story of this, as has been announced, is based on the studies of dreams and their causes which have been made by Dr. Sigmund Freud. "Psychoanalysis" is just now a popular fad among laymen,

In "The Mystic Hour," Guido, the artist, wakes up with a belief that he has killed Clavering. The thought that he is a murderer nearly maddens him, until a natural explanation of the crime brings sanity.

The next Apollo production, "When You and I Were Young," was suggested by the song of the same name, and was written by Frederick Rath.

Play "Built to Order"

"Built to order for the state rights market" is the way in which Louis Rosenbluh, directing head of the Variety Films Corporation, describes the picture, "The Price of Her Soul."

"It was something less than a year ago," says Mr. Rosenbluh, "when I decided that the Independent market was growing in importance again and reaching that stage of development where it could absorb big, important productions. At this time I secured productional arrangements looking forward to the creating of a story, based on a widely discussed theme. I obtained well known screen personalities who had attracted me by their previous work. I chose a director who had earned an excellent name for his artistic, dramatic productions. And six months later I received the finished negative. I could have disposed of it at once, but I wanted to study my field. I did not feel that a sufficient number of high class and important pictures were being offered, at that time, to interest important buyers. But it is different now. The avidity with which various highly potent exchangemen have snapped up recently exploited costly productions, convinced me that the independent market is now fully up to what it should be, hence my decision to begin marketing 'The Price of Her Soul.'

"The independent market is the natural incentive to the makers of film, to create bigger and better pictures. For instance, after a few weeks of ordinary plays in a town of say fifty thousand inhabitants, along comes a 'Merry Widow,' 'Madam Sherry,' or 'Within the Law,' and the manager gets even on a month of ordinary patronage. The picture big enough to attract conservative, important state rights buyers, is big enough to occasion special attention from film fans and big enough to be expoited by the theater manager as a special event.

"After waiting almost half a year for the propitious moment, I feel certain the time is psychological and results already prove my theory as correct for I have been queried already by the most important independent exchangemen in the country."

New Chicago Producer

Announcement of the entry of a new and distinct film company in the industry has just been made. The Wholesome Films Corporation, an Illinois concern, has just opened offices in the Consumers Building, where all the big film concerns are locating, and while it is not ready to reveal its policy or plans at this early moment, they will produce and distribute a particular class of pictures which heretofore has not been exclusively commercialized.

M. J. Weisfeldt, for several years connected with the Mutual Film Corporation, has been engaged as general manager. The officers are Milton Daily, president; A. M. Allen, vice president; P. W. Stanhope, secretary and treasurer. With the exception of Mr. Allen, Minneapolis capitalist, the organization is made up of Chicagoans. Further announcements will be made as soon as the Wholesome Films Corporation releases the news.

Theda Bara as "Cleopatra"

The Fox Film Corporation announces Theda Bara in a new version of "Cleopatra," the Siren of Egypt. The release date is set for June 4th.

This production was filmed under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. He has taken advantage of the wonderful possibilities in the story, and has made a stupendous picture. The production cost $250,000.

Miss Bara and Mr. Edwards have been at work on the picture for several months and it is practically complete. Because of the unusual beauty of the scenes shown, the exact length has not yet been determined, but it will probably be in seven reels.

"Ambition was Cleopatra's life," declared Miss Bara. "She was willing to sacrifice all for her dream of world empire. Though her faults were many, she was not the woman of popular belief."

Great excitement was caused in the U. S. Amusement Corporation studio the other day by the escape of a huge man-like ape, who was trying to imitate Douglas Fairbanks whom he had often seen in pictures. The ape clambered over the walls of the studio, made some daring leaps and scrambles, and finally landed at the very top of the ceiling, where he hung by one toe, fifty feet from the floor. It was some time before he could be brought down. The company was working on Noami Childers' first Art Drama, "The Auction of Virtue."

New Essanay Play

Filming of "The Night Workers," Marguerite Clayton's forthcoming Essanay feature has been completed. Trade showings already have been announced at all Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay branch offices. The production will be released May 21.

Essanay's unusual production "The Night Workers," with Marguerite Clayton.

Essanay presents a new star to filmdom in "The Night Workers," which is a picturization of night life in a big city. He is Jack Gardner, who is recruited from the stellar ranks of musical comedy. Among the national stage hits in which Mr. Gardner has starred are "Madame Sherry," "The Chocolate Soldier," "The Belle of Mayfair" and "Oh Boy." Miss Clayton is well-known in film-plays, having been starred in "The Prince of Graustark" and Essanay's series of short dramatic productions, "Is Marriage Sacred?"

Mary Miles Minter as Housekeeper

Mary Miles Minter proves that she really knows how to work as well as act in "Environment," the Mutual-American production released on April 16. Mary appears as Liz, the daughter of the town drunkard. On Monday morning she brings out her big tub and washboard and scrubs away like a well trained washwoman. In fact, she timidly broaches the subject to her neighbor—a professional washwoman—of taking in washing to make a little money. She is pictured carrying a heavy basket of clothes.

The pathos of this incident is lightened by a clever comedy touch. The small boy who is carrying the other end of the basket drops it to engage in a free-for-all fight and Liz is left alone in the middle of the road. The young minister happens along, and Liz, by reminding him that the text of his sermon on Sunday was that they should share each other's burdens, persuades him to take the other side of the basket.

The little star shows herself to be an adept seamstress, and she handles the sewing machine, pattern and tape measure like a veteran when cutting out and stitching her own graduation dress—and most captivating she looks in it when it is finished.

Ruth Stonehouse and her company of Universal players have finished the picturization of "A Lovable Thief."

Plays With "Fatty"

After having hidden her inimitable talents as a comedienne under the proverbial "bushel" for many years, only to be found by the man who is "worth his weight in laughs," after the whole wide country had been scoured for just "the right girl," Josephine Stevens, a charming girl with great big "boo'ful" eyes and whose middle name should by right be "Personality," will make her premier screen appearance in a Paramount production, when she will play opposite Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, in his forthcoming Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, "The Butcher Boy," a two reeler which will be released to all exhibitors irrespective of the exclusive franchise idea of the Paramount Program.

By all the rights that any person could ever enlist to aid them to come well endorsed to the stage or screen, Miss Stevens gets them most rightfully. The daughter of Benjamin D. Stevens, the late general manager of the Klaw and Erlanger interests, and one of the best known figures in the theatrical world during the past twenty years, and Helen Beresford, also well known in the world of the theater. Miss Stevens by birth, came by theatric rights.

New Ivan Production

The trial showing of Ivan Film Productions' "One Law for Both" has been held. The picture, which took five months to make, is heralded as Ivan Abramson's greatest achievement and is classed as the best Ivan "Super Special." The claim that the picture is an all star production, with the exception of the big Russo-Military and the tremendous mob scenes, seems to be justified.

Rita Jolivet, leading lady with Otis Skinner in Kismeth, Leah Baird, considered the most beautiful woman on the screen, winsome Helen Arnold as the ingenue and Catharine Greene, are representing the female leads; while, headed by James Morrison, we find Vincent Serrano, Pedro de Corboda, Paul Capellani and Anders Randolf, in the male cast The atmosphere is part Russian, part American. "One Law for Both" is by far the biggest thing yet produced by the Ivan people.

Royal W. France, general manager of the Triangle Film Corporation, has been made a member of the firm of Duell, Warfield & Duell, 25 West 44th St., New York City.

"The Danger Trail"

H. B. Warner in Selig-K. E. S. E. Drama of April 30. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE mystery element in this story is well handled, and by keeping the spectator mystified throughout most of the five reels, an unusual amount of suspense is created in a simple plot. Interest never falters at any point in the tale. It increases as the story progresses, until the excitement becomes tense. Frederick Thompson, the director, has used much skill in building up exciting situations.

The story, which proves well suited for screen telling, is taken from James Oliver Curwood's novel of the same name. It is a typical Curwood plot and, because of its location in the north, offers opportunity for magnificent snow scenes and has that romantic atmosphere which seems always to surround stories of the untamed northland.

The fact that the justly popular H. B. Warner plays the leading role, and the melodramatic and unsually interesting story, enacted in beautiful settings, combine to make this a good release. It has the elements that patrons like in melodramatic picture plays, and will please a wide variety of "fans."

Mr. Warner has a strenuous role in the story. While it does not give him an opportunity for the subtle, intellectual style of playing for which he is noted, it offers him a chance for much action, including one very realistic fight. Violet Heming, who has a large part opposite Mr. Warner, is a recruit from the speaking stage, and in this plays her second screen role. She is a pretty girl of the type popular in pictures, but in this play has a tendency to overact. She shows that she is unaccustomed to screen work and seems not to know how to express emotion in pantomime without becoming self-consciously intense. When Miss Heming learns the trick of being "perfectly natural" before the camera, she will find herself becoming a real picture favorite. W. Lawson Butt enacts a half-breed role realistically. The balance of the capable cast includes Arthur Donaldson, Richard Thornton, Arthur Cozine, H. Howard, William Cooper and S. M. Unander.

The Story: John Howland, a civil engineer managing a project in Northern Canada, finds that his life is being sought by Pierre and Max Thoreau. He cannot understand why they wish to kill him. They are aided by their sister, Meleese, with whom Howland falls in love. The girl had first trapped him and betrayed him to her brothers, but after his first escape, she tries, unknown to her brothers, to save him. She begs him to leave the country, but he refuses.

Meleese is aided in her defense of Howland by Jean Croisset, a half-breed. The brothers endanger Howland's life by several plots, but he always escapes. Finally, his eagerness to see Meleese causes him to fall into the brothers' trap and they are about to kill him because of a crime his father was believed to have committed against their mother. Howland's life is saved by the timely arrival of another brother who announces that a mistake has been made and that Howland is not the son of the criminal. There is then no objection to his marriage to Meleese.

"A Magdalene of the Hills"

Five-Part Metro Feature Released April 16. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz

IN "A Magdalene of the Hills," Mabel Taliaferro is cast as a lonely back-woods girl. Portraying the part of Renie Mathis, Miss Taliaferro plays a role quite different from her previous characterizations. Poorly clad as a simple and inexperienced girl of the hills, she is just as appealing and interesting as in any of her society plays.

The theme of the story is woven around a girl's love and a spirit of vengeance. The scenes are laid in the rugged mountainous district of one of the Southern states. William Black as Herbert Grayson, a wealthy owner of large timber lands, in order to benefit by the people's ignorance, will not have schools in the mountains. Charles Brown, as Lem Mathis, is accused of setting fire to one of Grayson's mills. Although Lem professes his innocence he is killed by one of Grayson's men. Old John Mathis is so embittered that he vows to shoot Grayson or any of his family on sight. His daughter, Renie, makes the same pledge.

The story by Harry Chandlee was put into scenario form by June Mathis. The picture was directed by John W. Noble and photographed by Herbert O. Carleton. Others in the supporting cast are: William Garwood, playing the part of Eric Southard; Frank Montgomery cast as John Mathis, and William B. Davidson as Bud Weaver.

John Mathis owns a valuable piece of timber land that Grayson is anxious to purchase. Mathis will not sell to his enemy at any price. Eric Southard, Grayson's nephew, offers to go to Hibbitsville and buy the land. On arriving in the town, Eric goes to the home of Peets, his uncle's foreman.

When Renie goes to the village, the bystanders tell her that Grayson's nephew is at the mills. That night she goes to Peets' cabin to avenge her brother. She shoots at Eric but misses. He returns the fire and slightly wounds the girl. Eric carries her home, and with the help of old Mathis bandages her arm. In gratitude for what he has done, she does not disclose his identity to her father.

Eric and Renie fall in love with each other. John Mathis had promises Bud Weaver that as soon as he earned $100 with which to set up housekeeping, he could have Renie's hand in marriage. Finally she consents to a secret marriage with Eric. Meanwhile Eric has written to his uncle that he cannot help him in his schemes in the mountains.

Eric leaves the mountains to go to New York on business, promising to come back for Renie. While crossing a street he is knocked down by an automobile and seriously injured. Seeking news of her lover, Renie goes to Peets' cabin. In trying to embrace the girl, her gun is fired and Peets is killed. She is immediately arrested and charged with murder.

Weak and unfit to travel, Eric returns to Hibbitsville to plan her defense. The feud between Grayson and Mathis is brought out in the trial and things begin to look serious for Renie. In a powerful speech Eric appeals to the mountaineers, and the jury return a verdict of "Not Guilty." Realizing the needs of the people, Grayson begins a new regime of helpfulness among the mountaineers.

"The Great Bradley Mystery"

Apollo-Art-Dramas Mystery Play in Five Reels. Reviewed by George W. Graves

EDWARD ELLIS has built up the kind of a story for this film that photoplay-goers as a rule "fall for" unusually hard —the detective plot with a mystery twist that keeps the spectator guessing. The mystifying situation which presents itself well along toward the end, in fact, is the best part of the story—the only part that is really removed from the conventional. Especially unique is the method employed by Collier to make the evidence in the case point to suicide. The first part of the film gets tiresome because of its liesurely action and over-emphasis of certain points. Certainly there are too many crying close-ups of the grief-stricken girl who has been betrayed, all registering the same thing.

The scenario has been constructed so as to let the audience in on so much and withhold certain other bits of the action, creating an air of mystery that is very acceptable. True, some of the action could have been devised in a more clear-cut manner, but as things now stand "The Great Bradley Mystery" will have the average, not too sophisticated spectator in a state of entertained guessing. The direction is not remarkable. Edward Ellis plays the heavy with his usual air of conviction, while Alma Hanlon and Edward Earle provide the love interest. Both give good characterizations, Mr. Earle's work, however, being much better in the heavier than the lighter sides of his impersonation. Others in the cast are Bigelow Cooper, Florence Short and Andy Clarke.

Bradley is in love with the girl that his junior partner, Collier, also loves. Mary really cares for Collier, but the latter is kept from this knowledge by his wily partner. Lola, a girl whom Bradley has betrayed, comes to his office and begs him to marry her. Mary, in the next room, hears this and enters the office only to find Collier, who has just entered, alone with the girl (Bradley has sneaked out another door) and jumps to conclusions. The result is that Mary cuts Collier cold. The latter, discouraged, leaves for other parts. Mary marries Bradley after he has seen to it that she believes a report that Collier is dead, but the girl is soon awakened to the way she has been deceived when she talks to the dying Lola at a hospital. Lola implores her to take care of Bradley's child.

Soon Bradley realizes that a quick get-away is the best thing for him. We see Lola's grief-stricken father sneak into the basement of the building, and soon after Bradley is found dead. The father is held by the police and is not released until the timely arrival of Collier, whose testimony frees the innocent man. He relates how he had returned previously, had a quarrel with Bradley, the latter accidentally shooting himself. Collier had cleverly arranged evidence to make the death appear a suicide, but had decided to tell the truth on learning that an innocent man might suffer.

"A Mother's Ordeal"

Art Dramas Photograph in Five Reels, Produced by Van Dyke. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz.

ONE of the highly interesting features of "A Mother's Ordeal" is the unique way in which Jean Sothern, the star, portrays the dual identities of mother and daughter. These distinct parts are so differently played as to make it almost impossible to believe that the same individual is assuming two personalities. The plot affords Miss Sothern and the supporting cast numerous opportunities, both emotional and dramatic, which makes the picture one that is well up to the Art Drama's standard.

Stirring scenes occur when the climax of the story is reached. Mrs. Bradley has kidnapped her enemy's daughter, and is just about to turn her over to a band of ruffians when she learns that the girl is her own child. The acting of the cast maintains an even standard of conviction. Walter Miller as Robert Mason plays the leading male role. Arthur Housman as Joseph Clark is the heavy. Alice May and Charles A. Boyd complete the cast. The story was written and directed by Will S. Davis.

Mary Howard, a young girl of the country, is betrayed by Robert Mason, a city lawyer. The father forces Mason to marry the girl, but he deserts her and returns to the city. Unable to stand the abuse at home, Mary, on the advice of her mother, goes to the city to live with an aunt. She searches in vain for her husband. Her child, a little girl, is born. Sometime later she reads in a newspaper that Robert Mason has been killed in a railroad accident.

Believing this report to be true and having no desire to live longer, she decides to commit suicide. She is saved from death by Desmond, who takes her home to his sister. After her recovery she searches for the child, but is unable to find it, the aunt having taken the little girl to Mason, who had recovered. Meanwhile he marries Miss Jackson and the child is brought up as their daughter.

Nineteen years later Mary, now Mrs. Bradley, learns that her husband is alive and is the district attorney. Soon after marrying Bradley she finds out that he is a thief and wanted by the police. She is arrested as his accomplice and serves a prison term. From then on she lives a life of evil. To revenge herself on Mason she decides to kidnap his daughter Ellen.

The girl is imprisoned in the home of Mrs. Bradley, who intends that she shall be dishonored. Ellen pleads with the woman to let her go. In the scene that follows Mrs. Bradley learns that she is her daughter. Mason recognizes his first wife and realizes that it was through him she became so degraded. Mary, however, forgives him. The next day she is found dead.

"The Valentine Girl"

Five Part Famous Players-Paramount Release Featuring Marguerite Clark. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz.

"THE VALENTINE GIRL," a delightful photodrama starring Marguerite Clark, is her first picture since the "Fortunes of Fifi," and is a wonder. In her child impersonations she is dainty and appealing, and as a young lady her charm and manner will captivate any audience. Not only will this play please and interest the children, but it will also find favor with the grown-ups.

The story with its pathos and humor, is about a little girl whose father is a famous gambler and crook. The child, who has never seen her father, comes to his home to find him so absorbed in his cards that he has no time for her. In the incidents that follow she wins his love and affection. The fanciful is wonderfully brought out by J. Searle Dawley, who directed the picture. It was photographed by Lyman Broening. The supporting cast, and those who help to make the picture one of Miss Clark's best consists of: Frank Losee, Richard Barthelmess, Katherine Adams, Maggie Holloway Fisher, Adolph Fisher and Edith Campbell Walker. The photography and settings partake of the beauty which surrounds this star and story.

At first Morgan is much displeased on learning that his little girl, whom he had not seen since her babyhood, is coming to live with him. He soon learns to love the child and strives to make up to her all that her life had lacked in family ties. For a time they are happy, but Marion is lonesome without companions of her own age, as the children in the neighborhood are not allowed to play with the gambler's daughter. One day Morgan's house is raided by the police and the gambler taken into custody. In the confusion Marion wanders away.

The child chances upon a Valentine party in a nearby church. She is welcomed by the minister and is invited to join the children. Her partner proves to be Robert Wentworth, son of a wealthy resident. Marian persists that her name is Hope Valentine and that she has lost her father. The minister makes a search for the father but is unsuccessful. Later, word reaches Morgan in prison that his daughter has been adopted by the minister and his wife.

The years pass and we now see Marian as a charming young lady. An incident brings Robert and Marian together again. On the day that their engagement is announced Morgan returns to his child. He demands that Marian disclose her real identity to her fiance. She does so, fearing that he will reject her, but Robert's love for her is so great that it cannot be nullified by her father's past.

"In Again, Out Again"

Douglas Fairbanks' First Artcraft, Released April 30. Reviewed by George W. Graves.

MANY things are worth waiting for. The motion picture public has shifted its weight from one foot to the other for some time in its watchful waiting for the next Fairbanks concoction of laughs and thrills. But, get thee hence, dull care. Here it is—five reels of continuous amusement, a peppery mixture of the comic and melodramatic with the Fairbanks smile more in evidence than ever. The comedy is largely a burlesque on extreme pacifism, and when extreme pacifism is made more extreme through the medium of broad motion picture comedy we may certainly look for some laughs. And when we remember that Anita Loos' pen is behind activities we may be doubly expectant of the laughs.

The types selected for the different parts, from the pacifist leader to the second-story man represent with such accuracy the different familiar characters of society that the comedy in which they figure registers with double effect. Through cleverly written subtitles and an unremitting sequence of humor drawn from the largest and smallest happenings in every day life, with the unmatched comedian holding the center of the screen, the audience is held in perpetual enjoyment. A rather novel twist appears on the end when it is discovered that the desperate dynamiter of munitions factories is none other than the pacifist leader himself. "Doug" performs a new line of acrobatics, one stunt in particular being a hair-raiser. In this he swings from the top of one building to a lower one some forty feet away by means of a rope with its pivoting point atop a telegraph pole. Fairbanks describes a lightning arc through the air that brings a unanimous gasp from the audience. Again it is seen that when there is anything to climb on "Doug" climbs on it and when there is anything to jump over or on he has the frog beaten to a frazzle.

Fairbanks' first comedy produced by his own company has more laughs right through than any of his previous productions. They are not all in one spot but are to be found throughout—and this approaches perfection in comedy making. Some of Fairbanks' previous pictures have combined dramatic moments with the humorous, but the more laughs the better, say we, and "In Again, Out Again," proves that drama which is more than a pretense can be left out with more joy to the audience.

To John Emerson, the director, is due a great share of the credit for the picture's success. In chasing scenes his work stands out. Arline Pretty makes a very winsome heroine. Walter Walker, Homer Hunt and Bull Montana are others in the cast.

"The Bar Sinister"

Edgar Lewis Production in Nine Parts One of Strength. Reviewed by George W. Graves.

EDGAR LEWIS' first "modest effort" with his own company is a picture contending for some degree of sanity and righteousness in the people's thoughts concerning race. In fact, the picture exposes, in the eloquent language of the screen, the blind folly of race hatred. It brings out the fact that socially there is a barrier between races that cannot be rightfully put down, but that spiritually there is no dividing line—it is individual merit that counts.

In the first reels the negro has a hard time of it—the cruelty and contempt which were his lot, a chapter of intolerance from history, are given a vivid portrayal—but before the film is over the negro is handed a square deal, and the lesson is made applicable to races of any hue and classes of any particular affiliation. The sub-title, "Black or white, you're the biggest man I've ever met," illustrates how the point is developed.

While the picture is a powerful argument against race enmity, this prime issue does not overshadow in any way the story, for it is indissolubly connected with it, not an isolated preachment. The office of the story is the provision of a deeply sympathetic drama, one with human people as its characters and cut-from-life events as the basis of action. It creates interest in its characters in the initial scenes and holds it without break to the end. Its pathos, deep and unfeigned, penetrates to the heart.

Tony Kelly, whose name in the trade is synonymous with good scenarios, wrote the story of "The Bar Sinister," an original one, and a story that grips the feelings from beginning to end. With a good scenario to work on Edgar Lewis has produced the play with vigorous realism. Taken in the South, he has injected a matchless atmosphere. In the direction of the cast, the mob scenes, the fight scenes, and in bringing out with powerful effect the author's intent, Mr. Lewis has formed a production which is a worthy addition to his long line of successes. One of the two fight scenes is positively the hottest thing of its kind we have seen on the screen. It brought more applause from the audience than any other part of the picture.

Mitchell Lewis, a character actor of intense emotional powers, has the big sympathy part—that of the lover who leaves no stone unturned to help the girl to marry the other fellow, the man she loves. Unselfish devotion is the character's cardinal virtue. Mr. Lewis makes the big-hearted, manly character stand out in distinguished relief. Not once is there any trace of acting. The actor's magnetic personality, his natural, facile acting and the immense sympathy of this particular part are enough to put him over with any audience. His scene of intense anguish after bidding his sweetheart go with the man of her choice ranks among the finest individual scenes yet to come on the screen.

The excellent playing of the cast is not one of the smallest features of the picture. Hedda Nova, Victor Sutherland, Jules Cowles, William Anderson, Preston Rollow, George Dangerfield and others maintain a high standard of acting. Jules Cowles figures strongly in the comedy relief.

"The Bar Sinister" is a superb production and it cannot help doing big business.

"The Warfare of the Flesh"

Edward Warren Production, Seven Parts, for Release State Rights. Reviewed by George W. Graves.

"THE WARFARE OF THE FLESH" offers both interesting entertainment and a pointed moral argument. Commencing with the first beguiling of Adam and Eve by the serpent in the Garden of Eden, stopping to take a glance at Jesus' handling of the sin that had beguiled the Magdalene, and then coming down to the present age with the forces of good and evil still in combat, it shows how the serpent sin is still betraying modern Adams and Eves and what the inevitable price must be.

In the modern day, to prove that the adherence to good wins out ultimately we have a modern Eve tempted to break the seventh commandment in order to save the life of her sick husband—to do evil that good may come of it. She finally comes to one of the most sensible conclusions that anybody on the screen ever came to (screen characters usually figure the opposite way): that her husband doesn't want his life at such a price. She then treads the straight and narrow path and her righteousness is rewarded—the money for her husband's operation comes through an unexpected channel and all ends happily. The moral might easily be: do what is right and never fear the consequences. The woman was about to appoint sin as her deliverer, but she found the way she followed a surer one.

The picture is not what one might call a visualized sermon—at least it isn't a dry one. It never ceases to entertain. The woman's battle with sin is not a brief one, but a prolonged one, and interestingly so. Her escape from the very talons of the destroyer is good drama. Besides its good story and direction (Edward Warren both conceived the story and recorded it directorially), the picture can boast of a cast of notable players which is uniformly strong. Charlotte Ives puts all the finer feelings into her part, her characterization getting at the soul of a woman of inherent virtue. Her work is natural and convincing. Sheldon Lewis never was more villainous than in the part of Harmon, who makes a bet with a fellow clubman that he can buy the first woman he meets on the basis that every woman has her price. He makes his character thoroughly detestable. Marie Shotwell does splendidly with the female "heavy," a woman engaged in the heartless occupation of helping to dishonor her own sex. Others in the cast are Harry Benham, Walter Hampden, Theodore Friebus, Fred Radcliffe and Mary Moore.

There's a pointed moral in "The Warfare of the Flesh."

"The Warfare of the Flesh" has a purpose and it fulfills it well. It has the ingredients that make a film a money-maker for the exhibitor. The title is valuable not only in the attracting of crowds to the theater but in the possibilities it offers for compelling advertisement. It might also be said that while the film handles its subject out in the open, so to speak, at no time does it offend the sensibilities.

"The Hunting of the Hawk"

William Courtenay in Pathe "Gold Rooster" Offering. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

TO THOSE who like detective and adventure stories, and their number is large, this story by George B. Seitz, author of "The Iron Claw," and other serial thrillers, will have a definite appeal. For many audiences it will be a pleasing change from problem plays and the like. It has mystery and suspense, and an entertaining cast of characters, headed by William Courtenay as Desselway, Marguerite Snow as Diana Curran and Robert Clugston as Wrenshaw. George Fitzmaurice directed. The picture is a good attraction for houses whose patrons like action and mystery plays. Highly critical audiences may not rate it very highly, but the average "fan" will be entertained.

The Story: On board an ocean liner, bound for New York, Diana Curran, secretary to a wealthy society woman, meets and falls in love with a man known as Desselway. He proposes marriage, but Diana is already married. The man she had married, Wrenshaw, proved to be a crook and Diana had left him.

The rest of the action takes place at the country estate of Diana's employer. Wrenshaw, her husband, appears as a secretary in the household. There is a theft of jewels and later these are found in the possession of Desselway, who has again appeared on the scene. Diana believes Desselway is "The Hawk," a notorious criminal, but her love for him forces her to shield him. After a number of exciting events, Wrenshaw is shown up as "The Hawk," while Desselway proves to be a Secret Service man working on the case. While attempting to escape Wrenshaw is killed and Diana is then free to marry Desselway.

"American Methods"

William Fox Drama in Five Reels, Released April 30. Reviewed by George W. Graves.

PLEASURABLE entertainment from start to finish is our estimate of Frank Lloyd's picturization of George Ohnet's novel, "The Ironmaster." Suspense and pathos are telling factors throughout the picture's length. The story, which tells of a proud girl's cruel marriage for pique and the gradual growth of an enduring love for her husband who proves himself a man in seven ways, has been "put on" by the director and acted by the cast in a way which lifts the whole thing out of the class of the ordinary. William Farnum has a role which is virility itself as the energetic young American who introduces American methods both into the commercial and social life of the little aristocrat ruled French town. The actor was a fortunate choice for the part and he handles it the way that only William Farnum can. His is a strong portrayal all through. Jewel Carmen also proves to be a happy choice for the part of the wife. She registers well in some dramatic scenes at the close with Mr. Farnum and her expression of cold pride all through is entirely convincing. We don't remember when we have seen Jewel Carmen appear either more charming or more convincing. Bertram Grassby does good work as the "heavy," and others prominent in the adequate support are Genevieve Blinn, Alan Forrest, Florence Vidor, Willard Louis and Lillian West.

"American Methods" has atmosphere and all the little offshoots of action which make any production realistic. As in the large number of Fox dramas, comedy relief is provided. Quite obvious is it that time and taste figured in the production, the quaint street scene of the little village of itself being sufficient to warrant this conclusion. The picture is an above-the-ordinary piece of entertainment, one that comes not far short of the pretentious title "super de luxe."

Claire de Beaulieu, neglected by her lover, Gaston, for a social climber with money, accepts the proposal of Armstrong, an American who has come to the French town to run an iron foundry. Directly after the marriage Armstrong is stunned to find that Claire has no love for him but has merely wedded him for spite. The man to whom she was formerly engaged marries the social climber. Appearances are that Claire is still carrying on an affair with him, and just as the wife is beginning to find a spark of love for her self-denying husband these appearances assume an ugly phase. Hiding his love under a mantle of aloofness, Claire thinks she has lost her husband's love. At last Gaston's advances to the now cold Claire become obnoxious and a fight between him and Armstrong is precipitated, which ends in a date set for duel. Realizing the great worth of the man she has so cruelly treated, Claire comes to her husband and admits that her pride and selfishness have been swept away. In order to prevent the duel she secretly goes to the villain's house, only to be insulted. Armstrong arrives on the scene, finds that Gaston hasn't a spark of manhood in him, and, waiving the duel, tries "American methods" on him. They prove successful.

"The Girl in the Checkered Coat"

Dorothy Phillips in Dual Role in Current Bluebird Photoplay. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE clever work of Dorothy Phillips in playing two widely dissimilar roles in this story is its best feature. An introductory subtitle calls attention to Miss Phillips' acting and the majority of patrons will be interested in watching the means by which the star creates the wide different in appearance and personality between the roles. Incidentally, in "Flash Fan," Miss Phillips creates a very definite, very real character. She arouses and holds the interest, while her sister wins sympathy.

From the standpoint of entertainment, the picture will interest patrons because of this clever acting. It is not a very cheerful tale, in some respects, and its plot arouses interest which it does not entirely satisfy. There are "loose ends" apparent, and noticeable flaws in detail. The part of the story that is told is interesting, but the background is puzzling. The explanation of their early lives as given by the sisters is contradictory, for instance. Miss Phillips' work is worthy a better constructed story.

Joseph De Grasse directed the play from a story by E. Magnus Ingleton. William Stowell plays the hero, David Norman; Lon Chaney, Hector Maitland, and Mrs. A. E. Witting plays Ann Maitland. Their acting is entirely satisfactory.

The Story: Mary Graham (Dorothy Phillips), salesgirl, comes back to her room in a boarding house after a hard day during the Christmas rush. Overcome by exhaustion, she faints away. During the same day, "Flash Fan" (Dorothy Phillips), who also has a room in this house, has stolen a purse and is being sought by the police. When the officers come to the house, Fan, in a panic, rushes into Mary's room and, finding her unconscious, carries her into her own room, wraps her in her own conspicuous checekered coat, and by this plot, tricks the officers into arresting the wrong girl.

At the police station, Mary meets David Norman, a struggling lawyer. With his aid she locates Ann Maitland, a wealthy woman, to whose care she is committed in a letter left by her dying father. The woman takes Mary into her home and plans to adopt her. Hector Maitland, her nephew, who hoped to inherit her wealth, induces "Flash Fan" to take a position as maid in his aunt's household and steal Miss Maitland's jewels in a way to throw suspicion on Mary. Fan does so, but is caught in the act and the plot fails. Fan tells a pathetic story of her childhood with a criminal father. It is evident to the audience that Fan and Mary are sisters, but the characters in the story do not learn this fact. Norman later marries Mary, while Fan continues her career of thievery.

"Hedda Gabler"

Nance O'Neil in Powell Picture Version of Ibsen Play. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris.

NANCE O'NEIL'S fame as an interpreter of the role of "Hedda Gabler" on the speaking stage gives this film version of the play its chief interest. Miss O'Neil's appearance in a famous role in a famous play will interest many of the intellectual class in the smaller cities who have no opportunity to see the speaking stage production. The exhibitor in the smaller towns should appeal to this class in his advertising.

To the viewer who comes to the picture without a previous knowledge of the play, either in printed or spoken form, the picture will probably be something of a puzzle. The story is a difficult one to express in screen terms. In spite of fine acting by well chosen players, one feels that he misses the life, the real meaning of the play, because the speeches are lacking.

The settings of the play are interesting, but the photography is not good. The cast of players in support of Miss O'Neil includes Aubrey Beattie, Lillian Paige, Einar Linden, Ruth Byron, Alfred Hickman and Edith Campbell Walker. Mutual releases the offering May 7.

The Story: The restless, discontented Hedda, daughter of General Gabler, is introduced to us soon after her marriage to George Tesman, a kind, unemotional sort of a man. Hedda is not in love with her husband. She is still infatuated with Eilert Lovberg, a poet who has been leading a life of dissipation.

Soon after her marriage Hedda again meets Lovberg. The fact that he has reformed and has written a book under the good influence of Thea Elvsted, Hedda's former rival, enrages Hedda and she seeks to overcome this influence. She is successful and Lovberg goes back to his old life. During a night of revelry Lovberg loses the manuscript of his book. Tesman finds it and brings it to Hedda, who burns it. When Lovberg discovers his loss he commits suicide. Judge Brack, who is fascinated by Hedda, learns of her part in the affair and seeks to use this knowledge against her. Rather than remain in his power Hedda shoots herself.

"The Pinch Hitter"

Charles Ray in Triangle-Ince-Kay Bee Release of April 29. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz.

"THE PINCH HITTER," an amusing comedy drama, is the next Triangle release featuring Charles Ray. It is a very realistic story of college life—a story of love and baseball. The author has introduced a certain amount of good, wholesome humor that will cause the audience many a laugh. The interest does not lag for an instant and from beginning to end there is plenty of action.

The important feature is the satisfactory way in which Charles Ray impersonates Joel Parker, an awkward country boy from Turley Creek, Vt. Mr. Ray deserves much credit for his splendid acting. In his able support is Sylvia Bremer as Abbie Nettleton, the girl who really believed in the youth and encouraged him. Joseph J. Dowling as Obediah Parker, the crabbed old father, is very good. Others in the supporting cast are: Jerome Storm, Darrel Foss and Louis Durham. The story was written by C. Gardner Sullivan. Victor L. Schertzinger directed the picture. The settings are appropriate.

Obediah Parker continually reminded his son Joel that he didn't amount to anything and never would. As time wore on Joel began to think that his father was right and was about to give up in despair. It was the mother's wish that her son should go to college, so old Obediah made arrangements to send Joel to Williamson, even though he knew it would do him no good. Arriving at college, Joel is made the laughing stock of the students.

He is soon branded as a tightwad by the fellows, who are unaware the father will not give the lad spending money. Abbie Nettleton, the proprietress of the "Students' Progressive Cream Puff Parlor," understands and sympathizes with the youth. She encourages him to try to make the ball team. Joel is such a blunderer that he only succeeds in being made the mascot just for luck.

Obediah comes to the big game to see his son play ball. All through the game Joel is made a joke of. Incidentally in the last inning he is given the chance to go to bat. With a determination to make good he takes his place while the crowd jeer at him. Luck is with him and he knocks out a home run, thus winning the game for the school. Joel becomes the hero of the hour, and not only does he win the respect of his old father but also the girl he loves.

This is the latest revolutionary announcement by Lewis J. Selznick, whose original methods have done much in the last year to change the entire trend of the picture industry. Mr. Selznick says, regarding this:

After this, when one of our pictures is finished, it will immediately go to our branches to be placed on the open market. The exhibitor can get it there whenever he wants it. His release date is my release date.

To set a certain date for the release of a picture all over the country, is to say that conditions are the same everywhere at the same time. This is ridiculous. A declaration of war, a local reform wave, a political campaign, a great disaster, a state going dry or adopting woman suffrage—any one of these things and hundreds of others can make it advisable to postpone playing a feature in a certain territory from the date set by the manufacturer.

The exhibitor who selects his own dates is running his own business, and he can protect himself against these conditions. He can switch his bookings and increase his receipts by playing each picture at the psychological moment. If he is tied down to a release date he is letting the producer run his business.

"Filling His Own Shoes"

Braynt Washburn's next Essanay feature will be entitled "Filling His Own Shoes." The story was written by Henry B. Rowland, one of the most popular of the present-day light fiction writers. In novel form it proved one of the six best sellers. Hazel Daly and an unusual cast support Mr. Washburn.

Mr. Washburn's current comedy-drama, "Skinner's Bubble," is receiving highly satisfactory bookings, according to reports from the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. Being a sequel to the justly famous "Skinner's Dress Suit," this production is reaping big benefits from the advertising and favorable comment which the previous picture received.

Directors Withdraw Names

A page advertisement appealing to the motion picture industry to take action against the pending legislation in several states, and starting a fund for the purpose, was recently run in MOTOGRAPHY, signed—supposedly—by eight directors in the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. In a telegram to Lee A. Ochs, president of the M. P. E. L. of America, in Chicago at the time, Sam Trigger and Louis Levine of New York, disclaimed any connection with the matter and stated that their names were used without authority from them.

Selig Rounds Twenty-first Year

Many of the friends and admirers of William N. Selig are extending him felicitations because he has rounded out his twenty-first year of active endeavor in motion pictures. Mr. Selig is credited with discovering California as a picture producing center; with releasing the first motion picture serial of adventure, "The Adventures of Kathlyn"; and with being the first to film wild animal comedies and dramas. He is one of the pioneers in the game, lives in Chicago and owns large studios in the Windy City and Los Angeles.

Pollard Wants Stories

MOTOGRAPHY has been asked by Pollard Picture Plays to make known to scenario writers that it is now, and will be at all times, in the market for stories for Marguerite Fischer. They desire high class comedy dramas on the order of "Miss Jackie of the Navy," "The Pearl of Paradise," etc. They want detailed synopses giving all the incidents in the story, as well as the main plot and theme. They prefer the work of experienced writers, but this does not preclude the amateur if he has anything worthy to offer. Exceptionally good plays are desired and it will be futile to submit stories of any other sort.

New McClure Series

Frederick L. Collins, president of McClure Pictures, states to the trade that work on the new McClure series, to follow Seven Deadly Sins, will begin at once.

Mr. Collins, while on the Pacific Coast, signed a number of contracts with directors and actors and made special arrangements, which he will announce soon, for producing some of the new McClure pictures in Los Angeles.

The new series is to consist of nine plays in three groups of three each. The publicity campaign, back of these plays, which is to be even more comprehensive than the one that backed Seven Deadly Sins, will begin as soon as Mr. Collins' plans are completed.

Bruner with Rex Beach

Frank V. Bruner has resigned his position as publicity director with the General Film Company to take charge of publicity and advertising for the Rex Beach Pictures Company. Although comparatively new in the picture field Mr. Bruner has been signally successful in handling the publicity for the General and is leaving that concern for the Rex Beach Pictures Company in order to have a broader field for publicity effort, as the latter concern will do big features only, "The Barrier," the most successful big picture of the year, being its first. "The Auction Block" is now being filmed at the company's Weehawken studio and work will be started shortly on another of the Rex Beach novels, all of which are to be made into ten-reel features by the Rex Beach Company. Before entering the picture field Mr. Bruner was identified with many theatrical concerns and had handled important attractions for Charles Frohman, Oliver Morosco, Henry B. Harris and Selwyn and Company.

Legislators See Picture

A special invitation exhibition of Cecil B. De Mille's production, Geraldine Farrar in "Joan The Woman," was given at the Hall of the House of Representatives in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, for members of the House and Senate of Pennsylvania as well as the state officials. Louis Maurice, director at the Forty-fourth Street Theater, New York, and an orchestra played the music score as arranged by William L. Furst.

Bookings on "The Barrier" Break Records
The demand for "The Barrier" is nothing short of sensational. This great Rex Beach photo-drama of life, love and the unbridled play of primitive emotions is breaking all records. It has scored the heaviest booking ever placed at one time for a motion picture, including—The Loew Circuit, The Keith & Proctor Circuit, The Fox Circuit and The Poli Circuit.
The BARRIER
The Moving Picture World says: "Seldom before has one feature been booked at one time in this great group of theatres, comprising every big picture house in the East. The booking breaks another record on the Poli Circuit, where it is the first picture to be booked for a week's showing in each theatre."

Complete Record of Current Films

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc.). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the italic letter 3 meaning a split reel.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

Mutual Pictures

Gladys' Day Dream—(Two Reels)—April 30.—Featuring Marie Cahill. Gladys, a clerk at the Emporium, has a soul that yearns for higher things, as also does that of Henry, floorwalker in the gents' furnishings. By a stroke of good fortune Gladys acquires glad raiment and, arrayed as a lily of the field, encounters Henry at a dance. Gladys' brother "Bud" battles for Millionaire Goober on the Avenue. Gladys tells Henry she is Miss Goober. He escorts her to the Goober mansion after the dance. Mr. Goober arrives home just as Henry is proposing to the ostensible on the best Goober prayer rug. Denouement—no wedding bells for Gladys.

"Kleptomaniacs"—(One Reel)—Strand Comedy—May 2.—Featuring Billie Rhodes. Jack and Mary, an engaged couple, discover each other to be kleptomaniacs. Mary cannot resist the temptation to lift anything from a teaspoon to a tiara, while Jack runs to umbrellas and golf sticks. Mary's Ma's gold vanity case is stolen. Jack thinks Mary stole it; Mary thinks Jack stole it. Each, wishing to shield the other, buys a duplicate, and each tries to return the vanity case, confessing theft, when a detective arrives with the original vanity case recovered from the real thief. Jack's efforts to get Mary to take a cure for kleptomania he has bought at the drug store add much to the general hilarity.

"Jerry's Trial"—(One Reel)—Cub Comedy—Horsley—May 3.—Jerry (George Ovey) gets into trouble in a woman's suffrage stronghold and finds himself on trial before a woman jury. The ladies powder their noses, talk fashions, fix their hair and generally show interest in everything but Jerry's case while the evidence is being taken. They return a verdict of guilty and Jerry gets one year to live, but escapes in a suit of the judge's clothes lifted from the jurist's chambers. The judge runs Jerry down and he is marched back to durance through a cordon of mocking femininity.

"Bucking the Tiger"—(One Reel)—Vogue—May 5.—Featuring Ben Turpin. Squire Laurie, the village skinflint, takes a circus tiger as security for a loan. Arthur, who loves Lillian, the old man's daughter, hates tigers, having bucked them, but when Laurie's tiger dies of despondency, Arthur skins it so that Ben, the keeper, can pose in its skin before the half-blind miser and save his job, while Arthur, warned off the premises by old Laurie, turns tiger occasionally so that he can sit in the cage and make love through the bars to Lillian, despite her hard-hearted pa. When the old man becomes suspicious he is chased by the fake tiger all over his own subdivision until he consents to Lillian's marriage.

"Devil's Works"—"Jimmie Dale alias the Grey Seal" series—May 5.—Featuring E. K. Lincoln. Jimmie Dale, the spiketail burglar, has his pocket picked leaving the theater with Marie La Salle, this difficult task being performed by "Larry the Bat," the notorious thief, who secures an important letter from "The Tocsin." Jimmy's control ordering action by "The Grey Seal" in an important case. Jimmy trails "The Bat" to Chang Foo's opium den, where the former has just killed Dago Jim in a fight for possession of the stolen letter, which orders "The Grey Seal" to recover $10,000 stolen by a bank cashier and restore the money. Jimmy recovers the letter, recovers the $10,000, makes the cashier sign a confession, and once more thwarts "The Woman in Black."

Universal Program

What a Clue Will Do—Nestor—April 30.—With Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons and Edith Roberts. Potts and Pan are called by a frantic mother to search for her child. The broken-hearted mother gives them a shoe and a little shirt as the only means of identifying her child. A cub reporter has been sent to the neighborhood and they think that she is the kidnapper. The girl goes to the telephone to report to her editor. Potts and Pan hold up the people in the room. One particularly large person threatens them with a bungstarter. The distracted mother recognizes him as her child. Potts looks at the tiny shoe and gives up the case.

Flat Harmony—Victor—May 1.—Ralph McComas and Eileen Sedgwick. Peter plans to give his wife a birthday present—a bungalow, as she is tired of flat life. The landlord will not break their lease. Peter sends his wife away and sublets the apartment to Foley and his chorus girls to rehearse a dance number. The landlord summons the police, who arrest Foley. Mrs. Duffer reads about it in the paper. Mrs. Duffer goes to the flat, where she sees Foley, who has escaped. The police appear and take Foley. Mrs. Duffer learns the truth and harmony is restored.

The Cabaret Search—L-Ko—May 2.—With Dan Russell. The lovely singer at the "All Inn" is the wife of the head waiter. Dan, a frequenter of the place, falls in love with the singer. When his wife goes away, Dan invites the charmer and some other guests to his house. They all develop a mysterious illness and the health department quarantines the house. Mrs. Dan has hard work in getting into her home. The head waiter is unconvinced and a chase on horseback ends the picture.

Universal Screen Magazine—Issue No. 17.—May 4.—The issue begins with views of an ostrich farm near Los Angeles. Then we see the motor modes of 1917. Mrs. A. Louise Andree demonstrates the advantage of paper bag cookery. A new invention is a lamp which plays phonograph records while burning. The Issue closes with a cartoon in animated sculpture by Willie Hopkins, called "Coming Events Cast Their Shadows Before."

Little Moccasins—(Two Reels)—Bison—May 5.—With Millard K. Wilson and Edith Roberts. The doctors declare that Portia Justin has a touch of the "white plague." Portia and her mother go to the western mountains. Dennis Reid, a red-blooded chap, falls in love with the girl. Learning of Portia's illness, he swoops down upon her and takes her to an Indian woman. By right living and open air he determines to restore her health. Her family is greatly worried, but can find no trace of her. "Little Moccasins," as he called her because of his making her wear moccasins instead of her high-heeled shoes, soon becomes well and strong. He puts her on a horse and sends her home. Freddie learns that Dennis was her abductor, and with a party starts out in search of him. Dennis is injured, and Portia at last realizing her love for him, insists on taking care of the injured man.

A Midnight Mystery—(Two Reels)—Imp—May 4.—With Betty Schade and Charles Perley. This mystery picture is replete with many exciting events. The Evil Sag—(Two Reels)—Selig—James Stanley becomes the owner of the Mitchell farm through his marriage to the mother of Howard Mitchell, and his children, Helen and Dick, live with him. Howard, who comes of age after the death of the mother, accuses Stanley of marrying his mother for the farm. They quarrel, despite Howard's love for Helen. Edward Hale, the county attorney, also loves Helen. There is a depression of the land in one corner of the farm, and the spot has a sinister reputation, for several men have been found dead there. Edward Hale, after an investigation, discovers that the evil influence is odorless natural gas. He realizes that a gas well means wealth to the owner of the land, and Hale redoubles his courting of Helen. After another quarrel between James Stanley and Howard the latter leaves. The next day Stanley is found dead. Hale knows that the gas caused Stanley's death, but tries to fasten the crime of murder on Howard. He fails. Helen and Dick leave when Howard takes possession of the farm. Hale persuades Dick to join him in his conspiracy against Howard and they plan to entice him to the gas spot, but Howard is saved by Helen. Dick lights a match near the spot and in the explosion that follows Hale is killed and Dick is wounded. Howard and Helen marry and are happy in the fortune that comes to them, forgiving Dick for the wrong he tried to do.

Baseball at Mudville—(One Reel)—Selig—Spike, a young pitcher, signs to play with the Milligan Bloomer Girls, supposedly a girls' baseball team. Mudville is billed for a game. The team, in reality, is composed of men. On the way to the ball park the "girls" flirt with the local boys, causing many a heart to go pitapat. During the game Spike, sliding for home, loses his wig. The ruralites come to the realization that they have been humbugged, and start to mob the team. The "bloomers" devoid of wigs, start across the country on the run with the crowd in pursuit and barricade themselves behind closed doors.

Vitagraph — V. L. S. E.

Sally-in-a-Hurry—(Five Reels)—Vitagraph—April 16.—Starring Lillian Walker. Walter, the younger brother of an English lord, is trying to make a place for himself in America and drifts into the restaurant of Pete, where he meets Sally. Sally at once makes a hero of Walter, believing him to be the real lord, whose picture she has cut from a Sunday paper. Her sweetheart, Bill, resents the growing friendship between Walter and Sally and secures the assistance of the siren, Clara. Clara swindles Walter out of his money and later, while at a fashionable dinner with Walter, she and Bill, the crook, steal the hostess' valuable necklace, but Sallie thwarts them. Sally has tried to warn Walter but he will not listen to her. After the episode of the necklace Walter wakes up to the true worth of Sallie and asks her to share his title, which he has just inherited on the death of his brother.

The Hawk—(Five Reels)—Vitagraph—April 23.—Starring Earle Williams. The Count De Dazetta is a society gambler, charming, polished and educated. He adores his wife, Marina, and it is partly that he may buy her frocks and jewels that he stakes his reputation night after night at the houses of their friends and the country homes they visit. She assists him. A young French noble man falls in love with Marina, also, and she soon comes to care for him, learning to hate the profession of her husband and adopting the ideals of the Frenchman. There is one of your jolly American millionaires, the friend of the quartette, from whom the Dazettas are winning when the noble French youth discovers the part Marina plays in the gambling. There is a denouement and the Hungarian disappears. Marina is protected by the Frenchman while they look for the gambler to get his consent for a divorce. One day he returns, and when Marina herself pleads for the divorce Dazetta consents. It is here that he shows how deep and sincere has been his love, how unselfish and how ready he is now to give her up, but only for her good. The best in her nature now blossoms out and she returns to her husband, to help him in a new life.

Her Secret—(Five Reels)—Blue Ribbon Feature—April 30.—Featuring Alice Joyce. The story of a country teacher, the daughter of a minister, who starts for New York, misses the train and is compelled to stay all night at a rude hotel. A party of Eastern civil engineers come in from the mountains, and during the festivities in the rough dance hall one of the dancers gives Rex Fenton a number at random as being that of her room. Befuddled with drink, Fenton afterwards looks for the dancer and stumbles into the room of innocent Clara. The next morning she goes on her way with a broken heart and Fenton awakes in his room with only a dim idea of what occurred the night before. After several months at her position Clara is compelled to resign her position and retire to a small town, where her secret is kept by Dr. Brown, a man of family and who symthizes with her. When Clara returns to town, leaving her child in the care of a nurse, she secures a position as a stenographer and her employer falls in love with her. They are married and she pines for her child. Dr. Brown induces the husband to adopt the child and happiness reigns for several years. One day the husband finds some correspondence from Dr. Brown relating to Clara's motherhood and thinks he is the man. During a stormy scene Dr. Brown tells him the circumstances and the husband realizes that he is the father of Clara's child, for he is Fenton. He begs forgiveness and the story ends in peace and contentment for all of them.

Paramount

The Valentine Girl—(Five Reels)—Paramount—April 23.—Featuring Marguerite Clark. Marian is the daughter of a professional gambler. She is very lonely without companions of her own age, for none of the children in the neighborhood are allowed to play with the gambler's daughter. Finally Morgan's house is raided by the police and Morgan is arrested. In the confusion Marian wanders away. She chances upon a children's party in a nearby church. It is a Valentine party and she is welcomed by the minister. The Rev. Bates tries to find her father but is unsuccessful. Marian persists that her name is Hope Valentine. Later word reaches Morgan in prison that she has been adopted by the minister. The years pass and Marian has developed into a charming young lady. On the day that her engagement is announced her father appears. He implores her to tell Robert her history. She does so, fearing he will reject her. Robert's affection for her is too big to be nullified by her father's past. Reviewed in this issue.

Chicago News

THE local Paramount office is holding a special screening of features and comedies every Monday evening at seven-thirty in its projection rooms on the nineteenth floor of the Consumers building.

Harry L. Leonhardt, western Fox manager, is due to roll back into town from a swing around the coast, next week.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer have moved their general offices from the old quarters in the Orpheum building to the new Rialto Theater building at 336 South State street, fifth floor. The trade was notified of the change by means of neat announcement cards.

Watterson R. Rothacker recently spoke before the Rotary Club at Battle Creek, Michigan, giving his illustrated lecture on "How Motion Pictures are Produced."

Alfred Hamburger has taken over the Easterly Theater, at Diversey boulevard and Lincoln avenue. This means another pearl added to the Hamburger string.

William Fox, president of the Fox Film Corporation, was in Chicago for a day this week. He spent most of his time in conference with Manager J. E. O'Toole of the local Fox office and in general business negotiations. More about him will appear in the next issue of Motography.

E. H. Hibben, director of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, has just finished a production for a well-known vaudeville headliner. This picture is promised as a decided novelty for big time vaudeville. The title of the new film is "Maid o' the Movies."

Chicago is to have that new theater for sure now. The A. H. Wood Theater Company of New York has secured a loan of $400,000 from the American Bond and Mortgage Company for the purpose of constructing a ten-story office building, with the theater in the rear, at the northwest corner of Dearborn and Randolph streets.

A large number of the film men of Chicago took part in the festival at the Reel Fellows Club on Friday, the twenty-seventh, and enjoyed the big beef steak dinner and the short, special program. Remember, Reel Fellows invite you to come around to their attractive headquarters at 207 South Wabash avenue, fifth floor, at any time of the day or night.

The present status of the pending Illinois state censorship bill, commonly known as the Guernsey bill, is that it is now in the hands of the committee ready to be reported at any time to the legislature. It is probable that the report will be favorable and the bill will probably become a law unless some drastic steps are taken to prevent it. The whole matter has been threshed out by the special legislative committee and the film men, but the results of the discussions cannot be determined.

Goldwyn Pictures

Quality—Not Footage For Goldwyn

THOUSANDS of exhibitors write to ask the length of Goldwyn Pictures. Here is our answer:

They will be as long as the story demands, or as short as it demands. Pictures free of padding; pictures that are complete, yet never drag; pictures that know how far to go and when to stop.

In motion pictures we will make the works of Irvin S. Cobb, Margaret Mayo, Edgar Selwyn, Roi Cooper Megrue, Porter Emerson Browne, and other famous authors, the same tremendous successes that they were in the national magazines and on the stage.

There is a nation-wide demand for vivid, well-told, dramatic and well-directed film productions—a demand for power, quality, sanity and cleanliness.

Goldwyn, from the beginning, hopes to satisfy that demand.

National Exhibitors' Circuit Organized

NEW MOVEMENT TO PURCHASE FILM DIRECT FROM MANUFACTURERS

MORE than fifty prominent exhibitors, from various sections of the country, have formed the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Incorporated, in New York City.

This organization marks an important step in the history of the motion picture industry. The purpose of the association is to buy pictures direct from the manufacturers, for showing throughout the circuit in the houses of members, after which the films will be passed on to second and third run circuits.

Control $20,000,000 Worth of Theaters

The members control more than $20,000,000 worth of motion picture theaters in all parts of the United States. The organization is incorporated under the laws of the state of New York with $50,000 capital stock, fully paid and non-assessable. The officers who were elected are: President, S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto, New York City; vice-president, T. L. Tally, Los Angeles; secretary-treasurer, Harry O. Schwalbe, Philadelphia. The three officers named are directors and Frederick Dahnken, San Francisco; Robert Lieber, Indianapolis; Aaron Jones, Chicago, and Earl H. Hulsey, Dallas, Texas, complete the board of directors.

Mr. Rothapfel made an announcement concerning the aims of the organization after the meeting. He said: "The purpose of our organization is to band ourselves together for our mutual advantage, to exchange ideas, and to raise the standard of the entire motion picture industry to a higher level. The board of directors has been given unlimited power to buy, lease, or otherwise procure films on the open market. Once purchased, the film becomes the exclusive property of the circuit. Each member will control the rights to his respective territory and can dispose of it as he see fit."

The details of operation have not yet been worked out, and the general method of operation is not to antagonize any department of the picture industry or put anyone out of business. The organization will not injure the exchange man. It will create competition for certain productions, and the members feel sure it will foster and encourage the manufacture of better pictures. The details will be left to the board of directors.

Purchase Films Outright

The importance of this movement can scarcely be over-estimated since the tremendous purchasing power of this association, with $20,000,000 capital represented, will enable the members to obtain many films which could only be acquired by purchase outright and obtain them at greatly reduced rates. An organization such as this will eliminate the middleman to a greater or less extent and will take the form of a distributing agency for minor exhibitors.

The First National Exhibitors Circuit, with many prominent and experienced exhibitors back of it, is bound to become a remarkable influence in the distributing and selling phases of the motion picture industry.

Exhibitor Representatives

The Saxe Brothers, of the Saxe Feature Film Company, of Minneapolis, have been appointed representatives of the First National Exhibitors Circuit. Among the active organizers are J. D. Williams, who recently completed the formation of a similar movement in Australia, and who is well known for his film activities; T. L. Tally, who owns the Tally Theater in Los Angeles and who is said to be the first man to operate a picture theater in this country; and E. B. Johnston, secretary and director of the Turner and Dahnken circuit, San Francisco.

It would be difficult to select a more representative list of prominent film men than those that have joined the colors of Messrs. Williams, Tally and Johnston. The members signed up are: T. L. Tally, Los Angeles; Jensen and and Von Herberg, Portland, Ore.; Turner and Dahnken Circuit, San Francisco; Silver Bow Amusement Co., Butte, Mont., Tom Saxe, of Saxe Brothers, Minneapolis; Jones, Linick and Schaefer, Chicago; William Sievers, St. Louis; A. H. Blank, Des Moines, Iowa; E. A. Hulsey, Dallas, Texas; Eugene Pierce, New Orleans; Jake Wells, Atlanta, Ga.; Tom Moore, Washington, D. C.; Col. Fred Levy Louisville; Robert Lieber, Indianapolis; Mantlebaum, Cleveland; John Kunsky, Detroit; Clark and Rowland, Pittsburgh; N. H. Gordon, Boston; S. H. Rothapfel, New York, and Stanley Mastbaum, Philadelphia.

California Sunday Closing Feared

Los Angeles managers may be compelled to close picture theaters and places of amusement on Sunday. This is the purpose of an ordinance now being drafted to further harass moving picture development, according to Photoplayers' Review, which is making a determined struggle against unjust attempts to injure the industry. The movement is not confined to Los Angeles alone, but is taking hold in other sections of California.

There is a great deal of rumor about the coming attacks, but facts have also had a great deal to do with the expected ordinance. Censorship is not American in spirit, it is patently illegal and is illogical, but it is with us nevertheless.

Unemployed men and women with no definite plan for creating new institutions have turned their attention to the breaking down of constructive enterprises. The agitation for a Sunday closing law has been going on in Los Angeles for weeks and months, and recently a woman threatened that propaganda was being prepared and a movement was being organized to close the theaters on Sunday for moral reasons.

The members of associations of producers, distributors and buyers have been called upon to strengthen the membership of their several organizations, bury their differences and join together in a determined fight against the unreasoning attacks on the growing business of exhibitors.

NORTHWEST CONVENTION

Representatives Meet in Minneapolis for Annual Discussion of Industry Problems. Grand Picture Ball Closes Gathering with Stars Present.

Eight states sent representative theater owners to Minneapolis to attend the sixth annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, May 1, 2, 3.

There was no exposition this year, but two business sessions each day were held in the Colonial room at the West Hotel. A Broadway cabaret, with acts from the various theaters and cafes, was held in the Moorish room at the West Hotel, Tuesday night. On Wednesday night the banquet was held in the same room.

A grand picture ball and stars' reception marked the final evening of the convention. The ball was also held in the Moorish room and conspicuous among the picture people present was Rose Tapley of the Vitagraph studios.

David C. Rodgers, chairman of the convention committee and the various sub-committees, held daily sessions in the West Hotel. Billy B. Watson, chairman of the grievance committee, reported the settlement of four grievances during the past week. Harry P. Greene was in charge of the ball as regards music. Amusements subscribed $200, the Artcraft Pictures Corporation sent $100; Universal Film Company, $100; Triangle Distributing Corporation, $50; Westcott Film Corporation, $50; American Maid Film Company, $25; National Carbon Company, $50; Supreme-Selznick, $100; and Greater Vitagraph, $100. These subscriptions were made voluntarily in order to help the Exhibitors' Corporation to entertain the outside exhibitors.

Max Hoppenrath, chairman of the legislative committee, has reported that all bills before the Minnesota legislature, adverse to the motion picture industry were defeated, with the exception of one.

During the convention the question of forming separate state leagues was taken up and discussed. Mr. Steffes moved that a delegate be sent to the Fargo, North Dakota, Convention. Mr. Steffes volunteered to accompany the delegates, and Mr. Rodgers and Mr. Steffes were appointed delegates to the North Dakota convention.

The following exhibitors were admitted to membership at a previous meeting of the association: John B. Colombo, Royal Theater, Virginia, Minnesota; John G. NAVAL RESERVE FILMS

Organization of Junior Naval Reserve Release. Patriotic Reels for Purpose of Promoting Enlistments and Establishing Posts

The U. S. Junior Naval Reserve, with national headquarters at 231 West Fifty-eighth street, New York, has just inaugurated a moving picture campaign in cities outside of New York city to stimulate interest in naval training and to establish local posts where boys may be prepared before being mobolized at Camp Dewey near New London and Camp John Paul Jones at Corpus Christi, Texas, and three other camps to be established during the summer. The Junior Naval Reserve furnishes to motion picture exhibitors free of charge, single reels each week on subjects exploiting the necessities of an active naval reserve. These reels are absolutely new and are of a thrilling nature on militarism and preparedness and the work of the Junior Reserve.

The organization also furnishes the exhibitors unlimited publicity service in his local papers. The exhibitor donates the proceeds of one performance a week towards establishing a local post of the Junior Reserve in his town. The money is deposited in a local bank until sufficient funds have accumulated to organize a local training camp and every cent of the money received from these performances is spent in the home town of the exhibitor giving the benefit performance.

The Junior Naval Reserve is financed by some of the foremost men of the country. It has a membership of over 50,000 boys now and, at the rate the lads are enlisting, there will be 100,000 cadets by next January. S. P. Blackman, well known in the picture industry of Los Angeles, is the chairman of the Motion Picture Committee and exhibitors are rapidly subscribing for the service of the patriotic reels of the Junior Naval Reserve. These will be released on June 15.

Reel Fellows Dine Film Men

Plans for the coming exposition and convention were discussed at a beefsteak dinner on Friday evening, April 27, in the rooms of the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago. The club tendered the dinner to the trade.

Th affair was well attended and a sociable evening resulted in further establishing the determination of members to develop the Reel Fellows Club into the Chicago headquarters for film men. Joseph E. Hopp, president of the Chicago Exhibitors' League, was appointed toastmaster by the president, and speeches were made by Richard Nehls of the American Film Company, M. G. Watkins of the American Standard Film Company, Ralph O. Proctor, president of the Reel Fellows Club, Harry Miller, manager of the Boston, Rose and Alcazar Theaters, and treasurer of the Reel Fellows Club.

Fred Hartman, of the exposition committee, spoke regarding the coming convention and exhibition at the Coliseum, July 14 to 22, and emphasized the fact that it is necessary for everybody to take hold and help make the exposition successful.

George Beban, starring in special productions at the Morosco studios, is writing his own scenarios.

It is a beautiful production in itself."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater. — Downtown house.

The Courage of Silence, with Alice Joyce and Harry Morey (Vitagraph) — "Splendidly directed and brim full of telling human touches that made it appeal strongly to our patrons. Moran, Arcade Theater, Ann Arbor, Mich.—Patrons largely university people.

The Girl Phillippa, with Anita Stewart (Vitagraph)—"Ran it two days. First day broke all box office records. Second day a torrential rail storm cut down attendance. Acting of star and support splendid. Patrons enthusiastic about this dainty little actress. One of the best offerings Vitagraph has put out."—S. A. Moran, Arcade Theater, Ann Arbor, Mich.—Patrons largely university people.

A Poor Little Rich Girl, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"A little better than ordinary program features. Business poor. We showed it three days and lost money every day. The star is losing popularity in this university community. Patrons not at all enthusiastic. People object to 25-cent admission which the rental compels us to charge. They do not believe the grade of the picture warrants the price."—S. A. Moran, Arcade Theater, Ann Arbor, Mich.—Patrons largely university people.

Sapho, with Pauline Frederick (Paramount)—"Brought fairly good business."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—In high class neighborhood.

Sapho, with Pauline Frederick (Paramount)—"There is a difference of opinion on this picture owing to its nature. Personally I think it is a wonderful production, and my patrons, with the exception of a few, were well pleased. The picture must have been staged by a master hand, for the lighting and all the effects seem perfect. The work of Miss Frederick is great, especially in the dramatic, emotional scenes. Business was fine."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

The Secret of Eve, with Olga Petrova (Metro)—"Patrons were not well pleased. Said it was not up to the Petrova standard. Did only fair business. I do not consider it merits rebooking."—S. A. Moran, Arcade Theater, Ann Arbor, Mich.—Patrons largely university people.

Seven Deadly Sins (McClure series)—"I have just finished this series. Attendance has been poor, although the pictures are fairly good. To give this series a wind-up, parts of all the six previous releases were put together for the 'Seventh Sin.' This meant that patrons who had followed the series had to see a repetition of former scenes. My patrons were disappointed and were not afraid to express themselves that way to me. All I could do was to give them their tickets back and tell them to use the same some other time. I am afraid this 'Seventh Sin' cost me more than one customer."—R. C. Stueve, Orpheum Theater, Canton, Ohio.

British War Pictures (Pathe two-reel series)—"These pictures seem to be just what the public wants. They are gruesome, but they prove to Americans beyond a doubt that Sherman was right. I have had more comments from men and women of the higher type on these pictures than on any others ever shown in the house. They actually show healthy, husky men mown down as cannon fodder. There is action every moment. The picture gets better each installment. My audiences seem to sit breathless watching them. A peculiarity of the pictures is that they are being patronized by people in every walk of life, another proof that the camera is a teacher second only to actual experience."—Harry Miller, Alcazar Theater.—Downtown house.

MALLERS BUILDING ROBBED—ALMOST

CONSTERNATION reigned in the Mallers Building, Chicago's film headquarters, one night last week. There was dire conspiracy afoot.

On this particular midnight, Bill Hirshberg, of General Feature Film, was slumbering like a log (with a saw in it) at his home. Suddenly the telephone rang. When Bill reached the phone and heard the message, his eyes stuck out of his head. He leaped from pajamas into pants and yelled to his wife, "They're robbing the office!"

While the burglars worked Barney Balaban and Sam Katz were also speeding to the scene of the robbery. They, too, had been aroused by thoughtful friends.

A cordon of police was thrown about the Mallers building. Pistols glinted through the black halls. The net tightened about the General Feature office, while those interested nervously calculated the possible loss.

There was no one in the office. No one had been there. The door was locked. Not a sheet of paper had been disturbed.

The police went back to their beats. So did Bill and Barney and Sam. There were some remarks.

They didn't seem to care particularly for an April fool joke so late in the season.

THREE WISE MEN GO EAST

Among our villagers who have visited the city on the coast toward Germany the past week or so are John R. Freuler (accompanied by Sid Chaplin), Ludwig Schindler and Watterson R. Rothacker. It is said Sid and John are dickering over some relative of Sid's.

SHE'S STUCK ON AMERICA

Old Glory is finding some peculiar places to roost these days.

The golden sunset blonde in the office of the Exhibitors' headquarters, known as "the lady of the league," wears a little paper flag pasted over the fourth vertabrae of her backbone—only it's in front. This helps protect her wishbone from the cold breezes that frisk around Chicago's Masonic Temple.

One might say, we suppose, that her country's flag is near and dear to her.

MONTANA MAUDE WANTS A JOB

The following letter, "breathing the spirit of the prairies," explains itself:

Mr. Editor, Motography:

Me and Montana Maude is looking for a engagement with some of them Chicago picter companys.

Maude is the one what wants this eastern job most. She wants a actress job where she can show character. She has heaps of character and is just as good as Mary Pickford any day in the week only she ain't had no chanst. She has been where they was makin' them picters at the Black Bottle Filim Ranch and she can cuss better than any director, for there was a director there what was full of the devil and he wanted Maude to make believe crying in a scene where there was a baby what was a XXX Flour stack filled with Alfalfa. Maude told the director that if he would let her fill that flour sack infant with onions she would cry in ernest, and when he done it she cried but she cussed so hard the film was burnt.

Yours respectively,—Tumblebug Thompson (Last house), Bitter Creek, Texas.

Manager Ludwig Schindler of the 1917 Exposition went to New York last week and had to swallow so many contracts for space in the Coliseum that it made him sick.

He was confined to his hotel for three days.

WE DON'T KNOW WHAT WE'RE TALKING ABOUT

There are all kinds of quartettes—including quart-ettes, or pints, worn on the hip—but the latest on the map is the Chicago Exposition quartette.

They don't vocalize—except in conversation and profanity. They don't play on anything—except the business and social emotions of the picture industry. They inhabit the headquarters of the M. P. E. L. of America in the Masonic Temple, W. City, and Old Nick himself couldn't define their functions. They claim they do everything for the exposition that Ludwig Schindler doesn't do.

Here are the mysterious names: Fred Hartman, George Laing, M. S. Johnson and A. C. Krebs.

Go to it, boys!

ST. LOUIS PROTESTS WAR TAX

Disagreement with Musicians' Union Continues—St. Louis Association Helps Protest Against Heavy War Tax on Films.

The proposed war tax on films was the principal cause of discussion at the last meeting of the St. Louis Theater Managers and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association. Forty active members were present and Mr. Melbach, manager of the Melbach Supply and Repair Company was admitted to active membership.

The chairman of the organization committee wrote in part as follows to Lee Ochs on April 16, in reference to the special war tax:

I am enclosing you herewith copy of telegram sent to Missouri congressmen and to the Missouri senator at Washington in reference to the proposed taxation on motion picture theaters and I trust that you will agree with us that a flat rate taxation will be more stisfactory than a tax on the tickets, as this last measure might destroy the balance of our business and cause unforeseen dangerous conditions.

Lee Ochs replied to the above question as follows:

With reference to the special war tax I have this to report. I have notified several people who were very influential in Washington and around Washington to see the committee and have advised them to do everything in their power not to allow the committee to tax per ticket, but to tax a flat rate as you suggested. I made it very plain that the exhibitors could not stand a large tax and pointed out the reasons why.

The Association has been accused of being an anti-union organization because the members do not wish to comply with the demands of the Musicians' Union. They state that this is a false accusation, done purposely to divert the issues. All the theaters belonging to this organization do not employ other than union help but being Americans and holding the spirit of liberty and justice as a principle to follow, do not wish to be imposed upon by selfish or unjust demands.

A vote of thanks was given to Miss Sarah Edwards for the co-operation she has given the association in fighting the censorship bills.

Can't Guil Him

Says London Opinion, "We hear Dickens' literature is appearing on the cinema films in America. The screen will never touch the top rung of achievement, however, until Charlie Chaplin stars in 'A Tale of Two Cities' and, as Sydney Carton, causes the guillotine to bounce back after hitting him in the neck."

Picture Theaters Aid Country

"FOUR MINUTE MEN" TO SPEAK ON BEHALF OF GOVERNMENT

UNDER the auspices of the committee on public information recently appointed by President Wilson, consisting of George Creel as chairman and the secretary of state, secretary of war and secretary of the navy as members, Donald M. Ryerson of Chicago has been authorized to proceed with the organization of a voluntary national body of four minute speakers, to operate in picture theaters during intermissions on educational work under various subject matter to be assigned by the committee. All slides and topics to be used by the speakers are to be submitted in advance for censorship and approval by the National Committee on Public Information.

The "Four Minute Men," as the organization is known, is an entirely voluntary non-partisan organization, and the duties of its members and those operating under it, is to disseminate to the people at large, through the medium of the picture theaters, the various national problems that are confronting the government at the present time and which everyone in the country should endeavor to thoroughly understand.

Such an officially sanctioned organization as the "Four Minute Men" should come as a distinct relief to the motion picture industry and exhibitors in that it will practically eliminate the constant importunities of all classes of organizations for permission to address the public through the medium of the picture theaters. Through this body there is officially assigned to the motion picture industry the work of the education of the masses through a means which has official government sanction. It is also understood that this work is being conducted with the full approval of the Mayor's Committee on National Defense, recently appointed by Mayor Mitchel.

The general plan of the "Four Minute Men" is to perfect a voluntary organization of speakers on educational work covering various subjects of non-partisan national importance, who are to appear in the theaters during intermissions, possibly introducing slides and films in connection with their talks, dealing with various phases of the government's activities, as approved by the committee on public information. All subjects discussed are to be approved by this committee, which is to render every possible assistance with a view of eliminating other speaking arrangements and in securing general co-operation from all branches of the picture industry.

Chicago Man Leads "Minute Men"

Donald M. Ryerson of Chicago has been chosen the president of the "Four Minute Men" and will personally direct the organization of the movement, all of which is to be undertaken on an absolutely voluntary basis; the method of operation, subject matter, standardization of slides, etc., to be controlled from the main office in Chicago, which will co-operate with the committee on public information, in order to insure co-ordination and centralized control of this great patriotic movement in which the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and its affiliated bodies, the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, and Exhibitors' League of America will be important factors.

The New York work connected with this publicity campaign is under the personal direction of Livingston Platt. At the suggestion of Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, a director and member of the executive committee of the National Association, a conference was held at the offices in the Times Building, when Mr. Platt outlined the purposes of the proposed work to Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary, and Arthur James, president of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, an affiliation of the National Association. Arrangements are being made for Mr. Platt to confer with Samuel H. Trigger, president of the Manhattan Local, and William Brandt, president of the Brooklyn Local of the Exhibitors' League of America. A local committee will probably be appointed.

Chicago Exposition Growing Lustily

NEW HEADQUARTERS TAKEN—PRIZES OFFERED—SPACE MELTING AWAY

THE growing youngster which is to be the national motion picture exposition and convention in July, is developing so rapidly that it has been necessary for his parents to take new apartments to accommodate him. When July 14 rolls around, it is certain that this youth will be big enough not only to make Chicago sit up and take notice for a week, but will also make the biggest noise that the motion picture industry has ever heard. Father Ludwig Schindler, exposition director, who has just returned from some strenuous activities in New York, enthusiastically confirms this statement.

The new exposition headquarters are located at 1416 Masonic Temple, Chicago, and all inquiries concerning facts for the fast-going space in the big Coliseum should be addressed there, as well as any general inquiries in connection with any phase of the big show.

Have You a Fifty Dollar Idea?

Exihibitors all over the United States are becoming very much interested in the contest for the best ideas or suggestions to make the seventh national exposition and convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America as attractive as possible to the industry and to the general public. Cash prizes of $50, $35 and $25 are being offered to exhibitors who can originate the best ideas for this purpose.

Draw from your own experience and from your own ideas what you would do if you were exposition manager and then jot these suggestions down and drop them in the mail to 1416 Masonic Temple, Chicago. Your brains and your help, and those of every theater man and film man in the country, are earnestly desired and will go a long way in making the 1917 exposition greater and more valuable to every one who attends.

Manager Ryan of the Garfield Theater, Chicago, has submitted to the exposition committee one of the most logical advertising ideas yet received; this is to have all Illinois exhibitors use an attractive catch line on their program, such as this: "See Your Favorite Star in person at the Coliseum, July 14 to 22."

Possibly because of the prominence all domestic animals are taking in connection with the war and the provision of a sufficient future food supply for the army, Exhibitor Kahn of South Chicago has suggested that it would be a very good novelty and very timely to have one of the prominent photoplay stars dress as a milkmaid and milk a real cow at the exposition, serving the milk at fancy prices per glass. There is no doubt that the novelty would be attractive, provided a cow could be secured who is not too modest to appear in public and a star who has the gimp to extract the lacteal fluid efficiently and gracefully from the cow. The film men have discussed another question in connection with this suggestion, and that is whether or not there is a sufficient demand among film men for refreshment of this sort.

Manufacturers Taking Exposition Space

Exposition Director Schindler has returned from a very successful fortnight in New York selling space for the exposition. Practically all of the large producing companies have already bought space in the Coliseum and all expenses for the coming big show are already guaranteed. There is no doubt from the present outlook that all previous records will be broken.

The fact that the exposition and convention are to be held in the same building has induced a large number of manufacturers to increase the space they used last year and has attracted a number of new concerns to make exhibits this year. The exposition committee warns prospective space-buyers to get their requisitions in at once.

Convention Program a Wonder

The convention program will be one of the finest that has ever been issued in this country for an occasion of this kind. It is about 10x12 inches in size, contains several hundred pages of the finest quality enameled cameo paper and has a rich and tasteful cover of heavy brown stock. There will be 10,000 copies printed at a cost of $5,000. An idea of the de luxe quality of the book can be had from the fact that the silk ribbon alone, for the binding of the book, will cost $223, the lowest bid to be had on the material.

Space in the program will sell for $100 a page, $60 a half page and $35 a fourth page. Walter J. Donovan has charge of the publication and space in the big book.

VITAGRAPH BEATS FORD

Noted Libel Case Against Flivver-Maker Comes to Technical Close—Dispels Charge of Munition-Maker's Influence on "Battle Cry"

In a libel suit against Henry Ford, the Detroit automobile manufacturer, the Greater Vitagraph was awarded a judgment of $1,000,000 on April 23, by Judge Mayer, sitting in the Federal District Court. The judgment is purely technical as yet, and was given as damages because Henry Ford had done almost irreparable damage to the manufacturers of Blue Ribbon Features when he alleged that "The Battle Cry of Peace" was suggested by Hudson Maxim, and had been financed by the munition makers of the United States in order to embroil this country in war.

Court action on April 23 came as the result of the filing by Ford's attorneys of a demurrer to the suit. Technically the presentation of a demurrer is an admission by the defendant of the truth of the allegations in a complaint.

Judge Mayer in rendering his decision, in part, said:

"The Vitagraph Company of America, in September, 1915, publicly presented a film called 'The Battle Cry of Peace,' which since then has been exhibited throughout the United States and Canada. The alleged libel was the publication by Henry Ford, in May, 1916, of an article entitled 'Humanity and Sanity,' which, among other things, stated that 'for months the people of the United States have had fear pounded into their brains by magazines, newspapers and motion pictures.

"No enemy has been pointed out—thus somewhat lacking in prophetic vision of later events.

"The article then proceeds in a similar view, quoting discursively from the congressional record, Lew Dockstader, the minstrel, and various other sources until it arrives at motion pictures, when observations are indulged in under a subcaption of 'The Battle Cry of Maxim.'

"The Vitagraph Company of America in the complaint asserted that it produced 'The Battle Cry of Peace,' not only for commercial purposes but also for the purpuse of furthering a national propaganda to enlighten the public upon the condition of the country as it was then known, and for the purpose of communicating a great and important message to the American people with the patriotic end in view of promoting the best interests of the nation.

"Counsel for defendant contend, not without ingenuity, that the article can be construed merely as meaning that the picture or photoplay is an advertisement of Mr. Maxim's munitions, wares and stocks, and that there is nothing unlawful in such an advertisement. If the premise is correct, the conclusion is sound.

"But the meaning of the article when read with all its context is not that the defendant was attacking an acknowledged advertisement, what defendant charged was that the plaintiff corporation was producing a motion picture or play called 'The Battle Cry of Peace,' not to further honorably a propaganda for preparedness and national defense conscientiously believed in by the producer, but to advertise Maxim's munitions, wares and stocks by deceptive and disingenuous methods under cover of a presentation behind which was concealed a mean scheme by which others were shaking with laughter at the public's fear aroused by the picture, and with joy over the fat contracts the public's fear might bring them."

TRIANGLE PROGRESSES

Wide-Awake Enthusiasm and Progressive Methods to Characterize Activities of Producing Companies—Statements by Officials

Triangle is bound to keep enthusiastically in the vanguard of the industry, leaving indifferent conservatism to others, and to that end the three elements that go to make up the business have conferred and representatives of these factors have the following to say:

Thomas H. Ince, general manager of the Triangle Western studios:

I have been in the business of making motion pictures almost from the day of its start. I think that I have made good pictures. Many have told me so. I think that I am making better pictures today than I ever did before. And I know that I am going to make even better pictures from now on. The present arrangements of Triangle give me the opportunity. I have the finest producing plant in the world. I have the actors, the directors, the writers and the technical experts. I know how. Personally I am certain of all this and I do not doubt my ability to convince others. I must do this to keep up with present day demands. When we know that we must, we get up and at it. Must is the best key to achievement. I must and I will. This is a bold statement. Exhibitors will find that I will make it good. Triangle pictures will be more than good pictures: they will be the best pictures that will bring the most money to the box office. And the box office is always the court of last appeal. It is by its decision that we must all stand or fall. And I am going to make that decision in favor of Triangle. I say it and I mean it.

W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Triangle Distributing Corporation:

I have recently made several announcements in regard to the future of Triangle pictures. This is in further confirmation of them all. Our plans are all formulated, the details are all completed, we are ready to go ahead. And we are going ahead. Others may follow if they wish; but we have taken very good care that they do not catch up to us. We propose to be the leaders in the picture race.

The exhibitor who wants the best will have to have Triangle pictures. His patrons will know that he is dozing on his job if he tries to satisfy with anything less worth while. And it is the wide-awake, alert exhibitor who will win. Hard pounding and seeing who can pound the longest is the thing that counts. We are going to give the exhibitor his chance. We want him to make money. If he does not we would have small reason for being. Every facility of our organization will be used to this end. Ours shall be no rock-ribbed policy. We shall be constantly on the lookout for innovations, improvements. We are big and strong and progressive. We are going to solve problems as they come up and we are going ahead. The exhibitors who believe in that sort of thing will go ahead with us. We intend to make Triangle but another name for merit.

Eugene H. Roth, of San Francisco:

I am the owner of the Portola Theater of San Francisco and the executive manager of the new California Theater, now being constructed at a cost of $1,750,000. It will be the finest moving picture theater in the world. Naturally I want the best pictures in the world to go with it. More—I must have them. And I have decided to use Triangle pictures. I did not do this hastily. As a matter of fact, I have always been opposed to the program plan. I have even fought it. It was not the easiest thing in the world to make me change my views. But Triangle has done it. I have even become an enthusiastic convert. I believe and am not afraid to say that Triangle pictures will make more money for me than any other pictures on the market. That is why I am going to use the Triangle program. From now on in my houses. That is why I unhesitatingly recommend it to others. I have made a careful study of the situation from every angle. And I have arrived at this decision.

Triangle pictures have proved their worth. An acre of performance is worth a whole world of promise. My patrons know this. And I must please my patrons. Otherwise they will cease coming to my houses, and I will be forced to close my doors. That is as certain as it would be unpleasant. I do not intend to have any such a calamity overtake me. I am going to stay in the moving picture business, and I am going to stay with Triangle. And I am sure that others could not do better than to follow my lead. It is my earnest belief that the future of the industry depends upon the principles on which Triangle is founded. And all far-seeing exhibitors will back this belief.

Universal Club Holds Dinner

For the promotion of greater intimacy and a more thorough working acquaintanceship of the members of the various departments of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the Universal Club has been inaugurated with a get-together dinner in New York.

Heads of the organization and those of each and every department, with the major portions of their staffs, were there and about one hundred covers were laid. This dinner was the first of a series of varied monthly entertainments, which will include clam bakes, boat rides, dances, etc., through which a greater social and business acquaintanceship of the Universal forces will be effected.

A permanent organization was effected, with officers as follows: Carl Laemmle, president; R. H. Cochrane, vice-president; P. A. Powers, treasurer. A board of governors of seventeen men, with Jack Cohn as chairman, was elected as follows: Jack Cohn, Morris Pivar, Julius Lewis, Nat Rothstein, Paul Gulick, Hal Hodes, Joe Brandt, Manny Goldstein, Hy Gainsborg, Sam Zierler, Mike Stolzer, Tom O'Neill, P. D. Cochrane; John Ward, George Kann, C. MacGowan, and Kurt Linn. Morris Pivar was designated as recording and financial secretary, and Claude MacGowan as treasurer of the board of governors.

A committee on by-laws and initiation was appointed, and its report will be made to the board of governors as soon as possible, in order that the governors may designate the kind of entertainment for the next monthly meeting.

Lesser Buys "The Barrier"

Sol L. Lesser of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., of San Francisco, has just leased from the General Film Company, the Oakland rights to Rex Beach's "The Barrier." Mr. Lesser consummated the deal in conjunction with F. A. Giesea and the picture will be presented in Oakland in a manner befitting the character of the production; with an augmented orchestra, at the Macdonough Theater, one of the houses controlled by Mr. Giesea.

Stanley Theater Celebrates Anniversary

ANNIVERSARY week has just been celebrated at the Stanley Theater, Philadelphia, marking out the third year of the brilliant financial and artistic success of this beautiful playhouse, devoted to the very best products of the photoplay world. In the brief period that the Stanley has been catering to the tastes of the highest element of motion picture devotees, Managing Director Stanley V. Mastbaum, whose business acumen and keen perception of the wishes of the fashionable patrons who have been permanent and regular attendants, has made a remarkable record for giving entertainment that has not only retained the enviable reputation first created, but has added to the throngs who find here only the artistic and the perfect in screen plays.

Stanley V. Mastbaum.

The fact that the flower and the beauty of fashionable Philadelphia life is represented in the audiences is sufficient guarantee of the worth and brilliancy of the programs which have thus far been offered for their approval and the promise is held out that in the future there will be shown still greater attractions; a rather bold statement in view of the high quality of those which have gone before. Not only will the photoplays be of the very highest pinnacle of merit but the musical programs will vie with them in interest. There is no gainsaying the fact that the Stanley has created a new ideal in the matter of musical attractions for photoplay theaters. When Mr. Mastbaum opened the house he sought to convey to the patrons some of his personal artistic temperament in the musical field, through the instrumentality of a symphony orchestra, composed of picked solo musicians, each one an artist on the particular instrument he plays. It required courage to engage such an organization, the salary list of which is probably larger than that of any other theater in the city, especially as the admission charges are relatively small as compared to the fashionable playhouses devoted to the spoken drama. But Mr. Mastbaum believed from the outset that music of a high quality enhanced the interest of the picture and afforded a pleasant relief between subjects. He felt sure that music lovers would soon come to appreciate any picture house with sufficient courage to install such a combination of musicians.

And he was right, for from the very inception the musical programs have been a potent portion of the entertainment, talked about in the drawing room, in the gatherings of social life and even in the clubs. The result has been the creation of a demand for just such programs as have prevailed at the Stanley during the three years of its bidding for popularity. Now its success is known from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from Maine to Texas, and the innovations adopted by Mr. Mastbaum have been emulated by other managers throughout the country in a way, although with very few exceptions in a less lavish and artistic manner, until almost every high-class photoplay house is laying stress upon the musical portion of the entertainment.

But this was merely one of the original ideas which he invoked to insure the success of the Stanley. He realized that by catering to the comfort of his patrons one-half of the battle was over. Consequently he spent a large sum of money in introducing those luxuries which up to this time had never been heard of. A remarkable system of ventilation was one of the most important innovations which aroused the interest of the entire theatrical world and which has been imitated by some of the large picture houses in various parts of the country. Courteous attendants, ushers who take a special delight in doing everything to make the visitor to the Stanley feel at home, scrupulously clean auditorium and foyer, attractive decorations, magnificent draperies, beautiful art walls and, in fact, luxurious surroundings throughout that prove most inviting to the visitor.

In an interview yesterday Mr. Mastbaum declared that the future of the better class of motion pictures, such as are given at the Stanley, seemed to him to be full of promise. He said:

People think that we have reached the limit of big things in photoplay, but mark my word, the next six months will produce things in photoplays, in the perfection of the art as well as the quality of the subjects produced. I prophesy that before the first of next year there will be a veritable revelation in photoplay attractions. The several prominent producers are bending every energy, every effort to improve—and this, notwithstanding that at present we are producing pictures of such superior merit to those of a year or two ago that there is little or no comparison. Bigness, artistry, deep thought and skill are elements which are going to play an important part, and you will find that the market will not be flooded with the commonplace material which has had to do in the past because we were not sufficiently versed in the higher degree of the industry.

Now men of brains, men of ingenuity and of structural ability are engaged in making pictures, with the result that the tone and the tenor has been vastly improved. The big things in pictures are going to survive, while the picayune films and their makers are going to sink into oblivion. So confident of the future am I that I am completing the plans for the erection of the new theater at Nineteenth and Market streets. These plans will be finished within a short time and then the actual work of erecting a picture palace, the like of which has never been dreamed of hitherto, will begin. It was worth mentioning here that since we first gave thought to the construction of this new house, upon which we had intended to spend one million dollars, there has been an advance in the prices of structural materials of about one-fourth over the figures then submitted. This will mean, of course, that instead of investing one million dollars we will spend one million, two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and I am not so sure that before the house is ready to open the sum will be somewhat in excess of these figures.

The new house will have a seating capacity of 4,000 and will be supplied with every modern convenience and comfort for the patrons. It is my great faith in the future of pictures that prompts me to undertake not only the erection of such a costly structure, but the installment of an orchestra of one hundred solo musicians, and other innovations of a novel and wholly exclusive character.

Inasmuch as Stanley V. Mastbaum is regarded as the Abrams, Lasky-Zukor of pictures in Philadelphia, it goes without saying that he will keep every promise he makes and that in the not far distant future this city will have the privilege of enjoying this style of amusement in one of the most beautiful, most complete and in every respect inviting playhouses in the world devoted to photoplay productions.

It is little wonder, therefore, that the observance of the third anniversary of the Stanley Theater should be fraught with so much promise of the future. In the three short years of its existence it has proven a marvelously accurate gauge of the gradual improvement in films and it goes without saying that the coming years will be replete with even greater productions, much to the pleasure of the growing element which finds so much and such satisfying enjoyment in this form of entertainment.

Side Shows of a Big Film Presentation

Art and patriotism combined made a striking lobby display in Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Colonial Theater, Chicago. The attraction is the timely Jeanne d'Arc historical and romantic spectacle, "Joan the Woman," acclaimed broadcast as the greatest triumph of the operatic-cinematic star, Geraldine Farrar.

The lobby of this playhouse is a marble hall, luxurious in itself. Like painting the lily, the impresari have furnished the palace with bunting, silks, lobby girls, footlighted posters and replicas of old-world art.

The jewel is a reproduction of Henri Michel Antoine Chapu's statue of Joan of Arc, a treasure of the Luxembourg, Paris. Grouped about the cast, whose pedestal is hung with the French tri-color, are the lobby girls, costumed in coats-of-mail and fleur-de-lis. They stand at military attention and distribute programs.

Patrons invariably examine the statue with interest. It stands in the center of the lobby and is ever surrounded by spectators after the show.

The four walls of both the inner and outer foyers are hung with French and American flags. Soldiers and sailors are always present; the management has made their uniforms their passes.

Penants of white silk splashed with gold fleur-de-lis drape the north wall over the entrance to the auditorium. In the center is hung an oil poster of Farrar as "Joan" done in primary colors. Opaque amber lamps light this softly from the foot.

The walls of the outer lobby are brightened by a half-dozen oil painting—life size—of Farrar, members of her cast and "stills" of the action. The wall adjoining the box-office window carries a replica of the famous painting of Jeanne d'Arc at the court of Charles VII of France by Boutet de Monvel.

Art critics of the Chicago press have commented favorably upon the esthetic value of the exhibition, the work of Norman Field, a showman of long legitimate and screen experience, permanent manager of the house, and E. Q. Cordner, his assistant, originator of the "Strand idea" in motion pictures.

So much for the side exhibition at the theater.

Another artistic display in connection with the film, is the window showing at Lyon & Healy's, America's foremost music house, to the scale-and-clef world what Tiffany's is to that of plate and gems. This was arranged by the J., L. & S. publicity department and marks the first time in the history of the house that publicity has been given a photoplay.

The trimming—singing machines, records and portrait of Mme. Farrar—associates her two arts, music and the screen.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

THE stage setting of the Strand Theater, New York, has been transformed and now represents a domed interior of festive Romanesque design, rich in harmonious colors of the East. It is one of the most gorgeous stage settings ever displayed. The musicians also appear in handsome new uniforms.

A new screen, 12 by 16 feet, one of the finest and largest in the city, has been installed in the Princess theater of Quincy, Illinois.

The Warsaw, Missouri, Opera House uses a dodger about ten by six inches in size in advertising its attractions. Manager L. Dean Sands charges ten cents for Chaplin films.

A part of the proceeds of the Morocco Temple Theater, Jacksonville, Florida, were donated to the American Red Cross Society by the Shrine band and Patrol last week.

Frank Hall Productions, Inc., of Newark, has been chartered by the state of New Jersey to manufacture and deal in picture films, operate motion picture exchanges, employ scenario writers and conduct picture exhibitions.

"Joan the Woman" has closed its very successful engagement at the Colonial Theater, Chicago, and "The Crisis," the Selig drama, will be presented there for the first time in Chicago.

Local current events in films are now being prepared by the Delaware Film Company, of Wilmington, Delaware, and presented in two picture houses and carried as features in the different theaters all over the state.

The Pictures Development Company, a $150,000 corporation, has been formed in Toledo, Ohio, to manufacture Aladdin moving picture machines. The incorporators are John Q. Adams, E. McCree, George E. Seney, John R. Calder and John M. Ormond.

One of the new amusement devices which Manager I. M. Martin has installed at Chester Park, Cincinnati, Ohio, is called "shooting the movies." The device consists of a shooting range with moving pictures projected on a large paper screen as the targets.

The Capitol Theater Company of Frankfort, Kentucky, which is defendant in a suit filed for the purpose of preventing Sunday shows, has secured a formidable petition against Sunday closing which appears in the advertising columns of the State Journal.

Rev. Isaac W. Bagley, picture censor in Camden, New Jersey, has issued an order prohibiting the showing of war horrors on the screens. The censor takes this step on the grounds that war horror pictures retard enlistments in the army and navy service.

Carl Ray has recently bought and rebuilt the Strand Theater of San Bernardino, California, at a cost of $20,000. He has installed a $10,000 pipe organ. Mr. Ray is also owner of the Amusement Theater of Cheyenne, Wyoming. He was formerly from Muskegon, Michigan, and is an example of the old saying: "All great men come from Michigan, and the greater they are the sooner they come."

A dozen picture theaters in Schenectady, New York, were operated last Sunday under a court order restraining Commissioner John E. Cole and Chief James W. Rynex from interfering with the performances.

Federal officials flatly denied that they had passed the word to the Pennsylvania State Department of Public Safety urging that censorial body to call off the exhibition in the Keystone state of "Civilization," "War Brides," "Patria," and certain other popular screen features.

The Mystic Theater of Petaluma, California, showed the following features during the week of April 23: "Jealousy," "Threads of Fate," "The Slave Market," "The Evil Eye," "The Seventh Sin," and "A Square Deal." "My Official Wife" was shown on Sunday, April 29.

When the new Rialto vaudeville and picture theater at the corner of Market and Grove streets, Amsterdam, New York, is thrown open to the public, Amsterdamians will have just cause to be proud of the amusement house because it is pronounced one of the finest in this section of the state.

W. W. Abrahamson of the Zelda Theater, Duluth, Minnesota, while exhibiting Greater Vitagraph's "The Girl Phillippa," announced that he would offer prizes to the Duluth girls who bear the closest resemblance to Anita Stewart. This novel publicity stunt created a large attendance during the entire run.

Manager W. S. McLaren, of the Majestic-Colonial Theater Company, Jackson, Michigan, issues a very complete eight-page bulletin called the "Weekly Film News," which contains the programs of the theaters and news of the players. It is eight by nine inches in size and is attractively illustrated. Mr. McLaren has written to MOTOGRAPHY to borrow some halftone illustrations for his "magazine."

Some of the problems of the exhibition of pictures were aired recently before the industrial board of the Department of Labor and Industry at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. The board, consisting of William Young, Philadelphia, representing labor; A. L. Garver, Roaring Springs, manufacturers, and Mrs. Samuel Semple, Titusville, women's interests, sat for the purpose of obtaining the sentiment of all concerned on proposed legislation regarding the age of picture machine operators.

Dr. H. S. Clark, director of the department of public speaking at the University of Chicago, bitterly attacked those who advocate the closing of theaters and the postponement of pleasures, in a speech at the first day's session of the drama league of America. Dr. Benedict

Papot, of the Crane Technical High School, delivered an address on the American drama, and stated that he did not believe in censorship of motion pictures. "The public is the only censor," said Dr. Papot.

No motion pictures are being shown in Albany, New York. One of the picture houses is dark and the other has a notice on the door stating that it has been closed temporarily on account of the passage of the censorship ordinance by the Albany council. The council shows no disposition to repeal the ordinance.

William N. Selig says that when he started in the film business in 1896 fifty feet was the most that theaters would run. One day he released a subject one hundred feet in length called "The Tramp and the Dog." To his amazement it created a riot. It was one of the biggest sellers he ever had, and over four thousand prints were distributed.

J. Joy Emanuel, manager of the Jefferson and Park Theaters of Philadelphia, believes in diversity of programs practically every week. He has a new size and design and paper stock. Some of these are very attractive and cost a good deal of money. Many of the covers are embossed in colors.

The film "Motherhood" has been barred from New York by order of Commissioner of Licenses Bell. He sent notifications to all exhibitors that they must cease showing it on penalty of having their licenses revoked. It purports to show army life, which is portrayed in an extremely bad light, according to Mr. Bell, and therefore should not be displayed at this time.

The Strand Theater, New York, offered last week a triple photo-dramatic feature bill, including Marie Doro in a new production entitled "Heart's Desire," by Shannon Fife; the third of the series of O. Henry stories, "Past One at Rooney's," and Victor Moore in "Invited Out." The topical review of news pictures fills out the film program and the Strand Orchestra and talented singers provide the musical entertainment.

The secretary of the athletic committee at Sing Sing prison has sent the following letter to the Strand Theater of New York:

We shall be pleased to have you bring your baseball club to our grounds on Saturday, May 19, for we still have recollections of that 4-3 defeat given us by your representatives in the summer of 1915, and we feel that the team which we have in the field this season possesses the ability to "wipe out" that blur upon our record.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of Minneapolis has won a signal victory through its school committee, in its campaign to prevent the public schools of the city from showing film features. The exchanges have shut off the supply of films at the request of the exhibitors. There was a good deal of discussion, but the people have come to realize that the theaters are rendering a service to the community and must be protected.

"The Belle of the Town," taken and exhibited in Hazelton, Pennsylvania, shows a scene where three local men who are suitors for the hand of the heroine decide to enlist in the service of Uncle Sam, after they have been rejected. In the center of the group is shown Charles Boyle, whose acting throughout the entire production is classy. Boyle emphasizes the fact that he will enlist and the picture is true to life, as Boyle has already made good his boast.

The Elmwood Theater, of Elmwood, New York, issues a clever vest-pocket program. As the folder is opened a card saying: "Two men loved her—" is exposed, and in order to read the rest of the sentence it is necessary to open the program still further. The rest of the sentence is, "Which one does she finally choose?"

E. F. Daniels, manager of the Daniels Theater, Iron River, Wisconsin, has kept his theater open Sundays, in the face of a strong reform movement, by means of an educational campaign, giving a talk to his patrons every show night on Sunday amusements and reforms. He has since been elected mayor of the city by a two to one vote, defeating a church member in the election.

"Jimmie Dale" Series Pleasing

The Mutual featurette, "Jimmie Dale Alias the Grey Seal," which is being produced in a series of sixteen complete stories, each one showing some adventure of the Grey Seal, who robs the rich to pay the poor, is proving by its booking, to be meeting the demand of the public for short featurettes to round out the evening's entertainment.

In Detroit weekly showings are made at the following theaters: Grand Circus, Woodward, Rosebud, Comique, La Salle, Arcadia and Olympic, and the exhibitors report crowded houses on the Jimmie Dale Night.

Brooklyn theater patrons are also enthusiastic about these mystery stories which are being shown each week.

Night Scenes in "The Railroad Raiders"

Almost all of the scenes in "A Double Steal," the second chapter of the Mutual-Signal serial "The Railroad Raiders" were taken at night and depict scenes in which the only illumination comes from lanterns, the headlights of trains, or light through windows.

There are scenes taken around the station where the light coming from the open door illuminates the darkness. The action takes place in this shaft of light. There are scenes in which the railroad raiders are stealing through the dark woods with their swinging lanterns as the only illumination; interior of the private car with the party seated in a circle of light under the dome and shadows in all other parts of the car; and the tender of the engine thrown into bold relief by the firelight.

Earle Williams in "The Hawk"

In picturizing "The Hawk," which created a sensation on the legitimate stage for its tremendous situations, Greater Vitagraph, through the latitude of the film was able to amplify rather than merely maintain the interest and appeal attaching to the characters and plot. Earle Williams is starred in this Blue Ribbon feature release of April 23, but two other parts of outstanding importance are those taken by Denton Vane and Ethel Gray Terry. The story of "The Hawk," the leading role, deals with a triangle which has the unusual quality of obtaining sympathy from the audience for each of its three conflicting elements.

Put Film Securities on a Sound Basis

THE financial concern which has been reporting the market on film securities for MOTOGRAPHY complains that these stocks have not been profitable to its customers, and that some of the producing companies have not fulfilled the claims of their organizers.

From the standpoint of the promoter and the financier, this is not a particularly original charge. It has already been brought against railroads, steel corporations, automobile manufacturers and a dozen other large and respectable industries. And we fear that the charge has been wholly justified in nearly all cases.

So long as any industry has the earmarks of prosperity and profit, the public will be eager to get into it. And so long as the public is eager to buy in there will be plenty of enterprising promoters still more eager to sell. Those who have no producing companies will make them to order out of paper.

The promise of one hundred per cent dividends sounds good to the man who has but five thousand dollars to his name. It puts him in the same class as the man who gets only five per cent on his hundred thousand dollars. Only a few have a hundred thousand; a good many have five thousand. Somebody will always take advantage of that condition until the millenium.

This tendency to sell the people something they are crying for, regardless of its true value to them, is neither peculiar to, nor the fault of, the motion picture industry. The business is responsible only because it carries that air of prosperity so enticing to those who are not prosperous. It looks like a hundred per cent; therefore, when someone says it is, the public believes what it has all along suspected and wanted to believe.

The man who sells worthless film stocks to a foolish public is likely to be anything but a real film man. More probably the sale of glittering but false "securities" is his main business, and he becomes a "film man" for his temporary purposes just as he would, with equal celerity, become an "automobile man" or a "mining expert."

All respectable industries owe it to themselves, and to the public that respects them, to rid their circles of these parasites and exploiters. The cleansing function is nicely included within the reasonable scope of activities of the national association.

Any business enterprise may be born with all the marks of success, and yet fail for unforeseen reasons. In such a case the organizers may be wholly blameless. Paper profits that look positive enough have a common way of dwindling to vanishment. Every industrial investment involves risk.

So a nice distinction is always possible betweeen the company whose effort is sincere but ill-fated, and the company whose whole purpose is false. The only test is a knowledge of the film industry's peculiar requirements, and the possession of proven facts as to the company's organization—financial, executive and staff—its business affiliations and its arrangements for distribution.

Big industries must always be financed directly or indirectly by the public. Loss of public confidence in its securities is therefore the most serious thing that can happen to big business, retarding its growth and depreciating properties. Promoters who are gradually arousing the people's suspicions against the film business are truly destroying the source of the golden eggs and hampering future expansion.

Real picture producers have nothing to lose, and everything to gain, by combining to force out the unscrupulous stock seller who has no intention of remaining in the business after he has satisfied his covetousness.

The film industry cannot continue to grow, except at extreme and unprofitable cost, until it arranges all its securities on a safe and sound basis.

Free Competition

A GOOD many theater owners continue to excite themselves unduly over the occasional prospect of "free competition." We use the quotation marks because that is what the exhibitors call it, and not what we call it.

The thing we are talking about is nothing but the use of films by churches and schools; not necessarily in their services and classes, but for the entertainment of their people.

The films used by schools and churches are always selected with extreme care and caution. As a rule the programs so arranged are not of a sort calculated to attract paid admissions, because while interesting enough they lack the balance contributed by showmanship.

The free school and church shows are no more harmful to the paid admission shows than the public libraries are harmful to the bookstores and the magazine stands; not, indeed, so much so. Yet it would be a nearsighted bookseller who, after these years of experience, would object to public libraries. It is our belief that the retail book business would diminish if the libraries were closed.

The expansion, improvement and popular appreciation of motion picture powers means inevitably that the pictures will be used more and more, as means to a worthy end, by sociological institutions. It is only a matter of time until every church, and every school, and every chautauqua, will use films as freely as they use speakers.

That is a development that the theater man can neither prevent nor retard. It is as inevitable as the fact that films will continue to be produced. Our object in discussing it, therefore, is not to defend it from attack, but to reassure those who are fearful of its possible inroads upon the business which carries their investment.

Motion pictures are now as firmly established in the life of the people as books and magazines and newspapers. Motion picture theaters are a recognized part of community habit. Their location influences the desirability of neighborhoods and affects the success of other businesses, the rental of dwellings and the local means of transportation. Their individual permanency is in question only when inefficient operation leads to unprofitable results, as happens similarly to groceries, drug stores, and other community necessities.

Every exhibitor who knows his patrons—as every exhibitor should—knows that the church and the school and the lecture and the chautauqua will never be serious competitors of his. If he has the right degree of faith and optimism, he will be aware that every patron he loses to the attractions of the "free show" will bring him two new customers who have had their latent fondness for entertainment aroused by the samples.

It is strange but true that in every community there are hundreds of people who never enter a picture theater. These retiring and "old fashioned" individuals, however, are just the ones who will take in the church and school programs, and there meet motion pictures face to face for the first time. Is it reasonable to suppose they can keep away from the theater after that experimental dose?

For that is all the free programs can ever amount to—experiments for the unfamiliar or propaganda for the followers of ideas. As shows, they will compare with the presentations of the properly run theater as amateur dramatics compare with professional.

The motion picture art is too useful to mankind to try to keep it out of such service as it can render on free programs. And every free show of that kind will ultimately work out not as a hindrance but as an actual help to exhibitors; for it will finally remove any vestige that remains of the old occasional prejudice against "theatricals."

Vitagraph Ready With Summer Releases

HIGH STANDARD FOR FAIR WEATHER ATTRACTIONS

THERE is not a single weak spot in the summer program of the Greater Vitagraph, which has just been announced. The program will, of course, be released through V. L. S. E. exchanges. It has been customary for producers to release their weakest attractions in midsummer, holding in reserve for winter pictures consdiered as worthy of greater patronage. Some of the pictures on this schedule stand out above others, however, and one of them is "The Sixteenth Wife?", which might also be called "Another Reason Why We Should Fight the Terrible Turk."

Comedy Drama of Heathen Harem

"The Sixteenth Wife?" is of appealing interest from beginning to end. It is so full of laughter that Director-Manager S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto Theater, New York, booked it after seeing the picture in its incomplete state and before the titles had been made. It is the story of an American girl upon whom a Turkish Rajah cast longing eyes and eventually, after kidnapping her, endeavored to maker her "His Sixteenth Wife?" or at least the sixteenth occupant of his palatial harem. She escapes. Throughout the entire picture there is a mixture of tragedy and comedy—just enough of the latter to keep the audience convulsed.

Greater Vitagraph's summer releases start with "Her Secret," with Alice Joyce and Harry Morey as co-stars, which was ready for public consumption on April 30.

"The Captain of the Gray Horse Troop," a dramatization of Hamlin Garland's novel of the same name, is said to be one of the few natural Indian stories ever written, and the truth is carried to the photoplay. While far too late to be considered a propaganda picture, it shows very clearly the manner in which the redman was mistreated by the government of the United States through the neglect and dishonesty of Indian agents.

Summer Series

Anita Stewart, playing the stellar role in "Rebellion," will be the release of May 21, which will be followed on May 28 by "The Soul Master," with the old Vitagraph favorite, Earle Williams.

For the anticipated hot weather of June and July, Greater Vitagraph has prepared an especially inviting list of releases, starting on June 4 with "The Magnificent Meddler," by Lawrence McCloskey, featuring Antonio Moreno. It consists of the story of the struggles of a young man who placed a higher value on honor than upon love and had the courage to unmask the father of the girl with whom he was in love.

On June 11 the release is "The Question," by Lawrence McCloskey, directed by Perry Vekroff, who recently directed "The More Excellent Way," one of the best box office attractions of the year. Alice Joyce is featured in "The Question," which is a story depicting the heart-gripping sacrifice of a woman for the man she loved.

"The Maelstrom," by Frank Froest, directed by Paul Scardon and featuring Earle Williams, supported by Dorothy Kelly and an all-star Vitagraph cast, is the release for June 18. It is a picture full of mystery, action and thrills, in which interest is held until the very last foot of film.

"Mary Jane's Pa," from Henry Dixie's stage success, and directed by William P. S. Earle, who recently directed "Babette," and "The Sixteenth Wife," is the offering for June 25. Marc MacDermott and Mildred Manning are featured in "Mary Jane's Pa." MacDermott takes the part created by Henry Dixie and is given the very best opportunity ever offered him for showing his talents as a screen artist of the highest calibre.

Antonio Moreno is featured in the July 2 release, which is titled "A Son of the Hills," from the novel of the same name. This is a charming story of the great outdoors, in which a real "son of the hills" battles for success and love.

Later Releases on Same Level

The balance of the July releases are:

July 9—"Richard the Brazen." An adaptation of Cyrus Townsend Brady's and Edward Peple's book of the same title; directed by Perry Vekroff, featuring Alice Joyce and Antonio Moreno. This release will present these two popular players for the first time as co-stars, in a drama replete with heart interest.

July 16—"Lincoln by the Nine." By Thomas Edkelow; directed by Paul Scardon featuring Earle Williams and the talented and beautiful Corinne Griffith who was seen to such splendid advantage in "The Last Man." A particularly timely story dealing with the perils of a Secret Service spy.

July 23—"The Message of the Mouse." By George Randolph and Lillian Chester; directed by Wilfred North, featuring Anita Stewart. This production, which is in seven parts, is really a super-feature, although it is to be released on the regular program.

It was especially written for Miss Stewart by these widely known authors, and undoubtedly will prove an attraction of such strength as to produce capacity business even at the season of the year in which it is released.

July 30—"The Lady Sheriff." Produced by William Wolbert and featuring Antonio Moreno. A red-blooded western drama—the kind that causes a tug at the heart and a catch at the breath.

Triangles for May 20

Wilfred Lucas, Lillian Gish and Dorothy Dalton are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for May 20. Lucas and Miss Gish will be co-starred in a story of strong and vivid characterization entitled "Souls Triumphant," written by Mary H. O'Connor and directed by John O'Brien. Dorothy Dalton will be presented by Thomas H. Ince in a rattling comedy-drama of life in a fashionable southern community, known as "Wild Winship's Widow," written by John Lynch and directed by Charles Miller. Miss Dalton is ably supported by Alice Taaffe, Lillian Hayward, and other well-known Ince players.

"Souls Triumphant" is the picturization of a wronged wife's fight to restore her erring husband to a position of self-respect. The story shows the reverse of the usual three-cornered affair growing out of one man's relations with two women, and thus gains for the spectator a situation of unusual dramatic interest and emotional appeal. The element of mystery injected into the plot keeps the interest from flagging, and until almost the last moment of action there is never a time when the spectator may be sure he has anticipated the outcome.

Dorothy Dalton's impersonation of the title-role of "Wild Winship's Widow" is said to be one of the most engaging that she has yet given to the screen. She takes the part of a young and pretty widow with every luxury at her command, who has elevated the memory of her husband into a religion, although "Wild Winship" has been anything but a laudable character. The habit of intense mourning becomes one of the active duties of her life, and as a matter of fact, she extracts much enjoyment out of her self-enforced misery. But at length Mrs. Winship discovers the errors of her ways and becomes almost reckless in her attempts to prove that she is still young and attractive enough to win the admiration of the masculine sex. The result is that she gets more devotion than she really cares for, and has to resort to certain very feminine wiles to extricate herself from an extremely embarrassing and amusing situation. There are several unusually beautiful scenes of fox-hunting and cross-country riding that add the typical Ince atmosphere to the production.

"SUBMARINE EYE" RELEASED

Prints Leased for Fixed Periods on Territorial Rights Basis—Rebates Allowed When Contracts Expire

Several radical departures from the beaten path of marketing feature pictures are disclosed by the following statement, issued by George Williamson:

My brother and myself are simply astounded at the way our initial advertising for "The Submarine Eye" has brought us in touch with buyers of this country. We have not attempted to credit this flood of inquiries to one or more mediums, believing that they have all done their share to let the world know that we are ready with our first independent release, to which we have given the timely title "The Submarine Eye."

We had determined not to go on record as supporting any definite marketing policy. But, in justice to those who are anxious to secure contracts for the "The Submarine Eye," I am pleased to tell you that it will be marketed upon the territorial rights basis with certain definite exceptions to the general plan followed out by other producers.

There are certain districts which we may want to reserve for ourselves. It is our aim to definitely establish its value throughout the Big Time so that when the picture is finally ready to be thrown open to bookings for the smaller houses, it will be so well known that exhibitors will reap the additional benefits of the advertising done locally.

In marketing our products we will offer territorial rights subject to our control, but we will not make outright sales of prints. All prints will be leased at 7 cents per foot and a rebate of 2 cents per foot will be allowed on prints returned from any territory at the end of the contract period. This simply means that we do not want to make any profit on the sale of prints, and it is also a double safeguard against unscrupulous handling of our product. I understand that 5 cents is the approximate cost of the printing, and inasmuch as "The Submarine Eye" is beautifully tinted and toned, I think it is a very reasonable price.

Your readers will undoubtedly be interested in the co-operative help we intend to give territorial rights buyers. There will be a customary press book of ready-made press stories, newspaper and magazine advertising. Also an assortment of five color lithographs.

We have also had a complete musical score prepared for any size orchestra from piano to an arrngement for sixty pieces.

Selznick Gets "The Barrier"

Lewis J. Selznick has obtained the world rights for the distribution of "The Barrier," by Rex Beach. The sensational success of this big production during its pre-release showings in New York at the Broadway Theater convinced Mr. Selznick that in "The Barrier" he would have an attraction worthy of the quality standard he had set with his Selznick-Pictures, and a deal was soon consummated with Benjamin B. Hampton and Rex Beach through which the control of "The Barrier" passed entirely into Mr. Selznick's hands.

As soon as the contract was signed, Mr. Hampton delivered to the Selznick organization all the prints of the film that were completed, as well as all advertising and general publicity matter. Prints are being rushed to all the Selznick exchanges, where the picture can be seen by exhibitors throughout this country and Canada.

In commenting on the deal, Mr. Selznick said:

"I have taken over the distribution of 'The Barrier' for two reasons: first, because it is unquestionably one of the greatest photoplays ever produced and I wanted it. Second, because Mr. Hampton and Mr. Beach realized that my system of distribution was the only one in existence that would give this splendid production the fullest possible chance to reach the screens of every first-class motion picture theater in the United States and Canada."

"Wholesome Films" Appear

As announced in last week's Motography, "Wholesome Films" are soon to be presented to the country.

The plans just completed in Chicago provide for an extensive distributing organization with branches in all principal cities.

M. J. Weisfeldt, for many years with the Mutual Film Corporation, and well known to the trade, will be general manager of the Wholesome Film Corporation and have direct supervision of its activities.

The aim of the new corporation is to present pictures that are wholesome in every way, fit for the best of theaters and all classes of audiences, yet without being intrusively educational or hinting of propaganda. The stories to be used for Wholesome Films are to be the best abtainable from American authors, strong and virile, yet wholesome in theme and presentation.

"In other words," announces General Manager Weisfeldt, "we will censor our pictures in the manuscript so that the finished pictures on the Wholesome program will be all the name implies.

"We have already contracted for the literary services of some of America's most popular authors, as well as the motion picture rights to the works of a greatly beloved writer recently deceased.

"By having constantly in mind the idea of wholesomeness we will be able to offer a program of good, clean entertainment absolutely devoid of all sex taint or the sensationalism that keeps active the censor boards of the country.

"In a few weeks we will have a very important announcement to make to the exhibitors of the country."

The general offices of Wholesome Film Corporation will be Consumers Building, Chicago. The other officers are A. M. Allen, president; Milton Daily, vice president; and F. W. Stanhope, secretary and treasurer.

"Little Miss Missionary"

Margarita Fischer has recovered from a dangerous illness which kept her in St. Joseph's hospital, San Diego, for more than two weeks, and has begun work on her new Mutual-Pollard photoplay, "Little Miss Missionary," in which she plays the role of "Prudence."

"Little Miss Missionary" is a comedy drama, laid in a Hopi Indian village. It was written by J. Edward Hurgerford, author of "The Devil's Assistant," Miss Fischer's last picture. It will be produced under the direction of Harry Pollard. An exact replica of the historic Indian village in Sante Fe, N. M., has been built at the Pollard studio for the new pictures. It will be the fourth of Miss Fischer's series of star productions for Mutual.

Nance O'Neil in "Hedda Gabler"

Miss Nance O'Neil, in Hedda Gabler," the new Powell-Mutual five reel presentation of Henrik Ibsen's famous drama, has a medium that affords her opportunity for display of her emotional dramatic genius. "Hedda Gaber" is released May 7.

Miss O'Neil makes Hedda Gabler the passionate, intriguing and degenerate daughter of a drunken, dueling father, live her life on the screen in a fascinating sequence of sensational episode.

Miss O'Neil's characterization gives the lie to those critics who have been insisting that Ibsen cannot be effectively picturized.

Director Frank Powell, who is at the head of the Frank Powell Producing Corporation and Miss O'Neil are completely in accord with regard to the dramatic value of the Ibsen drama for screen purposes.

The settings of the play are superb. Miss O'Neil herself has had a great deal to do with the selection of the accessories and her deep study of Ibsen during her association with the plays of the Norwegian genius, especially qualified her to dictate the details of stage settings.

Some of Miss O'Neil's friends of the press anticipate great things of her in the Ibsen production.

The Seattle Sun-Times, discussing the possibilities of "Hedda Gabler" under Miss O'Neil's handling, says:

Here should rest Nance O'Neil's screen opportunity, for the character will suit her special talents well and according to information at hand she has been surrounded with an excellent cast. Hedda Gabler was a spoiled and selfish woman but she possessed those characteristics which every woman recognizes and understands.

The character presents a tremendous study but it is a study that Nance O'Neil knows how to assimilate. The picture should be worth going far to see.

Films Reduce Ford Accidents

The Ford Motor Company has found motion pictures a valuable aid in reducing the proportion of serious accidents in the big factory. The practical relation is best shown by the accident record, which shows a gradual reduction in the amount of time lost through injuries.

Through the co-operation of the Ford safety and photographic departments, a new safety film has just been completed, in which familiar factory scenes are used to show many of the more common accidents and how they can be avoided. Since a large part of injuries are the result of personal carelessness, special emphasis is placed on the need for care on the part of each man, although the value of mechanical safeguards is also shown.

Each afternoon, several hundred workmen, selected from various departments, gather in the company's motion picture auditorium to witness the safety pictures.

Roosevelt Boards Directors

A novel and unique idea has been installed at the Vitagraph studios by the new production manager, Mr. Roosevelt, who takes the place of William P. S. Earle, now a director. Mr. Roosevelt has originated a large board which runs the entire length of his office and which tells at a glance just what director is working—the name of his production—the members of his cast including both stars and extra people—the studio or location where they are working that day—how many more days before the completion of the production and the next picture to be assigned.

This board has already proved a valuable asset to all concerned in the active production of Vitagraph pictures and a vote of thanks was given to Mr. Roosevelt who made a present of it to his company.

Charlie Isn't Suffering

Charlie Chaplin has a right to be known as "the million dollar comedian." His bank account entitles him to it, for it takes seven figures now to write the total. And he has enough.

He is through making money for money's sake. He feels that the million and some hundred thousand which he has accumulated as a motion picture actor is quite enough to insure his future and henceforth the making of money is to be of little consequence to him.

It was on his twenty-eighth birthday, April 10, 1917, that Chaplin admitted to a group of intimates at the Mutual-Lone Star Studio that his fortune was past the million mark.

Bessie Barriscale, who has been one of the most prominent stars on the Triangle program during the past two years, is in New York. It is said she is to work in special productions for the Paralta company.

Nance O'Neil in "Hedda Gabler," to appear on Mutual screens on May 7. This unusual play is a filmization of one of the noted Ibsen's best-known dramas.

EXHIBITORS OPPOSE TAX

Brooklyn Association Sends Committee to Washington in Order to Lobby Against Proposed Measure. Severe Blow at Summer Showings

A resolution to fight the proposed Federal tax on films was passed at a meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn, held at the Triangle Theater on April 23.

It was not from any wish on the part of the film men to dodge their plain duty in a national crisis that the resolution was passed, declared William Brandt, president of the organization, but merely a move to assure the preservation of the exhibitor's business. Upon a motion to vote it was decided that a committee of six be sent to Washington, to lay the matter before the Joint Committee on Taxation.

It is the claim of the exhibitors that a ten per cent tax will force them to close their houses, thereby causing hardship, not only in their own ranks, but among the distributors and the manufacturers as well. Mr. Brandt says that the exhibitor who breaks even during the summer months, when the heat and the general exodus to the summer resorts cuts the patronage, is the lucky one. Many exhibitors are actually content to stand a small loss during the summer months rather than lose prestige by closing their theaters during the hot weather. If a neighborhood manager has weekly expenses amounting to $500 and he takes in $450 during the summer weeks, he considers himself repaid by maintaining his neighborhood patronage until the cool weather approaches. Under the probable Federal tax, however, the exhibitor must pay the Government ten per cent, or say $45 out of his gross income, which in itself amounts to a loss of $50. In other words he would need to pay $45 for the privilege of losing $50.

The Brooklyn committee was instructed to make a proposition to Congress offering on the part of the exhibitors to pay as much as 25 per cent of their profits toward the war budget, if the clause taxing their losses is stricken out. The committee consists of William Brandt, John Manheimer, Louis Levine, Rudolph Sanders, Otto Lederer and Benjamin Title.

Argus to Make Short Subjects

The Argus Laboratories, opened six months ago by Horace D. Ashton, who started the Paramount Pictographs, has been reorganized and incorporated in New York State.

Mr. Ashton now has associated with him two of the representative young men of New York finance. One of these, Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, Jr., of Philadelphia, is in the real estate business in New York and is also associated with his father-in-law, B. N. Duke. The other, W. Whitewright Watson, is vice-president of the Robert M. McMullen Advertising Company, and is associated with his father, Walter Watson, in other business interests.

The company has organized its forces and has commenced the production of short subjects, as well as a Screen Magazine, under the editorial direction of Wallace Thompson, formerly of Paramount Pictographs and lately of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

General Film to Double Service

BIG COMPANY FOCUSING UPON DESIRABLE SHORT SUBJECTS

PLANS are now well advanced at General Film for a vastly increased service. The public's liking for the better short length releases, such as those most successfully supplied by General Film is to be further satisfied with the addition of new matter equally as good.

The new subjects will have an especial leaning toward comedies, which will mean something to the exhibitor and to the public. For instance, the comedies will come in a series—each unit of the same type and released at regular periods—so that the public will be familiar with the series from the beginning. There is to be no lost prestige through flinging them into the market as isolated releases. A straight, continuous standard will be insisted upon through the whole series. In the same way dramas of a certain type will be grouped in series covering a long term, in order that they may become identified for their value and drawing power. Besides this there will be serials released with all the cumulative popularity insured that attaches to serials.

The success of the several groups already being released by General Film has been reflected in an insistent demand for more groups of similar attractiveness. These Broadway Star Features which are already meeting with such significant response include the O. Henry stories, those witching tales of America's most characteristic short story writer done into snappy, faithful, short length films, with the human appeal and inimitable atmosphere of the stories developed tenfold.

They include also the Black Cat stories, each an Essanay screen interpretation of some richly brilliant plot from the famous classics of The Black Cat publication, whose short stories have for years been noted for their ingenuity and remarkably clever twists.

The American Girl series of stories written especially for the film by that most vigorous of magazine stars, Fred R. Bochdoldt, is also another group that is gripping the picture-loving public. They are produced by Kalem.

Other groups are respectively those of the Selig two-reel dramas, the bi-weekly Selig Tribune news reel with its ever increasing topical interest, and a weekly comedy from the same studio.

To these in the way of new matter, most probably will be added groups such as these:

A weekly two-reel drama of consistent type throughout, inclining toward the ever acceptable detective and mystery plot.

A weekly clever, really mirth provoking and robust comedy, with lots of disturbance and laughs.

A weekly three or four reel drama release of appeal equal to standard feature subjects, with favorite players whose names will add to their drawing power.

A very attractive serial which has had a forerunner, whose prestige is an earnest of welcome and enthusiastic appreciation.

These are the main additions to General Film's list now under consideration. In a short time the selection will be ripe for definite announcement, when it is believed by the management of General Film that the subjects chosen will prove to be a surprise to progressive exhibitors even more agreeable than forecasted.

Goldwyn Branches in Eighteen Cities

MADGE KENNEDY, JANE COWL, MAXINE ELLIOTT AND MAE MARSH WORKING

Madge Kennedy, stage comedienne, to star in Goldwyn pictures.

THE Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, chartered at Albany N. Y., with a capital stock of $1,000,000 and through which medium the Goldwyn Pictures will be distributed to American exhibitors, will begin at once organizing and opening branches in eighteen important cities in the United States.

At this time the outlook is that the officers will be located in the following cities, thus affording distribution facilities in every important section of the country.

New York, Boston, Buffalo, Philadelphia, Washington for the East and Northeastern states.

Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati for the Central states.

Chicago, Detroit, Minneapolis, St. Louis and Denver for the Central West and Middle Northwest.

Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles for California, the Pacific Coast and the Northwestern territory.

Atlanta and Dallas for the Southern states.

While one or two changes or shifts might be made in certain territories, the likelihood is that these enumerated cities will be the focal points of distribution.

Goldwyn is already leasing offices in the various cities and is rapidly engaging men to constitute the managerial and selling forces in the territories. Aaron Jones of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, is the Chicago Goldwyn representative.

As in everything else it has done, Goldwyn is endeavoring to create a distinctive selling force in every part of the country. In addition to engaging many successful film men of great capacity and experience, Goldwyn will bring some new selling factors not heretofore identified with motion pictures into this new field.

Madge Kennedy and Jane Cowl Begin Work

Goldwyn Pictures, adhering to its announced promise of twelve completed productions in advance of its first release in September, has begun work on its fifth and sixth pictures. A seventh production will be started soon.

The two new stars who will enter the studio for the first time are Madge Kennedy and Jane Cowl. Miss Kennedy has received her script and is now busy with the dressmakers and costumers. Meanwhile, this famous comedienne is spending all of her remaining spare time in Goldwyn's Fort Lee plant where, because of her friendship with Mae Marsh, she is able to learn many details of photodramatic acting. She will not, however, enter the studio as a novice in any sense.

The story for Miss Kennedy's first picture is the work of Margaret Mayo, and is one of that versatile author's most famous plays, which made a fortune on the legitimate stage.

Completing her picture at the end of the week, Mae Marsh will, three days later, begin work in her third Goldwyn production which will also be a photographic presentation of another of Margaret Mayo's celebrated plays.

Jane Cowl's first play for Goldwyn has been selected and will be under the direction of Arthur Hopkins, who has, by way of introduction to the picture industry, just made as his first picture, with Maxine Elliott as his star, one of the most notable productions that has ever been done in films.

As in its previous pictures, Goldwyn will introduce into the supporting casts around these three stars a number of players who are new to screen audiences but very well known on the dramatic stage. This is done by Goldwyn with the idea of absolutely differentiating each of its pictures from preceding productions and to keep the Goldwyn public from expecting the stock company idea in Goldwyn productions.

At the present rate of speed in production, with three companies working at the same time and with Mary Garden and another star, still to be announced, at work a month later, it is quite likely that Goldwyn will greatly exceed its initial promise of twelve finished pictures before September 1.

These ladies are all to star with Goldwyn and they will all be featured as Jane Cowl.

Bobby Harron and Mae Marsh in their last-made Goldwyn feature.

Work in the big Fort Lee Studio has at last been reduced to an exact operating schedule, and the Goldwyn system of studio and production management is so thoroughly instilled into its staff, that future pictures will undoubtedly be made with even greater rapidity.

Porter Emerson Browne on Advisory Board

Porter Emerson Browne, novelist, playwright and creator of the now famed vampire type of actress, has accepted Goldwyn's invitation to become a member of the Goldwyn advisory board which shapes all of that organization's productions.

Mr. Browne, as was recently announced, is under an exclusive contract with Goldwyn for a period of three years for all scenarios he may produce. As the author of "A Fool There Was," a dramatization of Kipling's famous vampire poem, Mr. Browne started the vogue of that highly, style of picture and at once scores of imitators, since no firm of motion picture producers felt comfortable without one or more vampires at work on its "lot."

Goldwyn is in receipt of Mr. Browne's first manuscript, which turns out to be a story of most unusual quality. It will be allotted to one of the Goldwyn stars and produced early in the summer.

Maxine Elliott's First Picture

Detroit's vast industrial resources form one of the important backgrounds for Maxine Elliott's first Goldwyn picture, in which this internationally famed beauty will make her debut on the screen.

Goldwyn has not announced as yet the title of the picture, which is the work of Roi Cooper Megrue, the noted dramatist, but it is known that in the story Miss Elliott is the wife of an important Detroit financier, and to lend color and accuracy to the picture many of the scenes are laid in localities and settings that will be familiar to the people of Michigan's remarkable city.

Few young girls entering pictures have ever possessed the beauty that Miss Elliott reveals on the screen. At no time in her entire career has she ever seemed quite so lovely as she now appears as a heroine of the cinema.

Arthur Hopkins, Hugo Ballin and their notable aides at the Goldwyn studios have given Miss Elliott a setting that has all of the distinction and refinement of Fifth Avenue's or Leicester Square's most beautiful homes, and the photography ranks with the most perfect work ever achieved before in animated pictures.

The statement can be made with authority that Miss Elliott's first picture is a technical advance in film-making that carries the art of screencraft several years ahead of anything that has been done in the world of the cinema.

Why Mae Marsh Is Popular

Just why is Mae Marsh, Goldwyn's young star, such a tremendously popular favorite of the world's screen audiences? Lots of people say: "Oh, Mae Marsh is so lovely, so delicate, so sweet."

And a lot more, taking the opposite view, say: "I just love Mae Marsh. I don't think she is beautiful. I don't know what it is about her that I like so much—but she is wonderful."

But there is a very good way of finding the secret of her popularity and that way is through the medium of the things her admirers write to her.

A dignified United States Senator from a western state writes:

> My daughter first persuaded me to see one of your pictures. Now I believe I have seen all of your pictures for two years. Your ability is remarkable. Pictures like yours will exert a good influence wherever they are seen.

A girl with a French name working in a box office in North Yakima, Washington, writes:

> You will have to please excuse my pencil writing. I am in the box office (selling movie tickets) and I have no ink. I cannot applaud you on the screen (you would not hear if I did), but I take this means of applauding you personally. I hope now that you are with Goldwyn we will see you oftener. Please, may I have one of your pictures?

A little Scotch girl in Halifax, N. S., tells in her letter how she persuaded her principal to permit an entire school to go into town to see Mae Marsh in "The Birth of a Nation." And she concludes by saying, "this was a special favor as they do not let us go into town often."

A boy in Toledo brings the gratifying information that he has obtanied two hundred signatures among his playmates on a petition to a Toledo theater manager to play Mae Marsh's pictures.

The amazing thing about the correspondence that reaches a popular motion picture star like Mae Marsh is that almost all admirers, especially the younger ones, give the names of owners of theaters and state that they have written or spoken to the managers to request them to play future Mae Marsh pictures. Such letters arriving in a single mail are from Pendleton, Oregon, famous for its "round up"; from a girl in Portsmouth, Virginia; from Fredericktown, Mo.; from Martha Spangler of Mesa, Ariz.; from Fall River, Mass.; Sabetha, Kans.; and from the senior partner of a Dallas, Texas., law firm.

Triangle Busy at Yonkers

The Triangle studio at Yonkers, fully equipped with every modern facility for making motion pictures, is now running at full capacity. Two companies, under Directors Arthur Rosson and Albert Parker and superivised by Allan Dwan, keep the place like a beehive.

ADOPT OPEN BOOKINGS

Famous Players-Lasky Formally Acquire Artcraft—Geraldine Farrar and Elsie Ferguson Features Coming with Pickford's and Fairbank's

The Paramount Pictures Corporation will adopt the open booking system of distribution. This has been announced by Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Lasky Corporation, which has acquired the Artcraft Pictures Corporation. The Artcraft pictures include photoplay productions of Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and George M. Cohan, and will be further strengthened by the addition of the Elsie Ferguson productions, the personally directed D. W. Griffith productions and pictures produced by Cecil B. De Mille.

"Commencing in August," said Mr. Zukor, "Paramount and Artcraft will co-operate to the best advantage of the exhibitor in booking arrangements. The release dates of the attractions obtainable through Artcraft will be adjusted so as not to conflict with the Paramount releases."

The stars obtainable from the Paramount organization, Zukor said, are Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Mme. Petrova, Marie Doro, Billie Burke, Fannie Ward, Margaret Illington, Mae Murray, Hayakawa, Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, Vivian Martin, George Beban, Wallace Reid, Kathlyn Williams, Ann Pennington and others.

The producing department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is under the direction of Jesse L. Lasky. The two eastern studios are under the direction of Messrs. Hugh Ford and A. A. Kaufman and the western studios under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille and M. E. Hoffman.

Bonavita in "Woman and Beast"

Graphic Features, producers of "The Woman and the Beast," have just disclosed that Captain Jack Bonavita, the famous animal trainer slain recently by one of his own sea lions, appeared in this film production.

"We did not feature the fact in our advertising, on the posters, or in the film," says the Graphic, "because we did not want it to appear that we used a tragedy for advertising effect. But although you will find no trace of it in film or advertising, it is a fact that Bonavita appeared in our film, doubling in the scene of the battle between man and beast, for Alphonse Ethier."

Graphic Features explain their advertising of Marie Shotwell as "star of state right stars" by the fact that the actress' last three starring engagements have been in pictures that have all been state right successes. They are "The Witching Hour," "Enlighten Thy Daughter" and "The Warfare of the Flesh," a fact that has impressed the state right buyers.

FARRAR RETURNS TO SCREEN

Artcraft to Handle New Productions Under Direction of Cecil B. De Mille. Star Leaves for Lasky Studios.

With the closing of New York's opera season, Geraldine Farrar returns to motion pictures and will again appear before the camera under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille, who staged "Joan the Woman."

As outlined in the recent announcement signed by Adolph Zukor, Walter E. Greene and Hiram Abrams effecting the new Famous Players-Lasky, Artcraft and Paramount combination, Miss Farrar's future productions will be released by the Artcraft Pictures Corporation. The Farrar-De Mille subjects will be staged at the Lasky-Hollywood studios where Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks are at present appearing before the camera in forthcoming Artcraft releases.

As a result of her sensational success in "Joan the Woman," Miss Farrar has added thousands of admirers to her large following among patrons of the photoplay. This fact in addition to her wonderful popularity as a star of the opera has made her one of the greatest international favorites of the theater. It is understood that her newest screen vehicle will offer the cinema world one of its greatest surprises when it is announced.

In speaking of the new arrangement effecting the exploitation of Farrar-De Mille productions by Artcraft, Walter E. Greene, president of that company, said: "When Artcraft first announced its policies of 'the biggest and the best in motion pictures' it meant just that. The acquisition of the Geraldine Farrar productions staged under the personal direction of that master of the screen-craft, Cecil B. De Mille, represents the further carrying out of our promise."

Buyers of "The Deemster"

The list of state rights buyers who are interested in "The Deemster" and who have called at the offices of the Arrow Film Corporation in the Times Building during the past few days includes nearly every prominent operator in that branch of the industry.

Principals who now control "The Deemster" for various states include, Lewis J. Selznick, Louis B. Mayer, Stanley V. Mastbaum and Harry Schwalbe, F. E. Backer, B. Amsterdam, Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia. Several other important deals are pending and it is reported that other valuable blocks of territory on "The Deemster" will be snapped ere long.

"Darkest Russia," to be released immediately by the World-Pictures Brady-Made, is just in time to meet the desires of a vast number of persons in America who fled the Czar's dominion to escape conditions which led to the present revolution. This play, of which Alice Brady is the star, illustrates many of the cruelties and oppressions of autocratic government and carries a love story of unusual fervor and interest.

There is little need of telling you that these Vitagraph stars are Alice Joyce, Harry Morey and Anita Stewart.

Vitagraph Sweeps Towns

Without any specially concerted action, Greater Vitagraph, solely through the merit of its product has succeeded in placing its releases in eight out of nine theaters in a town of 83,000 people. The city whose inhabitants will derive a great deal of their entertainment from Blue Ribbon plays is the thriving place of Waterbury, Connecticut. Credit for this unusual feat must be given to Paul Hayes, salesman for Greater Vitagraph's New York exchange. The theaters in Waterbury which will now use Blue Ribbon productions, are Alhambra, Bijou, Carroll, Colonial, Poli's Garden, Princess, Scenic and Poli's Strand. Another city which boasts of an abundance of Greater Vitagraph plays, is Fort Wayne, Indiana. All the prominent theaters which include the Jefferson, Knitters, Transfer, Edson, Fairfield, Lyric, Hippodrome, Creighton, etc., use the Blue Ribbon Service and are experiencing unusually bright business conditions.

Mayfair Corporation Formed

Miss Peggy Hyland is the star of the Mayfair Film Corporation which has just entered the field of independent manufacturers. The purpose of the new corporation is to present Miss Hyland in roles especially suited to her talent.

Miss Hyland was formerly a star upon the English speaking stage. She has become very popular in America in the pictures. The title of her first Mayfair production has not yet been announced. Charles J. Brabin, who has directed Miss Hyland in her most recent production, "The Sixteenth Wife," which will soon have its premier showing at the Rialto Theater in New York, will be associated with Miss Hyland as her director.

M. A. Schlesinger, the president of the Mayfair Film Corporation, has had picture and theatrical interests in England and South America for many years. He is the American representative of the International Theatrical Agency of England and of the African Theaters Trust. Temporarily the offices of the Mayfair Film Corporation will be located at number 10 Wall street, New York City. The company will soon locate in the Times Square section.

A Widow's Wiles

The latest Triangle play, "Wild Winship's Widow," by John Lynch, in which Thomas H. Ince will present Dorothy Dalton as star, is a comedy of manners and of good clothes. Its characters are all society people. The story is laid in a fashionable Southern resort where a few old Virginia mansions in the background lend dignity and tone to the doings of the great hotel.

Miss Dalton's part is that of a young widow, who has placed the memory of an unworthy spouse upon a pedestal, made an idol of it and extracted an immense amount of enjoyment out of her misery. But she discovers her mistake and becomes almost reckless in her attempts to prove that she is still young and attractive enough to get real zest out of life and to win the admiration of the masculine sex. The result is that she gets more devotion than she really desires and must resort to certain very feminine wiles in order to evade the demands of her suitors.

Even in mourning she is attractive. When she decides to really live again and assumes gay plumage, she is sufficiently attractive to convert the most firmly established recluse.

Ray Plays Millionaire Hobo

Charles Ray soon will be presented on the Triangle program by Thomas H. Ince, in "The Millionaire Vagrant," a drama by J. G. Hawks. This is a story of the adventures encountered by a young millionaire, a series of quick-action situations which carry the plot to an unexpected climax.

Ray, as the result of a wager, pledges himself to live, for a stated time, among the poor of a great city. Here he meets a strange assortment of people in a cheap New York boarding house. During a five weeks' trial, Ray passes from the well-dressed youth to the careworn, half-shaven hobo with his inherent manliness intact.

Molly Malone is being featured at Universal City in a five-reel drama, "The Imposter."

CHICAGO UNIVERSAL EXPANDS

Extensive and Splendid New Quarters Taken by Universal and Bluebird, Under Managers Plough and Van Ronkle.

Twelve thousand square feet of space is now required to comfortably house the Chicago offices of the Universal Film Exchange and Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., at a rental said to be larger than paid by any other film exchange in the country. The entire fifteenth floor of the Consumers Buildings, 220 South State street, measuring 10,000 square feet, is used and part of the fourth floor, measuring 2,000 square feet. The new offices will be installed by May 7.

The manager of the Universal Film Exchange is C. Plough and of the Bluebird Photoplays, I. Van Ronkel. Both are well known men of wide experience.

The new exchange has been laid out with a view of giving extreme comfort to all visiting exhibitors and the employes will work under ideal conditions.

An exhibition room seating one hundred is one of the attractive features. The floor is carpeted and the walls are tastily decorated. Comfortable armchairs will be used in the "little theater." Two motor-driven projection machines, to give continuous pictures, have been installed. An operator will be on deck at all times to show the output of Universal as well as the Bluebird Photoplay. An organ has also been installed to accompany the pictures.

The shipping room is 24x36 feet in size, and gives ample working room for the handling of Bluebird and Universal customers. There are six vaults, with a capacity of 9,000 reels, where all films not in use can be safely stored.

The inspection room is spaciously arranged for thirty inspectors. This will insure reels in absolutely good condition to exhibitors.

The welfare of the employes is one of the attractions of this new exchange. In order to insure good service to exhibitors, employes must be in a fit condition. To add to the comfort of the employes, a shower bath has been installed, which will undoubtedly be a boon to them in the summer months.

Nothing has been left undone in the new quarters, which have been taken for a long lease, to insure an ideal home for the Bluebird and Universal Exchanges, and also convenience for all exhibitors dealing with them. Everything has been equipped in a most modern manner. Fireproof construction prevails throughout.

Visiting exhibitors will find the new exchange comfortable in every manner and even the services of stenographers for out-of-town exhibitors will be placed at their disposal.

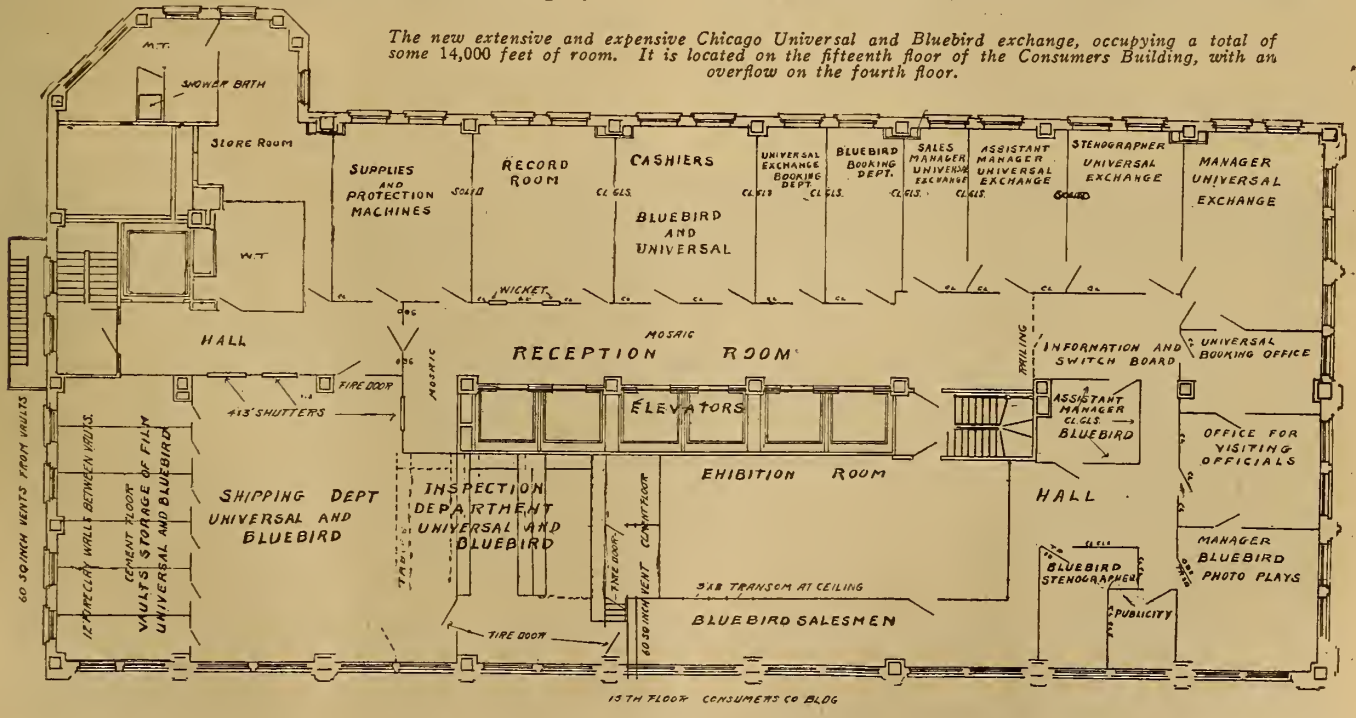
Birth Control Film

"Birth Control" is the title finally determined upon for the six-reel photoplay which will introduce Mrs. Margaret Sanger, the pioneer birth control crusader, as the principal character in a propaganda subject founded on the theme of her agitation. "Birth Control" has been passed by the National Board of Reviews and the delicate subject was handled with such deft touch and intelligence that the censors passed the picture without any eliminations.

Under the direction of the Message Photoplay Company, Inc., a B. S. Moss unit, negotiations are now open for exploiting this picture in a Broadway theater. The propaganda also calls for Mrs. Sanger appearing in person, along with the picture, in a lecture on the substance of her conviction and those of the Birth Control Society. After the Broadway engagement, Mrs. Sanger and "Birth Control" will make a tour of the country.

Fox Lauds Volunteers

The volunteer companies being recruited in the Fox studios at Fort Lee and at Los Angeles are rapidly reaching full strength. Men from the technical departments are signing up as well as the actors. More than two hundred and seventy-five have enrolled at Fort Lee and more than five hundred on the coast.



The new extensive and expensive Chicago Universal and Bluebird exchange, occupying a total of some 14,000 feet of room. It is located on the fifteenth floor of the Consumers Building, with an overflow on the fourth floor.

ELSIE FERGUSON IN ARTCRAFT

Walter E. Greene Discusses Plans for Photoplay Debut of Famous Stage Favorite—"Barbary Sheep," Her First Story.

In further accord with the recent Famous Players-Lasky, Artcraft affiliation announcement, the productions of Elsie Ferguson, the famous stage beauty, will be distributed by the Artcraft Pictures Corporation. This gives Artcraft the screen offerings of six of the most prominent motion picture and theatrical celebrities, namely D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Geraldine Farrar, George M. Cohan and Elsie Ferguson.

Elsie Ferguson, called America's foremost dramatic actress, now with Artcraft.

At the headquarters of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, Walter E. Greene, president, in discussing the plans for Miss Ferguson's forthcoming picture debut, said:

Miss Ferguson is now concluding a triumphant theatrical season in "Shirley Kaye," which is touring the country after scoring an immediate hit on Broadway. Promptly upon concluding her engagement with this play, she will commence activities on her initial photoplay, to be distributed by Artcraft. This production will be an adaptation from the well-known story, "Barbary Sheep," Robert Hitchen's greatest seller since "The Garden of Allah."

Every one familiar with "Barbery Sheep" and the art of Miss Ferguson will readily appreciate what an admirable vehicle it is for her. The book is now being prepared for screening and as commonly conceded, should prove a wonderful cinema subject. The Famous Players-Lasky studio in Fort Lee, one of the most modern plants in the industry, will be used for the production of Miss Ferguson's first Artcraft offering.

For several years many companies have been endeavoring to secure the motion picture services of Elsie Ferguson without success. That this extremely popular stage beauty has at last answered the call of the screen must indeed be gratifying to every patron of the motion picture theater. The name of Elsie Ferguson means the last word in the art of the drama, and that this wonderful success will more than be duplicated on the screen is the confident belief of those who are in a position to judge.

Rotary Club Endorses Film

Resolved by the Rotary Club of Chicago, assembled after witnessing the moving picture film "Womanhood, the Glory of the National" at the Ziegfeld Theater, Chicago, desire to extend to the management their unqualified endorsement of this film as one of the best of its kind for the purpose of stimulating enlistments in the various Rotary Clubs of the world to recommend seeing this wonderful picture.

We desire to extend to the Greater Vitagraph Company our thanks for the great work they have done for the good of the country in bringing out this great demonstration of the necessity of preparedness.

This is an exact copy of the resolution adopted by the Rotary Club of Chicago, on April 24, after the entire club had witnessed Greater Vitagraph's big preparedness picture.

Similar action is being taken by organizations throughout the country. Ever since "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," was released Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, who supervised the production of the popular picture, has been deluged with telegrams complimenting him upon his work.

World Program Rigid

"Rigid adherence to the program is the very first principle of World-Pictures, Brady-Made," said Director General William A. Brady to a reporter. In fact, we go further than that," he continued, "for we not alone protect the integrity of our output but make additions to it whenever the opportunity arises to do so.

This latter assertion refers to the series of French photoplays we have been enabled to place within the reach of our exhibitors—a service, the value of which is obviously appreciated, since the applications are pouring in at a rate that represents very close upon one hundred per cent of the managers using World Pictures.

When the present management of our corporation took hold, it found not alone a large number of things to do, but quite a number to undo. There was a very general condition of unrest and lack of confidence among exhibitors, and the readjustment of this situation was a task of considerably greater difficulty than improving the quality of our plays.

This is how it happened that when we set out upon our campaign for the inviolable program, exhibitors smiled more or less grimly and awaited the time when we should produce a picture so good as to be worth exploiting all by itself. They are no longer waiting, for we have gone far beyond the letter of our undertaking.

The additions of "Mothers of France," "Atonement," "A Naked Soul," "The Golden Lotus" and "When True Love Dawns" to the list of best sellers within the reach of our exhibitors has put the cap-stone upon our structure of confidence, and we find that our word is accepted at its face value —which is an extremely gratifying condition pointing the way to further efforts along the same lines.

As our plan of interchange with Louis Mercanton, the famous French director, works out between now and the reawakening of European motion picture activities after the war, we shall have a further number of pleasant and profitable surprises for exhibitors—all of these providing further support to our faith in the permanency of the program as a survival of the fittest.

Exhibitor Praises Mutual

Shelton McClain, manager of the Liberty Theater, Tonopah, Nevada, has the following good words for Mutual:

I started out with my theater under difficulties and had strong competition to overcome but as soon as we added Mutual films to our service I found that we took a jump and began to get the business away from the other man. We recently showed Helen Holmes and turned the people away at both showings.

I want to thank Mutual for the way you have treated us. You are one in a hundred to keep your word with us as you have done and we certainly appreciate it and have only one word for Mutual—"the best."

"Periwinkle" Next Minter Play

Mary Miles Minter has started work on her next production, "Periwinkle," which is an adptation of the story by William Farquhar Payson. In this feature the little star appears most of the time dressed in trousers, rubber-boots, oilskin coat and sou'wester. She is a little waif rescued from a shipwreck and reared by a beach comber and his daughter, and given the name of "Periwinkle."

George Fisher plays opposite Miss Minter, and others in the cast include Arthur Howard, Clarence Burton, Alan Forrest, Harvey Clark, George Periolat and Ann Schaefer.

Universal Director Henry McRae has commenced the filming of a two-reel drama, "The Holdup Man."

"WITHIN THE LAW"

Vitagraph Star Interprets Part of Mary Turner in Famous Play Which Is Now Presented on the Screen

Greater Vitagraph's screen version of "Within the Law," Bayard Veiller's unapproachable stage success, opened at the Broadway Theater, New York, Sunday night, April 29, before one of the most critical audiences ever assembled to witness the premier of a motion picture feature.

Interest of producers has been keenly aroused by the production of "Within the Law" and it has been the subject of much comment throughout the trade. This was caused by the fact that other stage successes have not met with a spontaneous reception on the part of motion picture patrons.

In weighing "Within the Law" producers were unanimously of the opinion that the cause for the failure of other stage successes was that they did not readily adapt themselves to the silent stage. This, all agree, is not the case of the Greater Vitagraph production. Veiller's play, they declare, loses nothing of its dramatic intensity in the screening and in many parts is much more dramatic and appealing than was the stage version.

As a legitimate production "Within the Law" was witnessed by approximately four million persons in the United States and Canada. Motion picture men point out that with the screen prices for "Within the Law" being probably limited to a maximum of fifty cents that it is reasonable to suppose that not less than twenty million picture patrons will clamor to see the picture. Only the actual release of the picture for general booking by Greater Vitagraph will prove the correctness of these assertions.

Some of the most noted actresses of the speaking stage have interpreted the role of Mary Turner, "the most wonderful shop girl in the world" in "Within the Law," and their work is being compared with that of Alice Joyce, the Greater Vitagraph star, who is the last of the Mary Turners. It is conceded that the work of Alice Joyce is remarkable. Equal praise is given to Harry Morey for his portrayal of the character of Joe Garson. Adele de Garde, as Aggie Lynch, is acknowledged to be the "very best little woman parasite" the screen has produced.

"The Lone Wolf"

The term "all star cast" has been so violently misused in photoplay and stage affairs, that Herbert Brenon declines to employ it in connection with his production of "The Lone Wolf" for Selznick-Pictures, and simply announces the following list of players: Bert Lytell, Hazel Dawn, Edward Abeles, Alfred Hickman, William E Shay, Stephen Grattan, Joseph Chailles, Ben Graham, William Riley Hatch, Robert Fisher, Florence Ashbrooke, Juliet Brenon, Cornish Beck.

In casting "The Lone Wolf" it was evident that all of the numerous principal roles demanded seasoned players, and Mr. Brenon decided that he would star no member of the company, but spare no expense in obtaining the best talent available for all the parts.

Hank Insures His Eyes

Hany Mann, noted Foxfilm comedian, has insured his eyes for $50,000, the P. A. Swears.

The Mid-West Accident and Indemnity Company, through its Los Angeles office, has just issued a policy for that amount to the noted funny man of William Fox comedies, to indemnify him in case of any injury happening to the orbs which furnish so large a part of Mr. Mann's humor.

"She picks up a copy of Motography and reads it till quitting time." Gladys Leslie, Thanhouser star, is telling it to Agnes Johnston, scenario builder.

Scenario Writer Exposed

The accompanying still shows the Thanhouser "smile girl," Gladys Leslie, and the young lady who writes the humorous stories for her, Agnes C. Johnston, of the Thanhouser scenario staff. It was of Miss Leslie that the New York Herald's critic wrote: "She possesses, what they call in motion pictures, a million dollar smile."

At the time the photograph was taken, Miss Johnston, who had just finished the script of "An Amateur Orphan" for Miss Leslie, was saying to the latter:

"How I envy you. Here I have been racking my brains for days and days for sunshiny ideas. All you have to do is act them."

Whereupon Miss Leslie smilingly retorts:

"Yes, and now I go under the hot arcs and try to smile. Despite the summer weather, you've written the thing for indoor production. Meaning I must stick to the arcs and jump about with joy. And up-stairs in her shady room Agnes Johnston closes her typewriter desk, says, 'It is too much like summer to write today,' and picks up a handy copy of Motography, which she reads until quitting time."

On Universal Program

Among the Universal releases for the week of May 7, is the first of the Butterfly Pictures, "Eternal Love," a five part drama, with Douglas Gerrard and Ruth Clifford as the principals.

"Eternal Love" is a charming and interesting story of the love of a successful artist for a peasant girl. The scenes are laid in a small fishing village in Brittany and in the gay art circles of Paris.

The feature for Tuesday, May 8, is the Gold Seal three part drama, "The Grip of Love," from the original story by Willard Mack. The drama is tense with action, and interwoven in the plot is a charming romance of a school teacher in the mountains of Tennessee, and a young man from the city, who goes to the woods to seek relaxation from the business world.

The L-Ko comedy, "Tom's Tramping Troupe," a burlesque of an Uncle Tom company, will be released May 9. The Universal Animated Weekly is the other release of this date.

"Swearing Off," a Victor comedy, featuring Eileen Sedgwick, and the Imp drama, "Flames of Treachery," with Lois Wilson and Lee Hill, are releases for May 10.

An exceptional two-part Imp drama, entitled "The Girl in the Garret," with Jack Nelson and Molly Malone, is the chief offering Friday, May 11, as well as Universal Screen Magazine and the Victor comedy, "Signs of Trouble," featuring Jenny Nelson and Paul Panzer.

"One Wild Night," a Western society drama, which ranks as easily the best picture which has ever been released under the Bison brand, will appear Saturday. William Franey and Gale Henry drive away the blues in "The Man With a Package," and Leah Baird gives a splendid performance in "The Doctor's Deception."

For Sunday, May 13, the Big U two-part war drama, "Captain Marjorie's Adventure," and the Powers one-reel "Such Is Life in Algeria," will be presented.

During the week the ninth episode of the great mystery serial, "The Voice on the Wire," with Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, will be released.

Jose Directs Norma Talmadge

The millions of readers of "Poppy," Cynthia Stockley's famous novel of the love-starved South African girl, are keenly anticipating the thrill of meeting face to face via the motion picture screen the heroine of that widely discussed romance, when Norma Talmadge is presented in a Selznick-Picture version of the story.

"Poppy" was made under the expert direction of Edward Jose and is in eight reels. Mr. Jose has the further distinction of having written the scenario.

If the United States should mobilize a few troupes of this kind over from the Mack Sennett-Triangle studios and have them do their daily mermaiding in Germany's ocean, there would be no more trouble in finding where the U-boats are at. This pyramid of pulchritude is only a portion of the beauty regiment which Mack has enlisted at Keystone.

FROM MUTUAL STUDIOS

Ibsen Play Heads Strong Schedule for May 7—First of New Comedies Appears—Snappy Serial Chapters.

Picturization of Henrik Ibsen's drama, "Hedda Gabler," with Nance O'Neil playing the title role, is the Mutual schedule for May 7. This combination of great author and famous actress will make a splendid drawing card if properly advertised. The role of "Hedda Gabler" is one of the best known of Miss O'Neil's characterizations on the speaking stage and she has played the part more than seven hundred times. Get a list of all the members of the various literary clubs of the town and send them a special invitation to see the film. Send a special notice to the teachers and high school pupils. It may be that you will be able to get the schools to co-operate with you on this picture.

William Russell will also appear on the same day in "The Frame-Up." In this picture the star appears as a chauffeur. The name of William Russell will be enough to bring his host of admirers to the theater. Mention the fact, also, that this is a little lighter and contains more comedy than the plays in which Mr. Russell has been appearing recently.

Fifth Chapter of "The Railroad Raiders."

"A Woman's Wit" is the title of the fifth chapter of "The Railroad Raiders," the Mutual-Signal serial in which Helen Holmes furnishes most of the thrills, and which comes to the screen on May 7. In this chapter Helen Holmes, in an inspection car, chases two thieves on an engine, and most of the time has to drive the car crouched on the running board while dodging their bullets. An engine runs straight through a warehouse wrecking it completely. A good lobby display of stills from this chapter will have strong pulling power.

First La Salle Comedy

On May 7, also will be released the first of a new brand of comedies—the La Salle-Mutual. The first of these is entitled "The Prodigal Uncle," and features Carol Halloway. Make a special point of this two reeler, being the first of a new brand of comedies, as the people are always anxious to see what the new fun-makers have to offer in the way of good laughs.

Three Short Comedies.

The Cub Comedy contribution on May 10 is "Jerry's Picnic," featuring George Ovey.

"A Vanquished Flirt" is the title of the Vogue Comedy ready May 12. Larry Bowes, Rena Rogers, Jessie Perry, Harry Huckins, Owen Evans and John Oaker appear in this mirth provoker, the scenes of which are laid in a beauty parlor.

Universal War Films

The following Universal films are just now particularly timely:

"Liberty"—the Universal's 20-week Preparedness Serial. Featuring Marie Walcamp, Eddie Polo, Jack Holt, G. Raymond Nye. Choose everything that happened along the border of Mexico.

"Uncle Sam at Work"—eleven huge preparedness episodes showing the doings of the United States Army and Navy, industrial achievements based on Frederick J. Haskins' book, "The American Government."

"The War Waif"—two-reel special, produced by Allen Hollubar, featuring Allen Hollubar, Zoe Rae and Claire McDowell.

"The White Feather Volunteer"—two-reel war drama based on the slacker difficulties of English enlistment. Featuring Ruppert Julian and Elsie Jane Wilson. Produced by Ruppert Julian.

"Court Martialed"—a three-reel production, featuring Allen Hollubar, Frances Nelson, Horbert Henley and William Welsh.

"If My Country Should Call"—with Dorothy Phillips, supported by Lon Chaney, Viola Smith, Frank Whitson and Jack Nelson. This patriotic drama is from the story by Virginia Turhune Van de Water, is in five reels, and was directed by Joseph DeGrasse.

Marie Walcamp and Jacques Jaccard have returned to the Universal and are planning the greatest serial of their career. They are going to make a sequel to this popular patriotic serial "Liberty," which was released sometime ago.

C. L. Worthington Dead

Charles L. Worthington, district manager for the Fox Film Corporation, and known personally to thousands of exhibitors throughout the United States, died suddenly last week of apoplexy.

Mr. Worthington had been with William Fox since the organization of the Box Office Attraction Company, which developed later into the Fox Film Corporation. Soon after the latter's inception he was made district manager for the Middle West. Then he was transferred to the eastern and southern territory in a similar capacity, with headquarters in Philadelphia and New Orleans. This position he held up to the time of his death.

New Universal News Weekly

Universal Current Events is a new release of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, commencing May 12. For the present the news included will be of an intensely patriotic nature and its footage has been offered to the United States government for any kind of service which the Universal can render in this way to the nation.

It is planned in the Universal Current Events to run the very latest of news happenings. This will be in addition to the Universal Animated Weekly and will have no connection with it.

That "The Vicar of Wakefield" with Frederick Warde in the title role is enjoying a most prosperous and distinctive career is vouched for by the reception it has been receiving since its initial showing in New York City at the Fifth avenue home of Mr. and Mrs. Marcus M. Marks under the auspices of the Photoplay League.

This audience has the jump on the 15,000,000 or so other daily film fans in the country. It is seeing a picture before it is made. The scene is on one of Universal stages and Director Fred Kelsey, at the right, is piloting Harry Carey, who wears the checked shirt.

FAIRBANKS IN ARIZONA

Taking Exteriors for "A Regular Guy," Next Fairbanks-Artcraft Release. Will Do Interiors at Lasky Studios.

Douglas Fairbanks and various members of the cast in "A Regular Guy," the forthcoming Fairbanks-Artcraft release, left Los Angeles last week to film exteriors in Arizona. Upon their return the interiors for the new picture will be staged at the Lasky studio, where Mary Pickford is also appearing before the camera for Artcraft, at present.

Arrangements have just been completed so that the Fairbanks organization can begin work at the studio immediately upon its return to Hollywood. Through the courtesy of Cecil B. De Mille, the director general of the Lasky studio, Wilfred Buckland, the distinguished art director, will co-operate with Director John Emerson in the supervision of the settings for the Fairbanks picture.

The story of the second Douglas Fairbanks offering through Artcraft, opens in New York and closes in the wild and woolly west. According to the smiling "Doug," the theme of "A Regular Guy" is based on the ambition of every young American boy, which immediately stimulates great curiosity. The Fairbanks plays are known for their brilliant angles of life. While satirical, a great deal of attention is given to the development of human situations. Director Emerson and Anita Loos, the petite Fairbanks scenarioist, are now putting the finishing touches to the final script of "A Regular Guy," which, judging from advance reports, will add greatly to "Doug's" present fame.

"Little Mary" Entertains "Doug."

Soon after the arrival of Douglas Fairbanks in California, Mary Pickford made arrangements for a novel party in his honor. The affair was named a "Western Party" by Mary, and many notables were invited with the request that they wear the attire of the wild and woolly.

Miss Pickford's pretty bungalow at Hollywood was appropriately decorated and music was supplied by the Douglas Fairbanks Cowboy band which included Ed. Burns, Tom Wilson, Monte Blue, Curly Baldwin, "Red" Stevens and "Panhandle" Williams.

Among the film celebrities present were Charlie Chaplin, William S. Hart, Jack Pickford, Cecil B. De Mille, Mrs. Pickford, Eileen Percy, Anita Loos, John Emerson. "Doug" entertained with several attractive roping stunts and his recitation, "The Gol Darn Wheel," according to Bennie Zeidman, went over with a loud bang. Both Mr. Fairbanks and Miss Pickford are at present appearing before the camera in Artcraft productions, at the Lasky studios, Hollywood.

Plays to 1782 Admissions

The home office of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. is in receipt of a letter from J. F. Bittman, proprietor of the Strand Theater, Freeport, Illinois, who recently ran "The Law Decides" for three days. In reporting on this showing Mr. Dittman writes:

It may interest you to know that our house record for a year and a half has stood at 1,758 admissions, this having been for "Damaged Goods." Last Monday on the third showing of "The Law Decides" we played to 1,782 people.

Two of the quaint and entrancing scenes from Mary Pickford's newest play, made in California, "A Romance of the Redwoods." Artcraft will release this sure-fire subject very soon.

The Man Inside the Booth

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

"Makes an Awful Noise"

I am running a Power's 6A machine and have motor attached. Have been using the machine for two years and it is as good as new but I am having trouble with the motor. When it is running free, that is, without the disc touching the friction wheel, it is quiet but when I throw the disc against the frction wheel it makes an awful noise that can be heard all over the house. Can you tell me what is wrong with it? I have tried to adjust it and I cannot do anything with it. Please give me an answer as soon as possible— J. J. D., Christman, Illinois.

From the way that you have explained your trouble. I should say that the trouble lies in friction wheel. Whenever the friction wheel develops flat spots, through wearing more in one place than another, then you will have trouble with it. The Power's Company has a small handbook that it supplies to the operators and you should have one in your booth at all times. This book explains in detail the working parts of the whole machine. Below are the instructions on the friction drive of the motor.

The friction material R15 is leather. Should it at any time develop flat spots or become out of round or eccentric in form, it may be trued by placing the point of a new 10" or 12" coarse file on rod R39 (using the rod merely as a rest) and bearing lightly on the top of the friction with the motor running. In doing this, be very careful to hold the point of the file perfectly flat on the rod, since if you hold it at an angle you will get the face of the leather ground off at a slant it will then not fit the disc wheel squarely.

Caution: Never leave the controlling lever down when the projector is standing still; always pull the lever clear up so as to disengage friction wheel R15 from the driving disc R13. Failure to attend to this matter probably will result in flat spots on the friction material. In nine cases out of ten where flat spots develop it is caused through failure to heed this warning.

New friction material may be ordered from the Nicholas Power Company at any time. The old material may be removed by loosening the set screw in the hub R16, and in the set collar R21 and R24. Having done this, R25 may be pulled out to the right, thus releasing the friction wheel. You can then take out the old friction material by removing the screws in the face of R16. The process of reassembling is the reversal of the process of dis-assembling, but these parts run on high speed, therefore, be sure and set up all screws tight.

It is of course necessary that there be sufficient tension or friction between friction material R15 and driving disc R13 to pull the projection mechanism, but anything more than sufficient to accomplish this purpose will merely result in undue wear of the friction disc, friction material and unnecessary consumption of power in the motor. The tension or amount of friction between friction material R15 and friction disc R13 is regulated by the thumb screw R32.

Proceed as follows: Loosen lock nut R33 and loosen up on tension screw R32 until friction material R15 and disc R13 are out of contact. Now, start your motor running and having set the controlling lever down so that the friction driving wheel is pretty well in on the friction disc, slowly tighten up on the tension screw R32 until the projection mechanism attains full speed, and you are satisfied there is no slippage between the friction disc and the driving wheel.

Having done this, your tension will be just right, provided, of course, you have followed the instructions carefully, and have not set up screw R32 until sufficient to bring the projector up to full speed, this being done, of course, with the film in the machine, or in other words, under actual operating conditions. Having gotten the adjustment just right, don't forget to tighten up lock nut R33 tight, or else the adjustment is likely to work loose.

Exhibitors Employ Inexperienced Operators

Enclosed you will find some pieces of film cut from a reel of film that I have just used. Also please note indentations in all of the pieces. This runs the entire length of the reel and shows up very prominently on the screen. I hope that this may give another "clue" as to who is responsible for the trouble you are having along this line.— C. H., Anderson, Indiana.

In looking over the pieces of film referred to I find that they are indented, as you say, all alike and I am satisfied that the damage was done on a Simplex machine.

I do not believe that you will have any more trouble with your film for a while at least for I visited a theater that uses the film just before you get it and found both machines in very bad condition. It is not the fault of the two Simplex machines but the fault of the managers of the house. They have had both machines overhauled, and as I said before, I do not believe that you will have any more trouble with the film.

Managers will learn sooner or later that they cannot put an inexperienced boy in a booth with two machines to handle and get any kind of results. And while they may save a little money in salary they will spend what they save in another way, such as repairs on the machines, not counting what they lose in business, for the public has been educated to the point where they will not sit and look at poor projection when they can see good projection for the same money.

"Be a Regular Operator"

Below is a letter that was sent in to this department from an operator who is evidently peeved at some one, but he comes very near hitting the nail on the head in a number of cases, so you operators read it over and

"if the shoe fits you" then for goodness sake get a new shoe. Here it is:

All that you have to do to get a job is to just tell the boss what a fine bunch of tools that you have. Yes, you sure are a wonderful operator. When the boss has trouble with his auto all that he has to do is just bring the broken parts up in the booth. Sure, you'll fix it all right.

It does not make any difference about the mis-frames in the picture; the cashier will ring you after it runs out of frame for a few minutes. You have not time to take out the mis-frames; let the next operator do that.

Again I say, you are a most wonderful "operator"(?).

No, you do not show any tail pieces at the end of the reel or have a white screen. I should say not, you have a nice little ten cent punch in order that you may fill the last scene full of beautiful holes; sure, that looks much nicer than the end pieces, but of course you have not time to write out cues, you are too busy mixing up some paint, as you have to paint the poster frames after the show. But of course that is all right as the painters do not need the work; they do not have to live.

Again I repeat, you are a wonderful operator. You have not time to oil the machines every day so you give them enough on Monday to last all week. Then when the films and lens become soaked in oil, you write to the editor of the Projection Department and ask him why your picture is out of focus. But still you are too busy to clean up your machines or possibly you used up all the clean rags in the booth when you cleaned and oiled the house fans. There you are infringing again. Say pard cut it out.

Come on and be a regular operator and cut out the other stuff. If you are not interested in the betterment of projection then dig out and give someone else a chance who is. Bang! Did I hit you?—E. C. L.—"Somewhere in a Booth."

"Fan" Complains of Speeding

And right along with the above letter I received one from a "fan" complaining of the speed that operators run their machines. Here it is:

For some time past I have noticed a decided tendency on the part of managers of theaters to demand three and four shows a night, starting at seven p. m. and closing at eleven p. m. They try to run seven and eight-reel feature shows and three or four shows in that length of time, making it an impossibility for the operator to give anything like good projection or safety to the patrons of these houses.

It seems to be the order of the day to give quantity instead of quality.

Today, with the splendid features that are placed upon the market by the producers, one must come to the conclusion that the theater managers are willing to kill the goose that is laying the golden egg. With the keen competition, you, Mr. Manager, must awaken to the fact that the public is educated from the patron standpoint.

Paralta Plan Attracts Attention

The Paralta plan, in relation to which much has been said in the trade papers during the past three weeks, and for which Herman Fichtenberg, the well known New Orleans exhibitor, stands sponsor, is attracting great attention among exhibitors. One day during the past week Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, received 411 requests from exhibitors for full details of the Paralta plan of distribution.

Rose Tapley in Accident

Miss Rose Tapley, the Greater Vitagraph favorite who has been touring the country carrying the fight against any form of censorship into the most remote villages and hamlets, very nearly lost her life on April 17 when the metallic lace dress she was wearing came into contact with a live electric wire and the electricity played around her much the same as the incandescent globes bathe the statue of Liberty in flashing rays.

In describing her experience Miss Tapley said that she kept her presence of mind and held the train of her metallic gown, which had come into contact with the live wire, away from her. Other persons declare that she could not have let go if she had desired to do so but both she and the spectators agree that she smiled throughout the ordeal in which she might have lost her life.

Miss Tapley had just started on the stage preparatory to addressing the audience. She was attired in one of "Maison Camilles" exclusive patterns made entirely of metallic net and lace. As she passed back of the organ the train of her gown came into contact with the electric switch. There was a splutter and a flash. For a moment Miss Tapley appeared to be in flames. One of the house attendants had presence of mind enough to turn off the current. The flames died out and the only material damage was to a very expensive gown. And Miss Tapley's chief regret is that gowns cannot appear on an expense account.

New Brand of Comedies Ready

Having determined that Alice Howell, under the direction of J. G. Blystone, has established herself as a general favorite with exhibitors and their public through the merry medium of L-Ko Comedies, Julius Stern, president, and Mr. Blystone, have decided to recognize her talents and reward her energy by establishing her as star of a new series of comedies, separated entirely from L-Ko's.

Miss Howell will be further complimented by having a condensed version of her name used as the title of the series—Howl Comedies will have Miss Howell as their star.

"Howl Comedies" will be initiated with the immediate release of "Balloonatics," to be followed by "Automaniacs" and "Neptune's Naughty Daughter," all three subjects being ready for orders from exhibitors. Miss Howell has accomplished numberless feats of reckless daring in the various L-Ko's she has appeared in, but the "stunts" she performs and will continue to perform in "Howl" productions are declared to closely approach the limit of feminine agility.

Billie Burke Again

April 23 marks the beginning of Billie Burke's first Famous Players picture, an adaptation of Gelett Burgess' story, "The Mysterious Miss Terry" in accordance with arrangements concluded by Jesse L. Lasky just prior to his departure for the Pacific Coast. Though Mr. Burgess is well known as an author and a humorist, this is his first contribution to motion pictures, but his remarkable success in the field of letters points to a brilliant future for him as a photo-playwright.

In "The Mysterious Miss Terry," Miss Burke will play the role of Mavis Terry, a part offering many opportunities for her talents in comedy, and containing many charming sentimental episodes.

VAMPIRE DANCER DE LUXE IN FIRST OF SERIES OF FRENCH FILMS

A VAMPIRE drama, "Atonement," the first of the four French photoplays issued by the Brady-International Service, World Pictures, might be described as a vampire drama de luxe. All scenes are laid in luxurious surroundings and only one of the characters is in financial difficulty, which comes as the result of his own profligacy.

The heroine, a woman of extraordinary beauty, is an internationally famous dancer. She is persistently pursued by a wealthy middle-aged count who is totally without scruple, and rejects his advances because she is devotedly attached to the handsome young fellow who composes the music for her dances.

The dancer-heroine is played by Regina Badet, very widely known in Europe as "the vampire of France." The unscrupulous count is personated by Albert Singer.

The third member of the dancing troupe is a surly, drunken fellow who also loves Manuella, the star, but she pays no attention to him, and he goes on deeper and deeper into his slavery to alcohol and further and further into debt.

Splendid Night Photography

At one of the great private entertainments of the Riviera season (reproduced with really wonderful night photography), Manuella executes a remarkable moonlight dance upon the marble border of a great pool of water, and creates such a sensation that the count invites her and her troupe to give an exhibition to the guests who are to assemble at his own villa the following week.

Manuella accepts, and in the interval repeatedly rebuffs the count's efforts to tempt her away from the young musician by offering her magnificent jewels and every luxury. But the nobleman neither despairs nor loses his temper. He merely waits his chance.

Before the entertainment the count shows Manuella and her two assistants many objects of art and valuable curios. Among these is a selection of magnificent pearls which the count draws from their hiding place in a huge carved piece of furniture operated by a secret spring.

The pearls are examined and returned to their place, and later in the night the drunken member of Manuella's party, pressed by his creditors, returns and extracts two of the gems. The count catches him, and after forcing a written confession of the theft agrees to let the offender go if he will secrete the pearls in the overcoat pocket of the young fellow with whom Manuella is in love.

The police come, the lost property is found as indicated, and Manuella's lover is arrested. She believes he has actually stolen the pearls to give to her, and he imagines she has taken them for him—and he declares his own guilt to protect her.

When her lover is taken away, Manuella pleads with the count to save him, and the count names her acquiescence to his desires as the price she must pay. This she refuses, and for the following days and nights she is in an agony of grief.

Crisis in Delirium of Drunkard

Meanwhile the really guilty man has been indulging his appetite for liquor until he is on the verge of delirium, and when Manuella finds him in this state he re-enacts the scenes of the theft and confession and expires in the ensuing convulsion.

Manuella, now confronted by the necessity of securing written acknowledgment of his guilt, visits and pretends to regret her previous attitude. Thus beguiled he embraces the dancer and she extracts the document from his pocket.

There follows a struggle for possession of the paper, and the tiny pistol in Manuella's grasp is discharged, and the count is fatally wounded.

Doctors and police arrive, and the nobleman, realizing that he has lost, says to the police:

"Accuse no one. It was self-inflicted—an accident. The lady came here to request justice."

And so, a few hours later, the lovers are reunited at the very portals of the prison, both radiant with their newly assured happiness.
